The SPEAKER. That motion will be the first in order. The Clerk will read Rule 77.

The Clerk read as follows:

77. It shall also be the duty of the Committee on Appropriations, within thirty days after their appointment, at every session of Congress commencing on the first Monday of December, to report the general appropriation bills for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for consular and diplomatic expenses; for the Army; for the Navy; for the expenses of the Indian Department; for the payment of invalid and other pensions; for the support of the Military Academy; for fortifications; for the service of the Post-Office Department; and for mail transportation by ocean steamers; or, in failure thereof, the reasons of such failure. And said committee shall have leave to report said bills (for reference only) at any time. In all cases where appropriations cannot be made specific in amount, the maximum to be expended shall be stated, and each appropriation bill, when reported from the committee, shall, in the concluding clause, state the sum total of all the items contained in said bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, on examining this resolution, finds that it is not a joint but a concurrent resolution, and is not even in order under this call.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is a concurrent resolution; the resolving clause is not in the proper form for a joint resolution.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is simply a joint resolution—nothing else.

The SPEAKER. The form of the resolution is that of a concurrent resolution; the title "joint resolution" does not make it such.

Mr. WAIT. Can we not have the resolution read again, so that the House may understand what is before it?

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not in order.

Mr. THOMPSON. I modify the resolution so as to make it a joint resolution. Let the Clerk read it in the modified form.

The Clerk again read the resolution as modified by striking out "Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,)" and inserting "Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled."

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] to refer the resolution to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is first in order.

Mr. EDEN. I rise to a point of order. During the call in the morning hour on Monday for the introduction of bills for reference to appropriate committees, is it in order to refer a proposition to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. Under the rule it is. The rule prescribes when various propositions are made as to reference of bills or joint resolutions the order in which the question shall be put is, first, on the reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; second, to the Committee of the Whole House; third, to a standing committee, and, fourth, to a select committee.

Mr. EDEN. Does that apply to the morning hour on Monday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

43. When a resolution shall be offered, or a motion made, to refer any subject, and different committees shall be proposed, the question shall be taken in the following order:

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; the Committee of the Whole House; a standing committee; a select committee.

Mr. HUNTON demanded a division on the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 108, noes 25.

Mr. BLAND demanded tellers.

Mr. ELAM. I ask that the joint resolution be again read.

The SPEAKER. It has been read twice.

Mr. ELAM. I ask it be again read, as there was so much confusion in the Hall we could not hear it.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the joint resolution was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAYES. I am paired with Mr. DEAN, of Massachusetts. If he were here, I would vote in the negative.

Mr. LANDERS. I withdraw my vote in the negative, as on this question I am paired with Mr. PRIDEMORE. If he were present, I would vote in the negative and he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleague, Mr. SMITH, is paired with Mr. WALKER. If Mr. SMITH were present, he would vote in the negative. My colleague, Mr. HARMER, who is temporarily absent, would, if present, vote in the negative.

Mr. COLE. My colleague, Mr. MORGAN, is paired with Mr. JAMES on all political questions.

Mr. EVANS, of Pennsylvania. I withdraw my vote in the negative, as I am paired with Mr. KENNA.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

GOVERNMENT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SCALES. At the request of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] I move to suspend the rules and take from the Public Calendar for consideration in the House, as in the Committee of the Whole, House bill No. 3259, entitled "A bill providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia."

Mr. CLARK, of Iowa. I demand a division.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is consideration to be limited to one hour.

The SPEAKER. It is not limited at all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not intended to have much discussion upon the bill, but to proceed with its consideration section by section, and to pass it to-day.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 175, noes 1.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] will take the chair, as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House, as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, under the order of the House, now proceeds to the consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, and the bill will be read a first time for information.

Mr. HENDEE. I move, Mr. Speaker, to dispense with the first reading of the bill, in order that it may be taken up by sections for amendment.

Mr. CONGER. This bill has been revised and reprinted and amended and is not, so far as I can discover, yet upon the desks of members. As it is to be read by sections for amendment I do not believe I will object to dispense with its first reading for information.

Mr. HENDEE's motion was agreed to; and the first reading of the bill for information was dispensed with.

Mr. HENDEE. I now ask that it be read by sections for amendment under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill, as follows:

That all that portion of the territory of the United States which was ceded by the State of Maryland for the permanent seat of the Federal Government shall continue to be designated as the District of Columbia. Said District, and property and persons that may be therein, shall be subject to the following provisions as and for the government of the same, and also to any existing laws applicable thereto not hereby repealed or inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

Mr. HENDEE. I desire to state, Mr. Speaker, that the committee are not disposed to prevent gentlemen debating the bill, especially those who are opposed to it, but we ask it be done generally under the five-minute rule as the House has ordered. We are not disposed to prevent any gentleman from offering any amendments he sees fit. We desire the amendments will be offered as the bill is read, and when read through I give notice I will then move the previous question on the bill and amendments, hoping to dispose of the whole discussion before the session of to-day closes.

The Clerk read the second section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That on the third Monday in the month of June, in the year 1878, there shall be elected or appointed, in the manner hereinafter directed, three persons to be commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall exercise all the powers and authority now vested in the commissioners of said District except as hereinafter limited; shall be subject to all the restrictions and limitations which are now imposed upon said commissioners. One of the said commissioners shall be an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army, whose lineal rank shall be above that of captain and shall be detailed by the President for the term of three years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified: Provided, That the officer so detailed shall not be assigned to any other duty and that he shall receive no further compensation than his regular pay as an officer of the Army. The second of the said commissioners shall be elected by the House of Representatives, by ballot, for the term of three years, and until his successor shall be elected and qualified; and the third of said commissioners shall be elected by the Senate, by ballot, for the term of three years and until his successor is elected and qualified; and at the end of the several terms of each of the commissioners their successors shall be elected or appointed in the same manner for the term of three years, respectively, and until their successors are elected or appointed and qualified; the said election or appointment to be made on the third Monday in the month of February in which the term of such commissioners shall expire: Provided, That at the first election of commissioners by the Senate and House of Representatives, as above provided, the terms of said commissioners so elected shall expire one, one year from the date of said election and the other two years from the date of said election, the same to be determined by lot. Their successors shall be elected in the manner and for the term above prescribed. The two persons elected as commissioners by the House of Representatives and the Senate shall at the time of their election be citizens of the United States, and shall have been actual residents of the District of Columbia for ten years previous to their election and who have during that period claimed no residence elsewhere, and shall each own property in his own right in said District, the assessed value of which shall be at least $5,000; and if the place of any commissioner shall become vacant from any cause or he shall neglect for twenty days to take the oath of office if he be elected by the Senate or House of Representatives, his place shall be filled forthwith, for the balance of his term, in the same manner as the person whose place is to be filled was elected or appointed; but if the person whose place so becomes vacant shall have been elected by the Senate or House of Representatives, and such vacancy shall occur not in session of Congress, then the said vacancy shall be filled by the appointment of the President, until the Senate or House of Representatives, as the case may be, shall elect a person to fill the said office for the balance of the term thereof. One of the said commissioners shall be chosen president of the board of commissioners at the first meeting thereof and annually thereafter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee for the District of Columbia report the following amendment to that section:

In lines 40, 41, and 42 strike out the words "and shall each own property in his own right in said District, the assessed value of which shall be at least $5,000."

Mr. HENDEE. That is the amendment offered by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORT. I move in lines 10 and 11 to strike out the words, "whose lineal rank shall be above that of captain;" so it will read:

One of the said commissioners shall be one of the Engineer Corps of the Army, and shall be detailed by the President, &c.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. With the permission of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT,] I desire to offer an amendment, bearing directly upon the question of the appointment or election of the commissioners. It may be offered now or after the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, to perfect the section, is disposed of, as the gentleman sees fit.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that if the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COX] should prevail, his would be unnecessary.

Mr. FORT. Very well. I withdraw my amendment for the present. If that of the gentleman from Ohio should fail I can then offer mine again.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

In section 2 strike out all between lines 9 and 28, as follows:

One of the said commissioners shall be an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army, whose lineal rank shall be above that of captain, and shall be detailed by the President for the term of three years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified: Provided, That the officer so detailed shall not be assigned to any other duty, and that he shall receive no further compensation than his regular pay as an officer of the Army. The second of the said commissioners shall be elected by the House of Representatives, by ballot, for the term of three years, and until his successor shall be elected and qualified; and the third of the said commissioners shall be elected by the Senate, by ballot, for the term of three years, and until his successor is elected and qualified; and at the end of the several terms of each of the commissioners their successors shall be elected or appointed, in the same manner, for the term of three years respectively, and until their successors are elected or appointed and qualified; the said election or appointment to be made on the third Monday, in the month of February, in which the term of such commissioners shall expire:

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

The said commissioners shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold their office for the term of three years.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I only desire to call the attention of the House to the issue here offered. It is that of the election of these officers by the Houses of Congress or their appointment by the President under his constitutional right and power.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio will not be adopted by the House. His assumption of a constitutional power on the part of the President to make these appointments I thought had been so sufficiently answered the other day by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARTRIDGE] that it would scarcely again be asserted here as a fact existing.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio proposes to leave the power of selecting the commissioners for the District of Columbia in the hands of the President, where it is now lodged. The bill, as reported by the committee, proposes that each House of Congress shall select one of three commissioners, and the President under certain limitations as to rank shall from the Engineer Corps of the Army appoint a third. I trust the bill will be left as it is, and that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio will be voted down.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to offer as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio what I send to the desk.

Strike out all between lines 9 and 33, as follows:

One of the said commissioners shall be an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army, whose lineal rank shall be above that of captain, and shall be detailed by the President for the term of three years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified: Provided, That the officer so detailed shall not be assigned to any other duty, and that he shall receive no further compensation than his regular pay as an officer of the Army. The second of the said commissioners shall be elected by the House of Representatives, by ballot, for the term of three years, and until his successor shall be elected and qualified; and the third of the said commissioners shall be elected by the Senate, by ballot, for the term of three years, and until his successor is elected and qualified; and at the end of the several terms of each of the commissioners, their successors shall be elected or appointed, in the same manner, for the term of three years respectively, and until their successors are elected or appointed and qualified; the said election or appointment to be made on the third Monday in the month of February, in which the term of such commissioners shall expire: Provided, That at the first election of commissioners by the Senate and House of Representatives, as above provided, the terms of said commissioners so elected shall expire one, one year from the date of said election, and the other two years from the date of said election. The same to be determined by lot.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

The three commissioners shall be chosen by the Senate and House of Representatives in joint session, by a majority of votes of members of the Senate and House of Representatives present; and in selecting said commissioners each member of the Senate and House may cast as many votes for one candidate as there are representatives to be elected, or may distribute the same or equal parts thereof among the candidates as he shall see fit, and the candidates highest in votes shall be declared elected.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to say this in behalf of the amendment I have offered. It simply applies the minority rule of representation as it is now in force in Illinois to the choice of commissioners for the District of Columbia. I believe it would be more satisfactory to the country, as well as to the District, if this power of electing and choosing commissioners be lodged entirely in the two Houses of Congress; and if lodged in the two Houses of Congress it would certainly be more satisfactory to all parties that the minority as well as the majority composing those two Houses shall be represented in the board of commissioners.

The operation of the rule of minority representation would be this: the two Houses being assembled in joint convention, each member would have the privilege of distributing equally—where three commissioners are to be selected—his three votes among his choice for commissioners giving one vote to each; or he may select any two of them and divide his three votes between them, giving one and one-half vote to each, or he may concentrate all of his votes upon one candidate. In that way, whatever party happens to be in the minority in this House can be represented in the board of commissioners for the District of Columbia by one commissioner. That feature will take away any evil that may result from having a purely partisan board; for each party being represented there will watch the proceedings of the other, and make known all that may transpire.

I have offered this amendment after mature reflection. I believe it will in its operation be satisfactory to the people in this District. I trust, therefore, it will be adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] will not imperil the passage of this bill by what at the very best cannot be considered as a very important part of it—because the bill has very important features that ought to be considered—by insisting, as he does in this section, on a point about which there is doubtless the greatest possible difference of opinion as to its constitutionality.

Now, notwithstanding the reference to the speech of the gentleman from Georgia, I am perfectly clear in my judgment that we have no constitutional authority whatever to assume in this House to elect a commissioner for the District of Columbia or that the Senate can do it.

The Constitution is as clear as words can make it that all officers established by law are to be appointed by the President of the United States, except that by law the appointment of inferior officers may be vested in the courts of law or in the heads of Departments. These are the two categories of exception: one is the courts of law, which we are not, and the other the heads of the Departments, which we clearly are not.

Now, if any man can point out where we get the power to do that thing, and how we can get around that plain provision of the Constitution, he can do what I cannot by any means at present understand. If we can do this thing in regard to the District of Columbia we can do it in regard to all the nine Territories. We can elect the governors of the Territories here in the House, and if anybody thinks that would be wise if it were constitutional he has a strange view of the functions of a legislative body. It seems to me in the highest degree impolitic, even if it were constitutional, for us to be tossing the government of this District between the accidental situation of the majority in this House and the majority in the Senate, and to make this a kind of compound organization. It is clearly an executive power that is to be exercised in choosing the government of the District of Columbia, and I hope we shall not run into this question of interfering with the executive functions by doing or attempting to do this thing in this bill.

Now the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND,] I am bound to say with all due respect, is something that cannot be thought of for a moment. Who has ever before dreamed that a Senator should be made equal to a Representative, and only equal by casting a vote alongside of one of us, and making the two Senators from the State of New York, for example, only just equal to one-fifteenth of the delegation from New York? Sir, there exists no such thing as a joint ballot by both Houses of Congress. We do know that there is a joint ballot in the Legislatures of the States for the election of Senators and for some other purposes, but there is no possibility of any such thing under our Constitution and frame of Government as a joint ballot of the Senate and House of Representatives for any purpose known to the laws or Constitution. It seems to me, therefore, that the only easy and direct way is to leave the appointment of the commissioners of this District to one of two courses: either to election by the people, and let them choose their commissioners; that is one way, although I do not think it the best; the other way is to let the President appoint them, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It seems to me that if we take any third way we are entangling ourselves with dangerous and difficult questions.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Do I understand the gentleman from Ohio to insist that because there is no law authorizing a joint session of the two Houses that therefore there is no authority in the Constitution for such joint session?

Mr. GARFIELD. Oh, I do not say that! I said that as a matter of fact there never had been such a law. I assert that under our Constitution the very frame-work of the Senate and of the House of Representatives makes it impossible that any law could put them on a plane of equality where their votes could be counted by the head for any purpose.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to ask my friend from Ohio a question. He holds that there is no power to appoint these commissioners except by the Executive, where that power is confided by the Constitution. Now, if that be true, how can the two Houses of Congress, if they cannot elect the commissioners themselves, authorize the people to elect them, and thus take the power out of the hands of the President, and, on his theory, defeat the purposes of the Constitution?

Mr. GARFIELD. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that the supreme government of this District is vested in the General Government, and we by law can point out whether the President shall choose these commissioners or not. There is some doubt as to whether we can authorize the people to elect them. The question was raised when we had the old government of the District of Columbia whether we could delegate any powers to anybody else to legislate for this District. Mr. HOAR, who was then on the Committee for the District of Columbia, came to the conclusion that we had made a mistake and transcended our powers when we conferred upon any other body than Congress the power to legislate for the District. That line of reasoning seems to me to lead to the doctrine that we could not establish here anything like a legislative government in the District. If we could, if we could empty this Hall and the Senate Chamber altogether of the burdens of the duty of legislating for the District, I should be glad, for the District finds Congress a stepmother in all its work of legislation.

We are here trying to look over the whole country and legislate for it, and to have to legislate for a municipal government has always been a burden and a difficulty, and I would be glad if we could get rid of it fairly; but I see no way but to make these commissioners something like what the present commissioners are and leave the burdens of the District government to them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not yet feel that it is necessary to enter into an elaborate argument as to the constitutional power of Congress to select commissioners for this District.

The District of Columbia is denominated a corporation; the very law that established the government for this District, which was succeeded by the present existing government, was entitled "A bill to establish a government for the corporation of the District of Columbia."

It is held, and I believe correctly, that the commissioners charged with the duties devolved upon those officers in this District are not strictly speaking Federal officers; but they are municipal officers; they are the executive officers charged with the duty of administering the municipal affairs of a corporation, so denominated in the very act creating them. And I am astonished that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] should have raised the question of the constitutional power of Congress in this connection. I find by referring to section 6 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States the following provision:

> No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States, shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

Now the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] I apprehend, found no difficulty in receiving and accepting an appointment, which I believe he holds to-day, as one of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution. In the Forty-fourth Congress that gentleman found no difficulty in accepting at the hands of this very House the position of a member of the electoral commission. Was that any civil office? The gentleman retained his seat upon this floor and performed the functions and duties of a member of this House. He drew his pay as such member, and yet at that very time he was the recipient, the holder and the exerciser of the duties of an office that can be far more clearly demonstrated to have been a civil office than that of a commissioner for the District of Columbia, which is denominated by law to be a corporation and is made a municipality.

It is too late in the day for the line of constitutional power to be drawn so tightly against Congress as the gentleman endeavors to draw it. And if it is to be drawn, if it is to be applied, I insist that the gentleman from Ohio is not the proper person to make the application.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman says that the commissioners of the District of Columbia are the representatives of a corporation, and that because this District is a legal corporation, this House and the Senate have the legal right to nominate and elect their officers.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THOMPSON] if he would make his statement only, and not attribute it to me; I did not say any such thing.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then, what did you say?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am sorry I have to repeat it; it is the fault of the gentleman, not mine.

Mr. THOMPSON. My question is, which I desire the gentleman to answer, whether the District of Columbia be a corporation or a municipality or whatever you choose to call it, I would like the gentleman to show where in the Constitution or above the Constitution he finds any authority or precedent for this mixed exercise of power in the nomination, appointment, or election of these commissioners. If the legislative body has the power to elect commissioners, this House one and the Senate another, under what clause of the Constitution is this mixed power of jurisdiction conferred? I would like to know. If Congress has the power to nominate and elect one or more of the commissioners, by what authority has the President power to appoint another? In other words, if the power is vested at all it is vested in some one spot, not traveling all over the different departments of the Government. The judiciary cannot nominate one, the executive another, and the legislative department another. If there is a power anywhere to nominate these officers it is localized, it has a habitation and a home, and does not travel all over the several departments of this Government.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Well, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THOMPSON] has managed to make more of a speech than a question out of his interruption. I will say to him that if he will consult the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, enumerating the powers of the Congress of the United States, he will find among those powers the following:

> To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States.

Now I hope I will be permitted to answer before I am obliged to yield for another question as long as that.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to ask——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Has my time expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The five minutes of the gentleman have expired.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I only wish to say this to the House——

Mr. HUNTON. I will take the floor and yield my five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thank the gentleman.

Does not the Senate of the United States elect your Public Printer? Why do you not hold that that is an invasion of the constitutional prerogative of the President of the United States? Did not the Forty-fourth Congress pass a bill appropriating money for the improvement of the city of Washington by paving Pennsylvania avenue; and in that very bill did not Congress designate by name the three men who should act as commissioners, and superintend this work and receive and disburse the money?

Mr. THOMPSON. If Congress has exclusive jurisdiction over the District for legislation, then what power has the President to appoint one of these commissioners? Where does his authority come from?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman will ask a question and then stop to have it answered, I have no objection to being interrupted; but I do object to his asking a question and then proceeding to make a speech. I hold that the exclusive power for this purpose is lodged in the hands of this Congress. If the President of the United States has been clothed with power to make these appointments, regarding this District as a corporation, recognizing that the law fitly denominated it when it speaks of it as a municipality, then I hold that the President makes these appointments simply by virtue of a grant of power from the Congress of the United States, which grant the gentleman from Ohio, and not without a show of reason, suggested was of doubtful validity.

The President of the United States has no original power to appoint these commissioners. As to the authority of Congress to make these appointments of commissioners I cannot for my life see that there is a question. To raise that question is to doubt the right of the original grantor of a power to do a thing which its agent has hitherto been doing under its authority.

But I would like to submit to the consideration of the objectors on the other side this question: if it be granted, and it cannot be denied, for during more than four-fifths or nine-tenths of the political existence of the District of Columbia it has been so done—if it be granted under the long line of precedents that it is competent for Congress to authorize the people of the District of Columbia to select their commissioners or executive officers, I would inquire whether that was not an exercise of the same power and whether it did not require an exercise of the same power to authorize the President of the United States to do this instead of the voter? You may put this power where you please. I mean to take advanced ground on this question and assert that in my judgment it is perfectly competent for the Congress of the United States dealing with a corporation put completely at its disposal, over whose affairs it has general and exclusive legislative jurisdiction—it is perfectly competent for Congress to adopt the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois; it is perfectly competent for Congress to adopt the universal suffrage plan of government and authorize the voters of this District to select commissioners: it is perfectly competent for Congress to designate any particular individual and empower him to appoint these commissioners. It is a plenary power and an original power; and I assert that during more than seventy years of the history of this District the people never did select their commissioners except by a grant of the power from Congress and that the President of the United States never appointed a commissioner by reason of any original right but only because he was clothed with that power by grant from Congress.

Mr. THOMPSON. One further question, if the gentleman pleases. Assuming, as the gentleman claims, that the Congress of the United States has exclusive jurisdiction of this matter, and assuming (a power the doubtfulness of which has been intimated by the gentleman from Ohio) that Congress may transfer this authority to be exercised elsewhere, can this power be divided so as to authorize this House to elect one officer, the other branch of Congress to elect another, and the Executive to appoint another, thus not only transferring the power, but dividing it into three equal parts and committing its exercise to three independent and co-ordinate branches of the Government?

Mr. BLACKBURN. In answering the question, I simply desire to say that the most learned and certainly the most prominent of all the commentators upon the Federal Constitution has asserted that this is not a doubtful power. But if it should be, I say that this bill proposes to avoid the doubt by making no grant of such power either to the voter of the District or to the President of the United States; it provides for the exercise of the power by Congress itself, where it originally belongs under the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. THOMPSON. It proposes to vest this power in each House separately, not in Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is proceeding by unanimous consent under the five-minute rule; and under that rule debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to propose an amendment perfecting the original section before the vote on the substitute shall be taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In what form does the gentleman submit the amendment? There are now two amendments pending—the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COX] and a substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND.]

Mr. CONGER. I propose to amend that portion of the section which is proposed to be stricken out by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. The gentleman will permit me to remind him that a motion of that sort was offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT,] and the suggestion was then made that inasmuch as my amendment went to the very essence of the matter as to the method of appointment the House should first act upon that amendment, leaving till a later stage propositions that would merely perfect the form.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was upon that understanding that the gentleman from Illinois withdrew the amendment, the Chair indicating that he would be recognized after the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio was disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. This is a different proposition, and embraces a matter not affected by that amendment. It affects in a different way the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. I take it that it is in order to amend what is proposed to be stricken out before the vote is taken upon it. There cannot be any question about that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his amendment.

Mr. CONGER. My amendment is to strike out all of section 2, after the word "army," in line 16, to and including the word "thereof," in line 55, and to insert:

> The second and third of the said commissioners shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of one and two years respectively; and at the expiration of such term each of said offices shall be filled by appointment, as aforesaid, for the term of three years respectively thereafter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would hold that the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is not in order. It is neither an amendment to the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio nor an amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois, but is an independent proposition, involving a larger portion of the bill than either the amendment or the substitute.

Mr. CONGER. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio strikes out all I would strike out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio strikes out all between certain lines. The gentleman from Michigan seeks to introduce another amendment to strike out those lines and other lines as well.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that his amendment offers to strike out a great deal more than mine does, both before and after it. So if it be a question of perfecting the part stricken out, inasmuch as that I refer to is not included, my amendment according to his own point of order would come first.

Mr. CONGER. That is true. I understood his amendment to strike out more than mine.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. No, it strikes out less.

Mr. CONGER. My object was to test the sense of the committee or of the House in committee upon the proposition to leave the appointment of engineer as provided for in the bill and provide the other two commissioners should be appointed by the President for the term of one and two years in the first instance and after that for a term of three years. But I will wait, however, if it is not in order now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to answer a portion of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] He seemed to think the amendment offered by myself will operate awkwardly or contains a proposition not consistent with our theory of government and that the two Houses cannot consistently be brought together in joint convention for the purpose of appointing these commissioners, I am at a loss to discover wherein such an act of Congress would be inconsistent with the nature of the Government or inconsistent with any express or implied provision of the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, one who perhaps knew more of the nature of this Government than any man who ever lived under it, one who had more to do with forming the Constitution and modeling the Government than any other person—I refer to Thomas Jefferson—once prepared, if I am not mistaken, a plan for electing the President and Vice-President by Congress in disputed cases, wherein he proposed to bring the two Houses together in joint convention and placed each Senator and Representative upon an equality, giving each but one vote in disposing of that question. If Jefferson considered that method practicable and consistent with the Constitution when selecting a President and Vice-President, why may we not, when acting under a provision of the Constitution which gives Congress exclusive jurisdiction or legislative control over affairs of the District of Columbia, adopt the same plan? I can see nothing in the objection made.

I wish to say one word further before this proposition is voted on. I do not believe it is consistent with the theory of our Government that in selecting a civil officer an officer of the United States Army shall be appointed to perform purely civil functions. I believe this a subversion of the principle upon which the Government itself rests, that military officers shall be clothed with purely civil powers, such as those of a commissioner of this District, whose duties are wholly foreign to those of military life and training. If a military officer can be detailed for this purpose he can be detailed to discharge the duty of any other civil position, and you may supersede every civil officer under the Government with details from the Army. But I do not wish to consume further time of the House. I rose merely to announce my inability to discover any reason why the proposition to bring the two Houses into joint convention for the purpose of selecting these commissioners is inconsistent with the theory of our Government or that such a plan would be unsatisfactory.

Mr. HANNA. I do not know under the pending amendments I can give expression to the views I desire in reference to this section. If I can do so by striking out the last word I will make that motion. My judgment is, from the consideration I have given this bill, to strike out from section 2 all after the word "commissioners," in line 9, down to and including the word "thereof," in line 55, page 4, and in lieu of what is there printed I would insert 'the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint, say, three commissioners, one of whom shall serve for a period of one year, and one for a period of two years, and one for a period of three years, and as vacancies occur the President shall appoint to fill such vacancy as in the first instance, each successor to be appointed for a period of three years."

Now, sir, without stopping to discuss the question of power I will address myself simply to the practicability in a bill of this sort providing a certain Army officer shall be detailed by the President, and when the President does that he has exercised all his functions in connection with this bill. I would dispense with that which provides this House shall elect one and the Senate another. I do not believe in any such "scuttle" arrangement. It seems to me in the first instance we had better leave this power where it naturally and properly belongs, either to the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or to the vote of the people.

This section still retains another odious provision, to wit, that when the House comes to select a man and the Senate a man the persons thus selected shall have been residents of this Territory for ten years.

Why that odious, anti-republican provision? I have been taught to believe that a man after a reasonable period of residence in any given locality was not only entitled to vote but also entitled to hold office; and I have no sympathy with anything that even squints at this anti-republican doctrine

I am glad to know that in this bill the property qualification has been stricken out. That is as it ought to be. But there is still here retained a provision that no man is competent to hold office unless he has been an actual resident of the District of Columbia for a period of ten years. Is this intended to make a place for some old settler, some old resident, some old fogy who has not kept pace with the progress of the times? I do not know. It is enough for my purpose to know that this provision is in the bill, and I do not subscribe to any such doctrine; it is anti-republican.

It seems to me in perfecting a bill of this sort we as Representatives of the people ought as near as may be to have a model republican form of government at the capital of the United States, and hence anything looking to property qualification, anything restricting even the President of the United States in the selection of officers, or, if you please, anything restricting Congress in the selection of officers, is so odious that it ought to be stricken out.

Why say in this bill that the President shall only detail such and such an officer of such and such a grade? Has it come to this, that no person outside of the regular Army is competent to be an engineer for the District of Columbia? Why fetter the hands of the President in this regard? Would it not be more in consonance with our democratic and with our republican feelings to give to the President at once the power to select three competent officers to fill these positions rather than say you may detail thus and so, or tie our own hands in the House by saying we will elect but we must only elect thus and so; we must only elect a person who has happened to live here for ten years, when perchance there may be men who have not been here so long who are better qualified, men of larger intelligence, men of larger experience, men of greater industry than those who have been here for ten years. I think we should coolly and dispassionately strip this bill of all these anti-republican and anti-democratic features and as near as may be give these people a model of a republican form of government. How can I as representing a republican constituency vote for a bill establishing a form of government for this District that is in its terms anti-republican? I will not do it. I cannot go to my people and say, "I voted for a District bill which provided a man should not hold an office unless he had lived in the District for ten years, and unless he had property—for a bill which tied the hands of the President by saying he should only detail a man from the regular Army as a commissioner and a man of the regular Army of a certain grade.

Why, sir, it is worse than nonsense to insert these features in the bill. We ought to strip the bill of these features and make it as perfect as we can; and then, as the best we can do in this session, I will be glad to vote for it. But do not, I pray you, gentlemen of the Committee for the District of Columbia, insist on members voting for a bill containing features which you in your own hearts must condemn.

Mr. BURCHARD. I do not see why the fourth section of this bill does not make these commissioners officers of the United States. They are required to take an oath as other officers are; they are required to give a bond as other officers of the United States are; they are to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States as other officers of the United States are; they are to perform executive duties, duties imposed upon them by this law; and why are they not officers of the United States for the District of Columbia, for the corporation, if you choose, of the District created by this law, just as much as the governor of a Territory is an officer of the United States?

The appointment of a commission by Congress, for instance, the silver commission, to ascertain certain facts, or the appointment of a person as a trustee or as one of the persons named to represent the corporation of the Smithsonian Institution, does not present a parallel case. These are persons who are required to perform duties that are executive duties. They have to execute the law; and why is not that provision of the Constitution referred to by the gentleman from Ohio, which requires the appointment of such officers to be vested in the United States, applicable to these commissioners as well as to other officers of the United States.

Mr. MAYHAM. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the objection that is raised by the gentleman from Ohio, as to the constitutionality of this feature of the bill, is not well taken. To assume that it comes within the provision of the Constitution referred to by the gentleman from Ohio is to assume that these commissioners are purely United States officers. It seems to me that that is not true. These commissioners have to be provided for by an act of Congress; but when they are invested with the power and insignia of office they are no longer exclusively officers of the United States within the language of the Constitution. They are municipal officers. They are, as has been stated by the gentleman from Kentucky, officers of a corporation, not acting entirely as United States officers, but acting in part at least as municipal officers.

Now the language of the constitutional provision in enumerating the powers of the President is as follows:

> He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law.

Now here is an office of a municipality. These commissioners are officers of the District of Columbia, and they are officers of the cities of Washington and Georgetown; not only officers of a municipality, but officers of a corporation, because the very bill which creates these offices proclaims and declares that the District of Columbia is a corporation. It seems to me, therefore, that they are no more officers of the Federal Government or United States officers than any municipality officers elsewhere, except that they are to be created by a law of Congress.

Now, let us see further whether the President of the United States is vested with authority to make these appointments. It is a legislative act. It is an authority conferred and created by legislation, and the Constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall have exclusive power to legislate for the District of Columbia upon all subjects whatsoever. If it be a legislative authority, then Congress is within the line of its authority in legislating for the District of Columbia in naming these commissioners. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HANNA] says that it is anti-democratic, that it is anti-republican, and he proposes to open the District of Columbia as a sort of experimental garden for the culture of democratic and republican forms of government. That would be all very well and I would favor it but for the obligation that rests upon Congress to legislate for the District of Columbia upon all matters whatsoever.

The theory of the gentleman from Indiana seems to be that the supreme authority shall be vested with the people; that the people shall appoint or elect their officers, and, having elected them, that their representatives shall legislate for them. That would be the theory of a republican and democratic form of government which would please me but for the constitutional objection which seems to me to be insuperable.

Mr. THOMPSON. There certainly are grave doubts in the minds of gentlemen here as to the powers that might be exercised in this particular. For my part I do not believe that Congress has power to appoint, elect, or suggest a single officer for this District, and the argument of the gentleman from New York destroys very much the force of the argument against this position. He says that these officers are only in a certain sense United States officers. I would like to know what officers they are. They are not officers of the District of Columbia, which has no powers, no rights, and no authority whatsoever, except as granted to it by the Congress of the United States. The Post-Office Department of the United States is subject to legislation by Congress exclusively, but no more exclusively than is the District of Columbia, and yet the argument of the gentleman from New York and of other gentlemen who take the same view, that because Congress has exclusive jurisdiction to legislate for the District of Columbia it has the right to appoint these officers, would lead to the result that Congress, which also has exclusively the right to legislate for the Post-Office Department, has the power to appoint postmasters and that the President has none.

If he has, it would be authority delegated by Congress to appoint officers of the District of Columbia and then to appoint postmasters and collectors and all the officers of the Government. No one will carry the argument that far, and yet that is the logical sequence from which no amount of rhetoric can relieve it.

Mr. MAYHAM. Does not the gentleman recognize a distinction between the authority of the commissioners of the District of Columbia and of postmasters, one being of a municipal character and the other relating to national affairs?

Mr. THOMPSON. I recognize a marked difference in the duties, none in the power that creates them. They are creatures of the same power, derive their life from the same instrument, and depend on the same Constitution. Their duties are different, but their origin is one and the same.

But that is not all. This is not merely a question of delegating an uncertain and disputed power, but it is an effort to do what the world has never before witnessed—to divide an uncertain power into three distinct departments, each independent of the other.

If Congress has the power to legislate for the District, what do you mean by Congress? This House? Or the Senate? Or both? Why both? And do you propose to divide the authority and say that one part of Congress—the House—shall legislate upon one part, and another part of Congress—the Senate—shall legislate upon another part, and that the Executive shall appoint the third? No absurdity was ever carried so far. No one ever heard of a division of the legislative power into three distinct parts—independent, absolute, and unconditional.

This House is a part only of the legislative power of the nation and cannot legislate independent of the other part; nor can the Senate, as a part of the legislative power, legislate in its own behalf and against the will of this House; nor can the Executive, a part also of the legislative power, legislate and appoint on his own behalf, independent of and in opposition to both Houses of Congress.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to occupy as little time in this discussion as possible, as I hope the debate will soon be closed, but I do wish to reply to some of the points which have been made. In the first speech which I made I stated that the Constitution has given plenary appointing power to the President with two exceptions which I stated: one made in favor of the courts and the other in favor of the heads of Departments.

Now I wish to speak for a moment upon the affirmative power given to us as Congress and to ask gentlemen to say if they can find anything in that affirmative power out of which this power to appoint commissioners of the District can be obtained. The affirmative power given to us in regard to the District is this: "To exercise exclusive legislation over the District," and over navy-yards, and the like. That really is all we have everywhere in the United States, the power to exercise legislation; that is all the power that we have. And the word "exclusive" as applied to this District simply denies any other power than ours to legislate. The word "exclusive" drives away State power or any other power, and leaves all and only in us the power of legislation for this District.

And it is a remarkable fact that the power that is given us over this District is the power of legislation; not judicial power, not executive power, but the power of legislation; not elective power, but the power of legislation.

Now, gentlemen say that legislation can create corporations, municipal or personal or private. Yes, so it can; we can create a corporation. But will any lawyer here tell me that any legislative body on this earth ever created a corporation and in the same act that created it elected its officers? The creation of a corporation is one thing and the names of the corporators of course may be given in the act. But it is the universal law of corporations that the corporators meet and choose their own officers.

Now, we may create a municipal corporation for this District and embody all the citizens of proper age, and we may empower them to elect their officers; that certainly would be what we could do. But when we have created a municipal corporation, when we have laid down its boundaries, determined what officers it shall have, then the legislative work is done. Whenever it comes to the matter of appointing its officers that is executive work.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question in that connection?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the gentleman complain of the exercise of that power by Congress, which created a corporation and named the incorporators in the act and authorized the corporation to elect its officers from among those men named in the act? Is not that a limitation upon the right of election?

Mr. GARFIELD. There may be a limitation as to where the selection may be made. But this bill puts the power of selection absolutely here.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is it not the same thing, provided Congress names the corporators and says to them you may elect your officers, but you shall elect none except from the list of names here given?

Mr. GARFIELD. I think it goes further than that. A single word more. My colleague [Mr. COX] the other day quoted from a very able and clear decision of the supreme court of Ohio on this point, where precisely this kind of case arose. The supreme court said that the legislative body could create an office, and it could say how the appointment to that office should be made; but it could not make the appointment. The Legislature may prescribe all of the conditions of the appointment, all of the limitations of the appointment, but it could not make it; that was executive power and not legislative power. Now, it seems to me——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] as entitled to the floor.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will excuse me for half a minute. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] referred to the election of Public Printer by the Senate. Now, I am here to make a confession for my side of the House. For years the Public Printer was appointed by the President. When Andrew Johnson became President, and the republican party in the two Houses of Congress thought they were likely to lose the Public Printer, they did what I think they had no right to do. They repealed the law creating the office of Public Printer, to be appointed by the President, and provided that the Senate of the United States should make the appointment.

Now, I was before the Supreme Court of the United States in a case three years ago, in which I took occasion to denounce that act as unconstitutional. And in the last year of my service here as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as will be remembered, I so stated here. I reported a bill repealing that provision of the law, (I giving the reason here that it was unconstitutional,) and declaring that hereafter the President should appoint the Public Printer I am on record on that subject, and the gentleman can make no point on me.

Mr. BLACKBURN. With the utmost good humor, I would like to ask the gentleman whether, in view of the danger of losing another President, he would not be willing to re-enact that law? [Laughter.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Oh, no; not by any means. And in regard to the position of Regent of the Smithsonian Institution, to which the gentleman refers, that Institution is a private corporation, and the House is invited, merely as a matter of courtesy, to help that private corporation, organized for a public purpose, by assigning men to serve as its trustees or Regents. But a Regent of the Smithsonian Institution does not become a United States officer at all.

Mr. KNOTT. It occurs to me that the difficulty in the mind of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THOMPSON] as to the constitutional power of the two Houses of Congress to appoint the commissioners as provided in this bill arises from a failure on his part to draw a very obvious distinction between officers of the United States necessary to the discharge of the functions pertaining to some one of its departments, and agencies or employments of a mere local or temporary concern; a distinction which was drawn with the utmost clearness by the supreme court of the gentleman's own State, in construing a clause in the constitution of Pennsylvania precisely analogous to the clause in the Federal Constitution involved in this discussion, and which, I believe, has never been questioned from that time to the present moment. If the gentleman will refer to 3 Sergeant & Rawle, 144, he will find the opinion of the court as delivered by Chief Justice Tighlman in the case to which I refer.

The question arose upon a section in the constitution of Pennsylvania which provided—

> That the governor shall appoint all officers whose offices are established by this constitution, or shall be established by law, and whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for.

The chief-justice says:

> It has never been ascertained, nor is it easy to ascertain, to what offices this power of appointment extends. I speak of offices created by law since the making of the constitution.
> The word office is of very vague and indefinite import. Everything concerning the administration of justice or the general interests of society may be supposed to be within the meaning of the constitution, especially if fees or emoluments are annexed to the office.
> But there are matters of temporary and local concern which although comprehended in the term office have not been thought to be embraced by the constitution. And when offices of that kind have been created the Legislature has sometimes made the appointment in the law which created them—

Although it seems that my learned and distinguished friend from Ohio has failed to observe this—> sometimes given the appointment to others than the governor, and sometimes given the power of removal to others although the appointment was left to the governor. The officers of whom I am speaking are often described in acts of Assembly by the name of commissioners—> such, for instance, as are employed in the laying out of roads and canals and other works of a public nature. Yet all these perform a duty, or, in other words, exercise an office.

Precisely as in the act under consideration—

Again, if the gentleman will refer to the twelfth volume Opinions of the Attorneys-General, he will find that Mr. Stanberry, in construing the word "office," as used in the third section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, takes the same distinction and holds that commissioners such as are contemplated by this bill are not embraced by that term and are therefore not within the purview of that amendment. He says:

> I cannot enumerate all the employments under State authority which in my opinion work no disfranchisement. I will name some by way of illustration, namely, boards of commissioners of public works, directors of State asylums, visitors of State universities, directors of State penitentiaries, State directors of banks or other corporations, special commissioners or agents appointed by the governor or other State authority to perform special duties as examiners of banks, notaries public, and commissioners to take acknowledgment of deeds.

Nor is this all. The act organizing the Territory of Florida authorized the people of that Territory to select the judges of their own inferior courts in such manner as the Legislature might direct, and jurisdiction of the tribunals thus created coming to be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States in case reported in 1 Peters—the style of which I cannot at this moment recall, and I have not the book before me—the constitutionality of the appointment of the court was not even questioned, but the competency of Congress to thus provide for their appointment clearly conceded.

Mr. THOMPSON. I would like to put to the gentleman an inquiry. Waiving the question whether Congress has the exclusive jurisdiction to elect officers for the District of Columbia or the President the unlimited power to appoint, does the gentleman know of any authority, under the ruling in the Pennsylvania case or any other that he ever saw or heard of, that would allow either of these jurisdictions to apportion or divide the power among a half dozen different authorities, acting either in hostility or in harmony?

Mr. KNOTT. The Constitution is perfectly clear upon that point. It simply confers upon Congress exclusive power of legislation over the District of Columbia, and I am endeavoring to show that in the exercise of that power it can make such provision as it may deem best for the appointment of these commissioners without infringing in the least the provision which confers upon the President the authority to appoint all officers of the United States. My argument is that these commissioners are not officers of the United States as contemplated by this provision, but simply local agencies of a corporation.

I desire now to say a word or two in regard to the position taken by my learned friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] I know that gentleman too well to suppose and I respect him too highly to intimate that he is willfully in error in regard to the proposition now pending. I take it for granted that he is sincerely of the opinion that he is right; but I desire to call the attention of the gentleman and of the House and of the country to the attitude which he himself occupies, provided he is correct in his present position. He assumes that there is a marked difference between the corporation to be formed by this bill and the Smithsonian Institution, but, sir, in principle there is not a particle. When the Congress assumed the administration of the Smithson legacy it took upon itself the execution of a public trust, which it seeks to perform through its Board of Regents, precisely as it would discharge a similar trust through these commissioners should the bill now pending become a law. One is a corporation and so is the other. If, therefore, a commissioner of the District of Columbia is an officer as contemplated by the Constitution so is a Regent of the Smithsonian Institution, and my friend who is a distinguished and useful member of that board occupies the singular position of holding an office under the United States while a member of this House, which is expressly interdicted by the Constitution.

But that is not all. Leaving the Smithsonian Institution entirely out of view, there was an act passed during the last Congress which will be memorable as long as this Government exists and long after it shall have been numbered among the things that were.

Mr. BANKS obtained the floor and yielded to Mr. KNOTT.

Mr. KNOTT. I refer to the electoral commission bill. Gentlemen will all remember that under the provisions of that bill a special tribunal was created and invested with the highest judicial functions; was called upon to try one of the most momentous issues ever submitted to a human tribunal. Moreover, the members of that tribunal were required by the terms of that act to take an oath prescribed therein; and they did so. The gentlemen chosen as members of that tribunal were called commissioners, as the officers named in this bill are designated; but if these commissioners of the District of Columbia are officers the members of that commission were officers, sworn officers discharging functions properly belonging to the judicial department of the Government. Yet this House and the other branch of the Federal Legislature each appointed five judges upon that tribunal, among whom none was more distinguished than the gentleman from Ohio. Now will he say that that act was unconstitutional and that he was found filling another office while occupying a seat on this floor?

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will allow me to make a suggestion to him. The theory of the electoral commission, though I did not vote for the bill, was that Congress had the power to count the votes.

Mr. KNOTT. Precisely.

Mr. GARFIELD. And having that power they had the power to appoint a committee to act for Congress; and as such the members of the committee from the House and the Senate were as much serving the two Houses as though they were on a joint committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on any pending bill, and it cannot be called an office under that law at all.

Mr. KNOTT. The gentleman is entirely too good a lawyer to say that because they were called "commissioners" they were not "officers."

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not say that, but I say they were serving for the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. KNOTT. Precisely so.

Mr. GARFIELD. In a duty the two Houses assumed they had the right to do, and acting as a joint committee.

Mr. KNOTT. Nobody ever dreamed before this commission was a committee of either one of the two Houses or a joint committee of both Houses. It is expressly denominated in the bill as a commission. The members are called commissioners. If the gentleman will refer to his dictionary he will find there is no distinction at all in the definition of commissioners and officers in the general acceptation of those terms. These commissioners were called upon to discharge the highest possible functions which can pertain to the Government of the United States. They entered upon the discharge of that duty, whether constitutional or not.

Mr. GARFIELD. What they did was of no avail unless ratified by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. KNOTT. I do not think it is of any avail myself. I regard the tribunal and its entire proceedings utterly unconstitutional and void, because it was not in the power of Congress to confer jurisdiction to try that matter. But that is not a question I will discuss now. I call the attention of Congress to the fact it has been adjudicated, and there is not an adjudication to be found to the contrary; that it is entirely competent for the legislative department of the Government to appoint commissions such as contemplated in this act in such manner as it may see proper, and the appointment of such commissioners has never been held to belong to the executive department under this provision of the Constitution vesting in it the power to appoint officers.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, the provision which gives the House power to act on this question, and the only one I see in the Constitution, is that cited by gentlemen in the first article of the Constitution which gives to Congress the right to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such a district as the District of Columbia. It is the right of legislative power and nothing else. Of course, gentlemen of this House understand what legislative power is. Gentlemen on the other side propose to seize the executive power of this District. There is not a shadow of authority for it. No gentleman who has spoken has indicated the slightest constitutional authority for such a seizure as this, and it cannot be justified by anything in the Constitution or that has ever been done by the Congress of the United States. If it were to be allowed to permit the Congress of the United States to control the police of the District, it would leave the President of the United States and the executive department as aimless and shelterless and as helpless as if they were in China or Kamtchatka, or among the aboriginal inhabitants of any portion of the earth, with no authority, no right, no capacity for the protection of their rights. Now, the Constitution does not contemplate anything of that sort, and gentlemen cannot show any authority of that kind.

I call the attention of the Chair and gentleman of the House to what the authority is. Congress shall have the right to exercise "like authority," that is, just the same authority which they have in the District of Columbia; that they shall have the same or like authority as over the places purchased by consent of the Legislature of the State in which there shall be forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other public buildings. The authority we have is to legislate for this District as we would legislate for those places. Who will contend if we establish a fort, or a dock-yard, or navy-yard for the transaction of certain public business that we have the authority ourselves to appoint the officers for those places? Yet that is exactly the authority claimed. All we have is like authority in the District of Columbia, we have to legislate over those places and no more. We have no more authority here than in those places where we have bought jurisdiction by the payment of money for the establishment of a fort, arsenal, or dock yard.

That is all the authority we have; and then how can we claim the right to appoint these commissioners? If we have such right, hereafter we may claim the right to appoint every officer in this District independent and superior to the President of the United States and every other executive officer. I use language not too strong in the slightest degree when I say under this legislative power we propose to seize the executive power in the District of Columbia and in the capital of the country. We have no right to do it.

The honorable gentleman from Kentucky spoke of the electoral commission. That is not a case of this kind. The members of the electoral commission were not public officers. I do not believe the Congress of the United States had the slightest authority for the appointment of that commission. But they appointed them to do what? To be the eyes and ears of the two Houses of Congress in regard to the testimony and the facts connected with the giving of certain electoral votes in certain States. They were the eyes and ears of the House in that matter. They were therefore a comm'ttee, nothing but a committee to take testimony and formulate an opinion and express that opinion to the two Houses in convention assembled, and when ratified by the two Houses in convention assembled it became of some importance, not otherwise. There is no resemblance between that act and what is proposed in this bill.

Gentlemen have spoken of the Public Printer. If I understand the gentleman from Ohio he has conceded or would be willing to concede that there had been something wrong done in the appointment of a Public Printer by the two Houses of Congress. But, sir, the printing of the House of Representatives and of the Senate is something within the control of those two bodies. Nobody can take it away from them. The Public Printer is as much an officer of this House as is the Speaker's page, and if the President of the United States has any authority except by the consent of the two Houses to appoint a Public Printer to control the printing of the two Houses he can appoint a Speaker of the House just as well, and all its other officers.

Mr. MILLS was recognized.

Mr. BANKS. I ask permission to say one word more, as I gave a large portion of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and will ask the Chair to recognize me afterward.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to call the attention of the House and of gentlemen to what has been said about the Smithsonian Institution. The officers of the Smithsonian Institution are not public officers, are not executive officers of the United States. A man by the name of Smithson left to this Government a fund of money for a specific use, and that fund is this day and hour administered according to his original ideas. The two Houses of Congress have assumed, under his instructions and directions, the power to provide arrangements for the execution of that trust. It is their work. It does not belong to the President. It does not belong to the executive department of the Government of the United States. It is a matter between Smithson and the two Houses of Congress representing the Government, and the men that are appointed to discharge the duties connected with the Smithsonian Institution are appointed under his will.

Mr. McMAHON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question, or rather for a suggestion?

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMAHON. We have now, as is well known, four or five homes for disabled soldiers that are managed by a body of twelve managers. One is the President ex officio; another is the Secretary of War; another is the Chief-Justice; the other nine the law provides shall be appointed by joint resolution of both Houses, and they have been uniformly appointed by joint resolution of both Houses.

Mr. BANKS. That is very proper. I like that. Those are charitable institutions for the support of the defenders of the country and the money is appropriated to maintain them.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. BANKS. In a moment. Let me answer first the question of the gentleman from Ohio. The officers of these charitable institutions are executive officers and clothed with executive power. In that capacity they are officers of the United States.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will the gentleman now allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I understand the gentleman to claim that this is a right which belongs to the President to appoint District commissioners. I understand that to be his position.

Mr. BANKS. If the bill is passed creating the commissioners, that the President should have that power.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Now, did not Congress in passing a charter for the District of Columbia delegate the power to the people of the District to select their officers? And more than that, did not the Supreme Court decide Congress had the power to delegate the power of appointing the officers to the people of the District without regard to the President?

Mr. BANKS. Undoubtedly. Congress has power to delegate its authority in an infinite number of instances, and they did it with regard to this District.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Allow me to ask the gentleman further——

Mr. BANKS. Let me answer this first. The District must have a government. The creation of that government is a legislative act. Of course it must be performed by the two Houses of Congress; and the legislative power given is a power given to those persons that are elected by the District in the name and by the authority of the two Houses of Congress that is within their power. But when it comes to the executive power of the government we have in every instance given the appointment of the chief officers to the President of the United States. And I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] to the condition of the President of the United States and the executive department of the Government when they are obliged to live in a District where the police authority and every man of the police authority may be an enemy and wholly irresponsible to the Executive.

Mr. MILLS. It is a well-known constitutional and legal maxim that the special provisions of a law always control the general. The Constitution of the United States in its general provisions declares the President shall appoint all officers. That is controlled by the special provision which confers upon the Congress of the United States plenary power to legislate for the District of Columbia; to legislate for it with the same powers a State Legislature has to legislate for a State.

That general provision conferring upon the President power to appoint all officers is limited and controlled by the special provision conferring upon Congress the power to govern this District. Now, here are two provisions lying right together in the Constitution; one provides for the organizing, arming, and disciplining of the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States. That is the express provision of the Constitution. The general provision of the Constitution is that every citizen of the Republic shall be entitled to trial by jury, while the special provision is that a soldier may be tried by a military court, and the special controls the general provision. So may a sailor in the Navy be tried by a naval court, and that is a special provision that governs the general provision that all citizens of the United States shall be entitled to trial by jury. Right following then in the same paragraph is the provision reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of officers of the militia and the authority of training the militia.

Now, the general provision is that the President shall appoint all officers; but here is a special provision that the appointment of the officers of the militia shall belong to the State government.

And then comes the next paragraph relating to the control of the District of Columbia, and the power is conferred on Congress to legislate exclusively for the District of Columbia. The point is made that legislation is law-making, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] read a decision from the State courts of Ohio, in which it was held that the Legislature may create an office and provide the manner in which it shall be filled and may do everything connected with it except to fill the office. The President of the United States is a part of the legislative power of this Government; and, if this part of the legislative power of the Government has not the power to make these appointments, how can the President have it?

No bill passing the two Houses of Congress can become a law until it has received the approval or assent of the President of the United States. He can either approve it or he can permit it to become a law by refusing to negative the bill, but no bill passing these two Houses can become a law of this land until it has received the assent, either positive or tacit, of the President. He is therefore a part of the legislative power. But, according to the position taken by the gentleman from Ohio, that legislation extends only to creating an office and doing everything about it except making the appointment. Then, according to that, Congress can create these offices and then authorize the President, who is a part of the legislative power, to fill them. If it can authorize the President, who is a part of the legislative power, to fill them, then Congress can authorize the House of Representatives, which is another part of the legislative power, or the Senate, which is also another part of the legislative power, to make the appointment, just as it could the President, for he is but a part of the legislative power.

The legislative power and the executive power sometimes meet in the same person; the two characters of power may be put together and a man may be designated to exercise either the one or the other power; and, while it may be true that the two Houses of Congress together may be prohibited from filling the offices, the law may provide that one portion of the legislative power may fill one office and another the other.

Mr. HENDEE. I move that all further debate upon this section and the amendments thereto be closed in one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. I desire to offer an amendment if it is in order.

Mr. HENDEE. Let the vote first be taken upon the pending amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first amendment pending is that offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. COX,] to strike out, in line 9, all after the word "commissioners" down to and including the word "expire," in line 28, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

The said commissioners shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold their offices for the term of three years.

To that amendment the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "commissioners," in line 9, down to and including the word "lot," in line 33, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

The three commissioners shall be chosen by the Senate and House of Representatives in joint session by a majority of votes of the members of the Senate and House of Representatives present, and in electing said commissioners each member of the Senate and House may cast as many votes for one candidate as there are representatives to be elected, or may distribute the same or equal parts thereof among the candidates, as he shall see fit, and the candidates highest in votes shall be declared elected.

Mr. YOUNG. What has become of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT?]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He withdrew it with the understanding that he would be recognized to renew it.

The question was taken upon the substitute offered by Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois; and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment offered by Mr. COX, of Ohio.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I call for the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; 38 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 84, nays 138, not voting 69; as follows:

The amendment was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I am paired with Mr. FREEMAN, of Pennsylvania, who is absent on account of sickness. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. BRAGG. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. POUND, who is absent by leave of the House. If he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. MAISH. My colleague, Mr. MACKEY, is detained at home by reason of illness.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am paired with Mr. POWERS, of Maine.

Mr. HAMILTON. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. ROBINSON. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. THOMPSON. I am paired with Mr. WILLIS, of New York. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. COLE. My colleague, Mr. MORGAN, is paired with Judge JAMES, of New York, on all political questions; and my colleague, Mr. POLLARD, is paired with Mr. DOUGLAS, of Virginia.

Mr. GARDNER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. DICKEY.

Mr. HAYES. I am paired with Mr. DEAN, of Massachusetts, on political and revenue questions. I have voted on this question; but I think it better to withdraw my vote, and I do so.

Mr. STONE, of Iowa. My colleague, Mr. PRICE, is at home sick. If here, he would vote "ay."

Mr. BREWER. My colleague, Mr. HUBBELL, is paired with Mr. BLISS, of New York.

Mr. STONE, of Michigan. My colleague, Mr. ELLSWORTH, is absent by reason of sickness. My colleague, Mr. WILLITS, is paired with Mr. HARDENBERGH, of New Jersey; and I am myself paired with Mr. ROBERTS, of Maryland.

Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire. I am paired with Mr. BAGLEY, of New York.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I am paired with Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. FORT. I move to amend by striking out of lines 9, 10, and 11 the words "an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army, whose lineal rank shall be above that of captain, and shall be detailed," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "a competent engineer to be selected;" so that the clause will read:

One of the said commissioners shall be a competent engineer, to be selected by the President for the term of three years, &c.

I desire to say but a word or two.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All debate upon the pending section and amendments thereto has been closed by order of the House.

Mr. FORT. I have but a word or two to say.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I must object, unless the same privilege be extended to one or two other gentlemen who want to be heard.

Mr. YOUNG. Let them all be heard.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not object, if the same courtesy is extended to others.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There can be no conditional objections; each application must rest upon its own merits.

Mr. FORT. All I have to say is that rank does not give qualifications to a civil officer.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not want to reply; and I am sure my friend from Illinois [Mr. FORT] will understand that my opposition to his speaking is not on any personal ground.

Mr. YOUNG. I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment.

Mr. FORT. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House limited debate on this section.

Mr. HUNTON. And I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides that the motion to reconsider is not in order because the House has partly executed the order of voting upon this section and amendments without further debate. Is there objection to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] proceeding to speak upon his amendment?

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. FORT; and upon a division there were—ayes 59, noes 82; no quorum voting.

Mr. CHALMERS. I call for tellers.

Mr. FORT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; there being but 19 in the affirmative, not one-fifth of the last vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] insist upon his call for tellers upon the ground that no quorum voted?

Mr. CHALMERS. I do.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FORT and Mr. HENDEE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 54, noes 97.

So the motion of Mr. FORT was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend by striking out "ten," in line 38 and inserting "five," so as to read "and shall have been actual residents of the District of Columbia for five years previous to their election." I ask unanimous consent to say that in my judgment this residence is long enough——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I must object to debate.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "five" and inserting "one."

The question being taken on Mr. RANDOLPH's amendment to the amendment, there were—ayes 36, noes 82.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurring on Mr. DUNNELL's amendment, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 90, noes 48.

Mr. HUNTON. I move to amend by inserting after the word "years," in line 12, the words "unless such detail be sooner revoked;" so as to keep this officer under the command of the President. This amendment is offered after consultation with the committee.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. CONGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 16, after the word "Army," all of the section to and including the word "thereof," in line 55, and insert:

The second and third of the said commissioners shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of one and two years respectively, and at the expiration of such term each of said offices shall be filled by appointment as aforesaid for the term of three years respectively thereafter.

Mr. MAYHAM. I raise the point of order this amendment has been once voted on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. The proposition has not yet been before the House.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 67, noes 95.

Mr. CONGER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. I offer the following amendment, for which I hope every member on the other side of the House as well as on this will vote:

Strike out in lines 3 and 4 the words "or appointed in the manner hereinafter directed," and insert "by the qualified electors of the District of Columbia;" so that the clause will read:

On the third Monday in the month of June, 1878, there shall be elected by the qualified electors of the District of Columbia three persons to be commissioners of the District of Columbia, &c.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move to strike out in lines 37 to 40 the words "and shall have been actual residents of the District of Columbia for five years previous to their election, and who have during that period claimed no residence elsewhere," so that residence shall not be a qualification required of these commissioners. As the Government is to give six-tenths of the money to support the expenses of this District, it ought to have the right to select commissioners from any part of the country it may please.

Mr. HUNTON. Debate is not in order.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 46, noes 82.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; there being—ayes 21, noes 132; less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Ohio. I move to amend by striking out all after "commissioners," in line 9, to and including the word "States," in line 37, and inserting the following:

The three commissioners herein provided for shall be elected by the qualified voters of the District of Columbia on the third Monday of April, 1879, and the commissioners so elected shall determine by lot which shall serve for the term of one, two, and three years respectively; and annually thereafter the qualified electors of said District shall elect one commissioner, who shall serve for the term of three years and until his successor is elected and qualified.

And the President of the United States is hereby authorized to detail such officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army for engineer of the District of Columbia as may be selected by said commissioners, who shall serve for the term of three years unless such detail is sooner revoked, and until his successor is elected and qualified. Said commissioners shall, at the time of their election, be citizens of the United States.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That such commissioners, so elected as aforesaid by the Senate and House of Representatives, shall each of them, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, take an oath or affirmation to support the Constitution of the United States, and to faithfully discharge the duties imposed upon him by law, and shall each give a bond, with sureties, to the United States, in the penal sum of $50,000, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office, and shall each receive for his services a compensation at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to amend by inserting before the word "sureties," in line 6, the words "good and sufficient."

Mr. BLACKBURN. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to amend by inserting after the word "office" in line 9, the words "which may be sued upon by any person aggrieved." We provide that these officers shall give bond. I propose to make that bond effective.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There is no objection to that.

Mr. CLYMER. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] to modify his amendment so as to read, "upon which suit may be brought."

Mr. BUCKNER. I modify the amendment so as to read, "upon which suit may be brought by any person aggrieved."

Mr. HANNA. If the purpose of this amendment is to give to any person who may allege a cause of grievance a right of action upon this bond, then I submit that no man upon earth will be willing to file such a bond. The purpose of requiring a bond is evidently to protect the interests of the District of Columbia; but it would be an unheard of proceeding in regulating municipal affairs to give every citizen of the District of Columbia a right of action upon this bond, wholly independent of the action of the District authorities. I submit to my friend from Missouri that no man would be willing to file a bond giving the right to Tom, Dick, and Harry to bring suit upon that bond.

Mr. BUCKNER. If this bond is given, I see no reason why all persons aggrieved shall not be authorized to sue upon the bond as well as the District of Columbia. These officers might act in such a way as that my rights or the rights of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HANNA,] or any other person might be affected.

Mr. HANNA. Each of these officers is directly responsible to the District government for his acts. If he is guilty of any act of malfeasance or default, the District has a right of action upon his bond.

But suppose in the discharge of his duties in improving streets or in erecting any improvements any property-holder who deems the judgment of that commissioner was to his detriment, operated to his disadvantage, operated to his injury—is it the gentleman's purpose every such party shall have the right of action on the bond of the commissioner and thus devil the officer out of existence? Such would be the effect of it. Such is not the purpose of an official bond of this character.

Mr. BUCKNER. I think the right of action would lie at common law if malicious injury should be done to property-holders by the action of these commissioners.

Mr. HANNA. If he does not discharge his duties his responsibility is to the authority to whom he gives the bond, and that authority has the right of action for malfeasance; but in no corporation do you give every man the right of action on a bond for alleged cause of grievance. To give such right of action would subject the officer to the annoyance of constant suits on the part of every person who fancied that he had grievance against him.

Mr. BUCKNER. I cannot see that this would do any injury; but, on the contrary, it would make these officers more circumspect in the performance of their duties, so as not to injure any parties affected by their action. I insist on my amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. KEIFER. I dissent from the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana. I think the principle is all over the country that bonds are given in such way that any person aggrieved, any person suffering any injury through the official act or conduct of the public officer giving the bond, shall have a right to sue on the bond of the officer. It would be strange if it were not true, for it would be equivalent to a denial to parties suffering wrong from a public officer to say he could not sue on the bond given. Right of action to sue on the bond is given in all such cases. It is so with marshals; it is so with policemen who are required to give bonds; it is so with justices of the peace, with constables; it is so with bonds given by administrators and executors and by all public officers. The law so far as I know provides where injury is done to the individual he shall have the right to sue on the bond of the officer doing the injury. I therefore think the amendment is quite a proper one.

Mr. BUCKNER's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move to strike out the words "so elected as aforesaid by the Senate and House of Representatives;" so it will read "that such commissioners and each of them," &c.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if that amendment be adopted it will take out at least one of the odious features of this bill. There is a distinction already made by the adoption of the first section between civilians and military men which if not offensive is at least imprudent. Why should a military man appointed as commissioner be released from giving a bond or taking an oath to do his duty, while the best man in the land, appointed by the Senate or the House, has to do both? I have as much respect for a military man as anybody ought to have, but I know a man is neither better nor worse because he belongs to the Army.

When you compel an honest civilian to give a bond of $50,000 and take an oath that he will discharge his duty and relieve the military man from giving any bond or taking any oath you ingraft upon the bill a feature which is both odious and unjust to every honorable and honest man who may be appointed to this position. I do not believe for a moment because a man belongs to the Army he is competent to discharge all the duties of a civilian. It does not follow that he is, because his education and experience have been in an entirely different line and for different purposes, and when you relieve him from giving a bond or taking an oath you assert the foolish doctrine to the world that a military man is as good without a bond or oath as a civilian can be made with both. I have in my mind now, Mr. Speaker, more than one military man whose record as a military man is not confined to this continent and whose deeds form a portion of the current history of your country, and yet it would not strike this House that the appointment of one of those gentlemen was proper as the rector of Epiphany or the pastor of Foundry church, and yet they are as much fitted for the one position by their military experience as they are for the other provided for in this bill. Strike out the obligation to give a bond and take an oath so far as it refers to the commissioners, or so amend the bill as it shall apply to all of them alike. If a man is a good military officer he ought not to refuse to give a bond and take an oath, and if he is a bad officer he ought to be compelled to give both. If the civilian is a good man he will not refuse to give a bond and take an oath. All should be compelled to give a bond and take an oath or they should be all relieved from so doing. There is certainly no good reason for relieving the military man and imposing obligations upon the civilians.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire, in opposing the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to state the reasons which operate upon the committee in requiring any oath or bond from a military member of this commission. He is detailed by the President in the discharge of his military duties in the Army. As such an officer he takes the oath with his commission. For that reason an additional oath was considered unnecessary. In regard to the bond, he has discharged his military duties under this detail, and if he is guilty of malfeasance or misfeasance he is liable to court-martial and dismissal from the Army. And the committee believe with unanimity that that was as good a security for the military man as the bond was for the civilian. We believe that the idea of a court-martial operates upon an officer of the Army to a greater extent than a bond would upon anybody else.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. With the permission of the gentleman reporting this bill, I ask unanimous consent to go back to section 3, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

There was no objection.

Section 3 was read, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the said commissioners of the District of Columbia shall be, and they are hereby, constituted a body-corporate, by the name of "the commissioners of the District of Columbia," and by that name shall have perpetual succession, and be capable in law to sue and be sued in any court whatsoever, and may have and use a common seal, which may be altered at pleasure; may acquire, rent, and hold property; may contract and be contracted with, (in all cases authorized by law;) and may, in appropriate ways, in court and elsewhere, consistent with this act, assert, defend, and maintain its rights and interests to the same extent that it would be lawful if the said commissioners of the District of Columbia were a municipality.

Mr. LAPHAM. I offer the following amendment:

In line 8, between the word "property" and the word "may," add the words "for corporate and municipal uses and purposes only."

It will be seen the power given by the section as reported is an unlimited power to acquire property. It certainly is not intended that the commissioners shall be allowed to acquire property except for the use of the District.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That as soon as the commissioner appointed as aforesaid shall have taken and subscribed the oath or affirmation hereinbefore described, and the two so elected as aforesaid shall have duly bonded as aforesaid, all the powers, rights, and privileges lawfully exercised by, and all property, estate, and effects now vested by law in and exercised by the commissioners appointed under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, shall be transferred to and be vested in said commissioners; and the functions of the commissioners so appointed under the act of June 20, 1874, shall cease and determine, and the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have power, subject to limitations herein provided, to apply the taxes or other revenues of said District to the payment of the current expenses thereof, to the support of the public schools, the fire department, and the police, and for that purpose shall take possession and supervision of all the offices, books, papers, records, moneys, credits, securities, assets, and accounts belonging or appertaining to the business or interests of the government of the District of Columbia, and exercise the power and authority aforesaid; but said commissioners, in the exercise of such power and authority, shall make no contract, nor incur any obligation other than such contracts and obligations as are hereinafter provided for and shall be approved by Congress. All taxes heretofore lawfully assessed and due, or to become due, shall be collected pursuant to law, except as herein otherwise provided; but said commissioners shall have no power to anticipate taxes by a sale or hypothecation of any such taxes or evidence thereof, but they may borrow, in anticipation of collection of revenue, not to exceed in any one year $200,000, at a rate of interest not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum; and said commissioners are hereby authorized to abolish any office, to consolidate two or more offices, reduce the number of employés, remove from office, and make appointments to any office under them authorized by law, subject to such limitations as are hereinafter provided: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to abate in anywise or interfere with any suit pending in favor of or against the District of Columbia or the commissioners thereof, or affect any rights or cause of action existing in favor of any citizen of the District of Columbia or any other person; but the same may be commenced or prosecuted to final judgment, and the corporation hereby created shall be bound thereby as if the suit had been originally commenced for or against the said corporation; and all final judgments recovered against said District shall be paid by warrant of the commissioners or a majority of them, on the Treasury.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to offer a verbal amendment at the fourth line. Instead of the phraseolgy "the two so elected as aforesaid shall have duly bonded as aforesaid" it should read, "shall have given bond as aforesaid."

I offer that amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HENDEE. I desire at this point to move to reconsider the votes by which all the amendments so far have been adopted or rejected, and I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the first paragraph of section 6, as follows:

SEC. 6. There shall be a council, consisting of twenty-four members, with duties and powers as hereinafter provided. No person shall be eligible as a member of said council who is not the owner of property in the District of Columbia of the assessed valuation of $3,000 or more, and who is not at the time of his election a citizen of the United States, and who has not been a permanent resident of the District of Columbia for five years previous to such election, without claim of residence elsewhere during that time, and who is not a resident of the election precinct from which he is chosen.

The following amendment was recommended by the committee:

In lines 4, 5, and 6, strike out the words "who is not the owner of property in the District of Columbia of the assessed valuation of $3,000 or more."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HANNA. I offer the following amendment:

In line 8 strike out "five" and insert "two;" so that it will read:

Who has not been a permanent resident of the District of Columbia two years previous to said election.

The question being taken on Mr. HANNA's amendment, there were—ayes 42, noes 94.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph of section 6:

Each male inhabitant of the District of Columbia above the age of twenty-one years, and who shall be a citizen of the United States, shall be entitled to vote at all elections for councilmen: Provided, He shall have been an actual, bona fide resident of said District of Columbia for the three years, and of the election precinct in which he offers to vote for the six months last preceding the election at which he offers to vote, claiming no residence elsewhere during that time, and who shall have paid the poll tax imposed upon him by law: And provided further, He shall have been duly registered as a qualified voter, as hereinafter provided.

The following amendment was reported by the committee:

In lines 44 and 45 strike out the words "and who shall have paid the poll tax imposed upon him by law."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HANNA. I offer the following amendment:

In line 41 strike out the word "three" and insert the word "one."

I have one suggestion to make. It is that, so far as I know, there is not a provision in the constitution of any State of the Union that requires a man to have been a resident of a district three years before he shall vote in it. I submit one year is a reasonable time and conforms to the rule adoped by the majority of the States of the Union.

The question being taken on Mr. HANNA's amendment, there were—ayes 42, noes 83.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not adopted.

Mr. HAYES. I offer the following amendment:

In line 41 strike out "three" and insert "two."

The amendment was not adopted.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to go back to a paragraph which has just been passed, and which is as follows:

At the first election, one member from each precinct shall be elected for one year, and one member therefrom shall be elected for two years; and thereafter one shall be elected annually in each precinct, who shall be elected for two years.

I desire to offer the following amendment:

In line 35 strike out the words "be elected" and insert the word "serve;" so that it will read:

One shall be elected annually in each precinct, who shall serve for two years.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is only a verbal amendment. I have no objection to its being made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I offer the following amendment:

In line 42 strike out "six" and insert "two;" so that it will read, "for the two months last preceding the election at which he offers to vote."

I will only remark that six months' residence in the precinct is a very long one to be required.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph of section 6:

Until Congress shall otherwise provide by law, the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall prescribe the time, place, and manner for holding elections for councilmen; shall appoint a board of registration prior to each general election, not to exceed three members in each election precinct, whose pay shall not exceed $2.50 a day each, who shall register the qualified electors in their respective precincts at such times and places as said commissioners shall prescribe; and said commissioners shall designate three inspectors in each election precinct to conduct said elections, and make returns thereof to said commissioners, who shall canvass the same, and issue certificates of election to those having the highest number of votes in their respective precincts; and said commissioners shall make all needful rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this act not otherwise herein provided for: Provided, That the first election for councilmen shall be held within sixty days from the passage of this act: And provided further, That said commissioners shall give notice by publication of all elections and registrations provided for by this act, by printed notices to be posted in convenient and public places in each election precinct in said District of Columbia at least thirty days prior to such election or registration.

Mr. REILLY. I offer the following amendment:

In line 52 strike out the words "not to exceed three members in each election precinct," and insert in line 51, after the word "registration," the words "to consist of three residents of the District."

The object of this amendment is to make the board of registration consist of three members for the entire District instead of three for each precinct.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph of section 6:

The appointment of all officers, agents, or employés of the District of Columbia whose salaries shall be at the rate of $1,500 per annum or more shall be made by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, subject to confirmation of said council.

Mr. LATHROP. I offer the following amendment:

In line 103, after the word "council," insert the words "provided no person shall be appointed to any office by said commissioners or confirmed by said council who has not been a bona fide resident of said District for at least one year prior to said appointment.

I offer that amendment simply by way of keeping the provisions of this act consistent one with another.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think that amendment may be accepted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph of section 6:

Before any moneys shall be raised or taxes levied and collected for the purpose of carrying on the Government of the District of Columbia, the said commissioners shall submit annually to the council for their approval a statement, showing in detail the work proposed to be undertaken by them during the fiscal year next ensuing, and the estimated cost thereof; and also an estimate in detail, which shall include the cost of all courts in said District, except the United States courts, the judges, officers, witnesses, jail fees, and all expenses incident thereto; also the cost of constructing, repairing, and maintaining all bridges, authorized by law, across the Potomac River, within the District of Columbia, and also all other streams in said District; the cost of maintaining all public institutions of charity, asylums, hospitals, reformatories, and prisons, and the Washington Aqueduct and its appurtenances, belonging to and controlled by the District of Columbia, and which are now by law supported, wholly or in part, by the United States or District of Columbia, of the amount necessary to defray the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the next fiscal year.

From line 157 to line 163 strike out these words:

And the Washington Aqueduct and its appurtenances, belonging to and controlled by the District of Columbia, and which are now by law supported, wholly or in part, by the United States or District of Columbia, of the amount necessary to defray the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the next fiscal year.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

Belonging to or controlled, wholly or in part, by the District of Columbia, and which are now by law supported, wholly or in part by the United States or District of Columbia, and also the expenses of the Washington Aqueduct and its appurtenances, the United States jail, and the reform school of the amount necessary to defray the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the next fiscal year.

Mr. HENDEE. I desire to amend the amendment by striking out the words "the United States jail, and the reform school." They have been inserted by mistake.

The amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I offer the following amendment to come in after the amendment just adopted:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as transferring from the United States authorities any of the public works within the District of Columbia now in the control or supervision of said authorities.

Mr. HENDEE. There is no objection to that.

The question was put upon the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan, and it was agreed to.

Mr. EDEN. I offer a formal amendment to strike out the last word simply for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. HENDEE.] I would ask him whether, under the provision of this paragraph or this bill, there will be any such thing as special assessment upon property for improvements that may be made adjacent to it?

Mr. HENDEE. Certainly not.

Mr. EDEN. That is what I supposed, and I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

To the extent to which Congress shall approve the said estimates they shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent. thereof, and the remaining 50 per cent.

thereof shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property in said District other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia, in such manner as the commissioners of the District of Columbia may deem best, and shall be collected in the manner now provided by law for the collection of taxes in said District, with such change in the manner of advertising sales for taxes as may seem expedient to said commissioners: Provided, That the rate of taxation in any one year shall not exceed $1.50 on every $100 of real and personal estate not exempt by law, according to the cash valuation thereof: And provided further, Upon lands used and held solely for agricultural purposes, and to be so designated by the assessors in their annual returns, the rate for any one year shall not exceed $1 on every $100.

The committee recommended an amendment to strike out in line 198 "fifty" and to insert in lieu thereof "seventy-five;" so that it will read:

Provided, That the rate of taxation in any one year shall not exceed $1.75 on every $100 of real and personal estate.

Mr. HENDEE. I desire to say that that amendment was considered by a portion of the committee as a mistake, and I hope it will not be agreed to, but that $1.50 will be retained as the rate of taxation.

Mr. EDEN. As the bill relieves the whole property of the city from special assessments which have been the great hardship on property-holders here, it seems to me that $1.75 would not at all be an excessive rate.

Mr. FORT. Is the tax limited on personal property or only upon real estate?

Mr. HENDEE. There is a law in the District of Columbia which provides for the taxation of personal as well as real estate.

Mr. FORT. Which law is not repealed by this bill?

Mr. HENDEE. It is not.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I do not think that this amendment was ever formally acted upon by the committee, so that I cannot say whether or not it meets the approval of the committee, but this simply fixes the maximum at $1.75 on every hundred dollars, and it will do no harm to insert it.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to strike out $1.75 and to insert $2.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri and the House to the fact that while the assessment will be according to these several rates, either one and one-half or one and three-quarters or $2, that that is only one-half of what may be expected, because the Government has to pay one-half and that would make the percentage on the taxable property of the District of Columbia 3¼ or 4 per cent.

Mr. EDEN. The amount is in the discretion of Congress.

Mr. BUCKNER. I want to say in reference to this matter that I do not understand how it is possible for this District to get along with an assessment merely of 1½ per cent. on property here, as provided in this bill, and provide for the interest on the debt. The interest upon the debt of the District to-day is a million of dollars at least, and they propose that the Government shall pay half. Suppose they raise as much hereafter as this year, the whole amount will not exceed $3,000,000. One million of that is to be taken for the payment of the interest on the loan, and there would be only two millions left to carry on the government and improve the streets and to provide for the other wants of the District.

There is another point, Mr. Speaker, that ought to be looked into here. This Government is under a pledge to see by this appropriation and by taxation that $13,000,000 is paid within fifteen years. There is no appropriation here for that.

But it is said that the people here are paying very high taxes. I undertake to say that there is no city in the United States where the taxes do not exceed 2 per cent. on the valuation, and it is a mistake to suppose that the people here are not as able to pay taxes as the people in other sections of the country; and if we propose to do anything toward paying the debt at all the tax should be increased, even with the 50 per cent. which the Government is to pay.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. What I desire to get distinctly stated is this: the law provides that the taxation levied by the authorities of the District may be according to this bill 1½ per cent.; the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] proposes to make it 2 per cent. Another provision of the bill provides that the United States Government shall pay out of its Treasury an equal amount. Let it therefore be understood that this provision is that to the extent of 2 per cent. on the total taxable property of the District a yearly burden shall be placed on the United States Treasury and the total expenditures of the District may amount to 4 per cent. of the whole of the property, of which the United States shall pay 2 per cent. If anybody wants that done they can vote for the amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. I propose to ask the gentleman from Ohio what would be the total amount collected at the rate of 2 per cent?

Mr. COX, of Ohio. It will give about $4,000,000.

Mr. COX, of New York. They will be sure to raise it up to the full amount.

Mr. BUCKNER. Let me state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that 1½ per cent. will raise only about $1,500,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] will not prevail. If it shall be adopted it will impose an additional burden upon the National Treasury of half a million of dollars a year. I believe we should adopt the rate fixed in the bill originally, $1.50 on the $100. The burden upon the National Treasury will be heavy enough even then, as already demonstrated. The rate of 1½ per cent. is to be assessed upon the property of this District, and that, together with the contribution of the National Government, will give the amount of $3,000,000 a year. If you were to assess $2 per $100 upon the property of the District then with the proportion paid by the General Government there will be raised the sum of $4,000,000. I am satisfied that if the Government of the District of Columbia is administered properly and economically it will need not more than $3,000,000, probably not so much.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I think gentlemen are all mistaken as to the amount to be paid by the United States. The proportion which the United States is to pay is upon the estimates made by the commissioners and the council. It is of those estimates that the United States is to pay the half, not on the amount of taxation. And this $1.75 per $100 which is proposed in this bill is merely the maximum which may be assessed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to say that if every member of this House will read one other section of this bill he will see that this bill does not propose to make the Federal Government responsible for one dollar of the debt of the District or one dollar of the interest on that debt. It simply proposes to make the Government of the United States bear one-half of the current expenses of the District.

Then it goes further and provides that as the Federal Government is already bound to guarantee the payment of the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District, every dollar that the Government of the United States pays as interest on that bonded debt of the District shall be accredited to it upon such portion of the current expenses as it assumes. This bill nowhere makes the Federal Treasury responsible for one dollar of the debt of this District either of the principal or of the interest. But it does say that the Government of the United States shall pay 50 per cent. of the current expenses of the District, and that it shall have credit on that payment for every dollar of interest that it pays.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I insist upon it that this bill does not and cannot bear the interpretation which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] seeks to give it. The bill provides that estimates shall be made for the current expenses of the government of the District. Now if, with that language, gentlemen can delude themselves into the idea that it does not mean the interest on the current debt of the District then they can do what I cannot do.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to one thing. We are to-day bound by law to guarantee the interest of the 3.65 bonds.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I deny that entirely.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I deny that we are bound for the principal, but the law does say that Congress shall guarantee the payment of the interest.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. No, sir.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman be kind enough to read section 8 of this bill?

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I have read it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. He will find that in that section it is provided——

Mr. HENDEE. Let the Clerk read the section.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no objection.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. It can be read when we come to it. The question is whether or not, under the language which has been read, the interest of the debt of the District is part of the current expense of the District. I insist that with that language before it no court could make it otherwise.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let the section be read by the Clerk.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Certainly; I have no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That until otherwise provided by law, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest accruing on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia as the same matures, and the amounts so paid shall be credited as part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District, as herein provided: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed or considered as an acknowledgment of any liability on the part of the United States to pay the principal of said bonds otherwise than as provided in the seventh section of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. The language of that section demonstrates the fact that I was stating. It provides that the amount so paid by the Government of the United States on the interest of the debt of the District "shall be credited as part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District." It thereby recognizes the fact that this bill makes the interest on the debt of the District a part of the current expenses of the District, of which the Government of the United States is to pay 50 per cent. There is no way of getting from it. If gentlemen of the Committee for the District of Columbia did not intend that, then they should have used other language in the bill.

This bill provides that the Government shall assume what we never agreed it should assume. The United States does not stand to-day and never has stood as guarantors either for the principal or the interest of the debt of the District. Congress simply said that as the supreme Legislature for this District it would see to it that the District assessed and collected enough to pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds. And now we already find the Committee for the District of Columbia telling us that we thereby promised to pay that interest out of the Treasury of the United States. We never promised to pay a dollar out of the Treasury for that purpose.

Mr. HENDEE. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COX] misstates the original law.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] is mistaken. I have stated it not only in accordance with my own remembrance of the law, but in accordance with the recollection of gentlemen who were here when the law was passed and took part in the debate upon it.

Mr. HENDEE. I will read the language of the act if the gentleman will permit, for he may like to read it in the RECORD to-morrow:

And the faith of the Government is hereby pledged that the United States, by proper proportional appropriations—

Not by making the District pay, as contemplated in this bill—and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Now I ask the gentleman——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. COX, of New York, obtained the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri moving to insert "$2" instead of "$1.75."

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. It seems to be taken for granted by gentlemen here that the United States are bound in some way or other to pay for running the District of Columbia. I cannot so understand it. Twenty years ago, when I first came to this city, it was considered a kindness and benevolence to give some little aid (such as an appropriation for lamplighting on Pennsylvania avenue or something of that kind) to this city, which was chosen as the capital of the nation. Since that time, under our increasing bounty to this District, there has grown up a claim which is asserted or demanded as a matter of right. But this District has no right to ask my constituents or the constituents of other gentlemen to pay toward the expenses of the District an equal amount with that which citizens here raise by taxation. It is not just. It is hard enough for our different municipalities and our States to pay their own domestic taxes.

Mr. BUCKNER. Does my friend mean to say that he is going to repudiate the obligation of the Government?

Mr. COX, of New York. I agree with my friend from Ohio, [Mr. COX.] I do not understand that it is repudiating any obligation when we say that the United States are not bound to pay the interest on this debt. I will say to my friend from Missouri that people do not always travel East to find repudiation, although I have been informed otherwise by gentlemen on the Banking and Currency Committee. This bill should not be amended in the manner proposed by the gentleman from Missouri. I do not believe in naming in the bill even $1.75, if it proceeds upon the idea that one-half of the expenses of this District are to be paid from the United States Treasury and if it be provided and understood that the District when it pays the other half fixes the half which the Federal Government has to pay. It is not right that we should contribute even 40 per cent. or 30 per cent. of these expenses, much less 50 per cent. This city enjoys an extraordinary advantage. It has the seat of a great Government located here. That fact enhances immensely its values. If we should only remove the seat of Government to some prairie in Missouri how soon this would appear. Suppose a joint stock company should be raised, as it could be in five minutes, to locate another seat of Government, what would all the property be worth here. Would not such a movement be so organized as to insure us a seat of Government where the people would not be forever clamoring, like the daughter of the horse-leech. I will vote for almost anything to relieve our home people from taxation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to read a single sentence in an act approved June 20, 1874, in order to let the House see whether he and the gentleman from Ohio are right when they say that the Government is under no obligation whatever in this regard? I read from page 120 of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 18:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

Mr. COX, of New York. That does not bear out the gentleman's position.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply desire to ask in the face of that provision whether there was to be no proportionate assessment of expenses between the Government and the District.

Mr. COX, of New York. If that were so understood, I would vote to repeal the statute. I do not believe such was the intention when it was passed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let the gentleman introduce his bill to that effect; but he should not deny the responsibility of the Government while the statute stands unrepealed.

Mr. HENDEE. The gentleman from New York voted for that act.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BUCKNER, it was not agreed to.

Mr. BEEBE. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that if the House should adjourn this bill will go over till to-morrow as unfinished business.

Mr. THOMPSON. That would be a question of order to be decided to-morrow.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Mr. COX, of New York, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Mr. GARFIELD. There ought to be a provision in that resolution that the committee shall have power to sit during the recess.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will so modify the resolution by adding the words "and, further, that said committee shall have the right to sit during the recess."

The resolution, as modified, was adpoted.

Mr. COX, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CAPTAIN HURTT.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 7, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. No. 3546) to change the name of the steamboat D. A. McDonald to Silver Wave;

A bill (H. R. No. 3978) to authorize the Barataria Ship-Canal Company to construct and operate a ship-canal from New Orleans to the Gulf of Mexico through the lands and waters of the United States, and to grant to said company the right of way for that purpose; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4674) to aid vessels wrecked or disabled in the waters conterminous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada.

The bill (H. R. No. 4104) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. No. 3828) to amend section 23 of the act approved June 22, 1874, entitled "An act to amend customs-revenue laws, and to repeal moieties," was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce, if there be no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WHYTE. I hope not. I think it ought to go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not covet this bill at all, but I merely desire to say that the bill in relation to moieties on a former occasion was reported by the Committee on Finance. This bill relates to that and nothing else, as I understand.

Mr. WHYTE. The bill passed the House. It was referred to the Committee on Commerce there.

Mr. MORRILL. I know it was.

Mr. WHYTE. It has reference simply to the salaries of surveyors of certain ports and it repeals the moieties which go toward paying their salaries. That is all there is in it.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand it. The bill relates to some surveyors who were omitted in the former bill. I do not insist that the bill shall be referred to the Committee on Finance, as the Committee on Commerce of the other House prepared it, but the former bill in relation to moieties was reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator from Vermont is quite right; the other bill did go to the Committee on Finance. I confess I thought then, and think now, it did not belong there, but having gone to it, that committee having acted upon it, I think this bill should go to the same committee. And that is not my opinion alone; it is also the opinion of other members of the Committee on Commerce who think it should go to the Committee on Finance properly now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont suggests that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

RETIREMENT OF LEGAL-TENDER NOTES.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill (H. R. No. 4663) to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes, which was read the first time yesterday, be taken from the table and read the second time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question of second reading will come up under the call for resolutions, and is not in order now.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I present the memorial of a large number of merchants of the United States in relation to telegraphic communication between this and other countries; and as it is very short, I ask that it may be read at the Clerk's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read in the absence of objection.

The memorial was read, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the undersigned, who are in no way interested in existing telegraphic cables, respectfully represents:

That the vast interests involved in the maintenance of telegraphic communications between the United States and the rest of the world require the utmost facility to be given therefor, and your honorable bodies are therefore earnestly requested to reject all applications for exclusive privileges, and to pass a law giving permission to any and all persons and companies, without preference, to land telegraphic cables on the shores of the United States, and through them keep up telegraphic communication between this and other countries.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask that the memorial be referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, presented the memorial of Colonel Leonard F. Ross and other citizens of Galesburgh, Illinois, praying for the passage of a bill granting pensions to the survivors of the Mexican war, with an accompanying letter from the secretary of the First Illinois Association; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS presented resolutions of the Merchants' Exchange of Nashville, Tennessee, in the nature of a petition, praying that the law imposing a tax of 10 per cent. upon the circulating notes of banks other than national banks be repealed; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of the mayor, aldermen, and common council of the city of Boston, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 4245) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint James Shields, of Missouri, a brigadier-general in the United States Army, on the retired list; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of C. C. McKay and others, citizens of Marion County, Alabama; the petition of C. C. Merrick, of Alabama; the petition of J. C. White and others, of Madison County, Alabama; the petition of J. M. Doyle and others, citizens of Blount County, Alabama; the petition of E. P. Jones and others, citizens of Fayette County, Alabama; the petition of F. A. Gamble and others, citizens of Walker County, Alabama; and the petition of Andrew J. Ingle and others, citizens of Winston County, Alabama, praying for a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Warrior and Tennessee Rivers Railroad; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the petition of James Freeman and others, citizens of Camden, New Jersey, praying for the enactment of a law making six hours a day's work for all workingmen in Government employ; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CONKLING presented a petition signed by a large number of citizens of New York, members of the Chamber of Commerce, bankers, and others, praying for an increased appropriation to improve the Harlem River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Delaware County, New York, praying that the bankrupt law be not repealed, but that it be amended; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SARGENT. I present the petition of citizens of Santa Barbara County, California, praying for an appropriation to survey the Bay of Santa Barbara in order to determine the cost of the construction of a harbor of refuge and giving good reasons why such a harbor should be established there. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BURNSIDE, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the petition of Theophilus Fisk Mills, praying an appropriation of $100,000 to be paid as a reward to any American citizen who shall produce, in wood, a certain kind of two-foot measure, &c., asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Patents; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2502) directing the payment of the claim of August Pensler, Third Ohio Independent Cavalry, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 934) for the relief of H. M. Billingsley, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 806) for the relief of George T. Marshall, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. DORSEY, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4246) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. DORSEY. From the same committee I report back an amendment to the bill just reported, offered by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, so that the latter committee can move it in the Senate. I desire to say that the Committee on Appropriations do not formally express an opinion upon this amendment, and certainly nothing adverse to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will go with the bill to which it is proposed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I reserve all points of order on that.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 103) additional to section 1000 of the Revised Statutes, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. OGLESBY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2334) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the bill (H. R. No. 330) for the benefit of Alderson T. Keene, late first lieutenant of Company E, First Kentucky Cavalry, the bill (S. No. 804) for the relief of Frank Arnim, and the bill (S. No. 799) for the relief of Willis N. Arnold, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 981) for the relief of Howell H. Trask, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 567) for the relief of William Carruthers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. RANDOLPH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1030) donating material of war to the Washington Association of New Jersey, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John Harrison, of Quincy, Illinois, praying compensation for services rendered as a scout during the late war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 861) relating to telegraphic communication between the United States and foreign countries, reported it without amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 796) for the relief of John Henderson, have instructed me to report it without amendment favorably. I will file with the bill a statement of the facts in relation to the case. I will say that the committee are unanimous in the report.

Mr. SAULSBURY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 980) for the relief of Charles Collins, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 169) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Patents; which was agreed to.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HOWE. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. No. 20) relative to Chinese immigration, to report a concurrent resolution as a substitute for the joint resolution, somewhat modified, and recommend its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the provisions of the existing treaty between the Empire of China and the United States allowing the unrestricted emigration to this country from China might wisely be modified, so as to subserve the best interests of both governments; and the attention of the Executive is respectfully invited to the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution of the House of Representatives to print extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1876 for the use of the Commissioner, to report it without amendment and recommend its passage. The resolution provides for printing 5,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner and none for distribution by Senators and Representatives. The cost on fifty-three-pound paper would be $3,871.25, and on forty-five-pound paper $3,448.35. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and concurred in, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That 5,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education for the year 1876 be printed for distribution by the Commissioner of Education.

THE TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Special Committee on the Census to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Special Committee on the Census have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, the House of Representatives, it will be recollected, sent us a resolution asking for the appointment of a joint committee, but upon a conference with members of the House it is concluded that the committees may be appointed by each House, like that on the Library, and on Public Buildings and Grounds, with power to act jointly, which will answer the purpose. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With great respect to my colleague, I move to amend the resolution by striking out the word "jointly," and inserting the word "concurrently," for the word "jointly" would imply an amalgamation wherein the Senate committee might be outvoted by the House members and one Senator, which my colleague would not want the Senate to concur in. "Concurrently" will answer the purpose.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to the suggestion, but still it is the same word which is used in relation to the committees I have referred to, precisely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be, but it is wrong.

Mr. MORRILL. It is the same word precisely. My colleague has been master of the rules a long time, and I thought he would have them amended if they were incorrect.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should have done so, if I were on the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so modified, by inserting the word "concurrently" instead of "jointly."

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that he say "any like committee appointed by the House of Representatives."

Mr. MORRILL. The resolution is in the language used in the present rules.

Mr. DAWES. Of course it is a matter of no great consequence, relating merely to phraseology, but to say "the same committee appointed by the House of Representatives" is an absurdity.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It should be "the committee on the same subject."

Mr. DAWES. "On the same subject," or "any like committee," would do, but "the same committee" means the honorable Senators who are acting on this committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On this last point my colleague has cited the present standing rules correctly as a precedent for the use of the words "same committee." As to the Library Committee the rule says:

A Committee on the Library, to consist of three Senators, who shall have power also to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.

On the first point, where I made the suggestion to change from "jointly" to "concurrently," the answer that I make is the Committee on the Library has been always and was designed to be a joint committee, that votes per capita when it meets. I happen to know that from the circumstance that I am a member of the Committee on the Library. How the word "same" got in, I do not know. That I have no explanation for.

Mr. MORRILL. Under the suggestion of the Senator fram Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] I move to strike out "same" and insert "like."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Modify it. There will be no objection to that.

Mr. MORRILL. I will modify it in that respect and, I will add further, "with power to sit during the recess of Congress," as that power has been already given to the House committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the resolution as modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Special Committee on the Census shall have power to act concurrently with the like committee of the House of Representatives, and with power to sit during the recess of Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the same committee to report back the resolution of the House relating to this subject and ask for its indefinite postponement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the House concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein,) That a joint committee to be denominated "Joint Committee on the Census," be appointed to consider and report upon the proper measures to be adopted for the taking of the next census; and that the said committee may report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the resolution of the House be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

BANKRUPT-LAW REPEAL.

Mr. THURMAN. I was told this morning when I came in that a patriotic debate was inaugurated yesterday which occupied most of the day and was likely to occupy most of to-day. If so, that is pushing over the bill for the repeal of the bankrupt law until not only day after to-morrow but the day after that, for the Indian appropriation bill will take up all of the day after to-morrow, probably. I therefore, if it is the pleasure of the Senate, would like to ask for the consideration of the bill for the repeal of the bankrupt law now, in order that we may vote on the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us get through with the morning business first.

Mr. COCKRELL. The morning business is first in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The introduction of bills is next in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. THURMAN. I have been requested to introduce a bill to alter and amend the laws relative to the filing of reports of Pacific Railroad Companies, and for other purposes. This bill was drafted by one of the clerks in the Treasury Department who has had charge of those accounts, and he writes me that the honorable Secretary of the Interior and his Assistant Attorney-General have examined the bill and it has their approval. I have not read it myself, but I think under those circumstances I can introduce it, which I do, and ask its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1200) to alter and amend the laws relative to the filing of reports of Pacific Railroad Companies, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DORSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1201) for the relief of Drury Bynum; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1202) for the relief of William A. Britton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1203) to repeal the act of Congress approved April 3, A. D. 1878, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the support of the government for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878,' and for other purposes;" which was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the circumstance that it appears very plain to my mind on looking at the act of the 3d of April, 1878, which amends the last year's tax act, that the effect of it is to relieve all the tax-payers from paying the last installment of last year's tax, and to postpone that for six months from the time this act operates; and I think it is deserving of the immediate consideration of the committee.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1204) for the relief of Mrs. Sophia Richardson, of Newburyport, Massachusetts, and J. A. Richardson, of New York City, New York; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Claims.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I desire to have entered an order authorizing Louis Koerth to withdraw the papers filed by him this session claiming a pension. His claim was rejected by the Pension Committee on the ground that he had not been before the Commissioner of Pensions. He asks leave to withdraw the papers that he may file them in that office.

The order was agreed to.

SAINT JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD.

Mr. PADDOCK submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be, and hereby is, requested to communicate to the Senate such information as the Government may possess in relation to the amount of the land-grant subsidy to the Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad, the present condition of such grant, what disposition and use has been made of the same, the number of miles of completed road, and whether it has been finished to the point of connection with the Union Pacific designated by the survey of the line of such road now on file with the Secretary of the Interior; and, if not, what explanation, if any, is made by the company of its failure to make such connection as required by the act granting lands in aid of its construction.

AMENDMENTS TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. BECK, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. SARGENT submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-roads in the several States therein named; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

RETIREMENT OF LEGAL-TENDER NOTES.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill (H. R. No. 4663) to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes be taken from the table and read the second time, not for the purpose of having action upon the bill this morning at all, but simply that it may be read in its regular order the second time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read the second time, if there be no objection.

Mr. INGALLS and Mr. CONKLING. I ask that it may be read in full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the bill will not be referred to the Committee on Finance, and upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays. The Senate is just as competent to consider the bill as the Committee on Finance. Every Senator must have made up his mind upon the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I myself should like to hear the bill read again, and I have no doubt many other Senators would like to have it read again.

Mr. CONKLING. Before the bill is read again I want to ask a question. I asked for the reading for information. Another Senator understood that it was the regular second reading of the bill. I did not. I wish to inquire how this bill came to be read the second time this morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the first reading yesterday the second reading was objected to and the bill was ordered to lie upon the table, and it has now been called up by the Senator from Missouri for a second reading.

Mr. CONKLING. How is it in order to bring it up now, without a vote of the Senate, to be read the second time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the motion of the Senator from Missouri, to which there was no objection.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg pardon of the Chair. The Senator from Missouri proposed to take it up. I asked to have it read for information, and no vote has been taken on taking it up; no unanimous consent has been given. I understand that it has not been read a second time except at my request for information to know what the bill was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would remind the Senator from New York that he stated that the question was upon the second reading of the bill, and the Senator from Kansas asked for its reading at length. The Chair responded that the bill would be read at length. However, the Chair will put the question upon the second reading of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I rise to a question of order. Is it not the right of a Senator to have this bill read the second time, whether there is objection to it or not?

Mr. CONKLING. It is not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill lies on the table and it requires a motion of the Senate to take it from the table. As the Senator from New York says he did not consider the reading at length to be the second reading, and as the reading was under a misapprehension, the Chair will submit the question to the Senate shall the bill be taken from the table for second reading?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the proper question.

Mr. THURMAN. Let the bill be read now.

Mr. CONKLING. For information. I object to its being read except for information.

Mr. THURMAN. Let the bill be read for information. I do not know what the bill is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read for information.

The Chief Clerk again read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury, or other officer under him, to cancel or retire any more of the United States legal-tender notes. And when any of said notes may be redeemed or be received into the Treasury, under any law, from any source whatever, and shall belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed; but they shall be reissued and paid out again, and kept in circulation: Provided, That nothing herein shall prohibit the cancellation and destruction of mutilated notes, and the issue of other notes of like denomination in their stead, as now provided by law.

All acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri now moves that this bill be taken from the table for the purpose of having it read the second time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. For the purpose of consideration. It can only be taken from the table. The question what we shall do with it arises afterward.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has to put the motion as made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I raise the question of order that the motion is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My question of order is that it is not in order to move to take up a bill for a particular purpose at all. It is only in order under the rules to move to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I modify my motion. I move to take up the bill, with the intention of having it read the second time when it is taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves to take from the table the House bill just read, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON] would, if present, vote "nay." I have a dispatch from him to that effect. My colleague is detained at home by sickness.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 33, nays 25; as follows:

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I ask for the second reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks for the second reading of the bill. The bill will be read a second time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think you had better put the question, Mr. President, and take all the steps in this business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the second reading of the bill.

The question being put, a division was called for.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I hope the call for the yeas and nays will be withdrawn. We can divide on this subject, certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We are dividing when we have the yeas and nays, in a very marked manner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to say in a word that I vote against taking up this bill, as I shall vote against every other measure calculated, as this possibly may be, to unsettle the business of the country by tinkering and tampering with the currency. So far as I am concerned, I want to let well enough alone.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. COCKRELL and others. Debate is not in order during the call of the roll.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 34, nays 23; as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will now be read the second time. The Senate has ordered the second reading of the bill and it will be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I now move that this bill be referred to the Committee on Finance. I cannot understand that there should be any objection to referring a bill of this kind to that committee. I am certain that the committee has never in any instance undertaken to smother any bill or proposition sent to it, but has considered all such bills and with reasonable dispatch. I may add in connection with this matter that the whole subject is now before the Senate, only laid by informally for action on the bankrupt bill and the appropriation bills. As soon as those bills are out of the way, the whole subject will come up and then the will of the Senate of course will be carried out.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the bill will not be referred. The Senate is just as competent to act on this bill as the Finance Committee. The Finance Committee of the Senate has already given the Senate its full wisdom in bills reported and now before the Senate upon this question. I hope it will not be referred, and I shall ask then that it be placed upon the table and at a proper time I shall ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it would be difficult to describe a measure which calls for orderly consideration more emphatically than the one now before the Senate. If there ever was a reason, a time, an occasion, a measure in which regularity of proceeding should be observed, it is in relation to the pending bill. It is not the question of the wisdom or the unwisdom of the Committee on Finance; it is a question of the regularity of proceeding in a parliamentary body; and no reason has been suggested, and very respectfully I say that none will be suggested, why this measure should not follow the course of orderly proceeding of the Senate. The rules of the Senate are not merely formal, they are meant to promote deliberation, and deliberation for the purpose of justice that laws should be enacted by method and by form, and that they should at all stages be carefully sifted and examined. It is indeed an extraordinary case when a measure coming before the Senate shall not be submitted to the usual organ of the Senate for its examination and report, and this is one that especially requires it. If any good reason can be given for disturbing the usual form of proceeding let the reason be given rather than the hot haste that seems to mark some minds in this body.

I trust that there will be no hesitancy on the part of the Senate in committing this bill according to the rules of the Senate. Whatever is the will of the majority of the Senate is in the end bound to be vindicated, and the measure will become a law so far as the action of the Senate can make it one by the will of the majority, and there is no disposition that I am aware of to interpose any course of a dilatory nature to prevent the prompt consideration of this measure, only asking that it shall be in due form and subject to the regular methods of law.

I can scarcely say that I hope there will be no objection to a reference, for objection has been intimated, but I trust that the Senate will see the necessity in the present case of allowing this bill to follow the ordinary course of procedure and go to the committee appointed by the Senate for its due consideration.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. President——

Mr. SARGENT. Regular order.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) granting the use of tents at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Des Moines, Iowa; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 285) granting a pension to Elizabeth D. Stone;

A bill (S. No. 328) granting a pension to Mrs. Esther A. George;

A bill (S. No. 697) granting a pension to Anna L. Robbins;

A bill (S. No. 703) granting a pension to Melvina A. Maltby;

A bill (S. No. 724) granting a pension to Nancy E. McClelland;

A bill (S. No. 755) granting a pension to Martha C. Kendall;

A bill (S. No. 869) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Wilkes, widow of the late Admiral Charles Wilkes, United States Navy; and

A bill (S. No. 873) granting a pension to Hannah Streets.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. SARGENT. I call for the regular order, being the pension appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California calls for the regular order, which is House bill No. 3974. The Secretary will report the bill by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. No. 3974) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1879."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on Finance as amended. The Secretary will report the question.

The CHIEF CLERK. The second section of the bill has been amended so as to read:

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act, in case of vacancy from any cause, the office of pension agent shall be filled by wounded or disabled Union soldiers or the widows or daughters of Union soldiers.

It is proposed to strike out that section as amended and insert:

That on the 1st day of January, 1879, the terms of office of all pension agents shall expire, and thereafter honorably discharged wounded or disabled Union soldiers, or the widows or daughters of Union soldiers, shall be appointed to said offices.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not wish to reopen the discussion. I will only remark that I trust the Senate will sustain the bill as amended instead of putting on this amendment. I will not go into the reasons for it; I merely express that wish The section as amended is simply that in case of vacancies, wounded or disabled soldiers, their widows and orphans, shall have these places. The amendment provides that on the 1st of January the offices shall be emptied and the same class of persons have them.

Yesterday in a preliminary statement in reference to this bill I said that the number of 22,250 pensioners had been placed on the roll by authority of the act pensioning the survivors of the war of 1812 and their widows, passed at the present session, the act of March 9, 1878. I was in error so far as stating that that number had been put on the roll. It was an estimate of the number that would necessarily be put on the roll. The whole number up to last Saturday that had been placed on the roll under that legislation was 10,491, as I was informed this morning by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS. That is the number of applications.

Mr. SARGENT. The number that have been placed on the roll up to last Saturday was 10,491, if I am capable of understanding a direct statement by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS. I inquired on that subject yesterday. That is the number of applications, not the number of those who have been placed on the roll.

Mr. SARGENT. I am very sorry that I am not able to understand the English language when spoken. I went to the Commissioner of Pensions this morning, told him the statement made by myself in the Senate yesterday, and asked him what the fact was as to the number actually placed on the roll, and he said 10,491 at $8 a month. If not, I should like to know why we are appropriating a million and a half of dollars under the legislation of March 9, 1878.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The soldiers of 1812 said to be a few hundred have got up to 10,000 now.

Mr. SARGENT. I pointed the moral by saying that a few lines in a pension bill sometimes cost the Government millions per annum to be paid indefinitely in the future. There are now thousands of men on the pension-roll who are survivors of the war of 1812 who served a few months in that war. It is something that is somewhat baffling I think to insurance agencies the effect that the pension-rolls have upon longevity. It is nothing to regret, but it is certainly something to be remarked upon. Therefore I say that for an indefinite period in the future at least a million and a half is added annually to the pension roll. The estimate of those who will go on the roll is 22,252. My friend from Virginia in correcting my statement said that the whole number was between three and four thousand. The whole number in fact is nearly eleven thousand. That is all I wish to say on that matter, and I say it in order to set myself right because I do not like to make an erroneous statement even in a matter of statistics.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. Before the vote is taken I wish to ascertain from the Senator from California whether I am right in my understanding. If the amendment fails and the bill stands as the Senator would have it, hereafter preference is to be given to soldiers such as are described, their widows and daughters, when a vacancy occurs in the office of pension agent. It requires that they shall receive the appointment in preference to all others. If the amendment now proposed prevails, on a day which is fixed, the 1st of next January, all pension agents, good, bad, and indifferent, whether they be men or women, whether they have been recently appointed or have held for some time, are to be swept out altogether, and a set of new and uninstructed pension agents are to come in simultaneously all over the country. On such an amendment I venture to remark that, after all the theories and all the delusions, all the fictions and all the fables with which the public ear has been filled touching what is called civil service reform, it would perhaps be rash for me to assert that any new suggestion can go further from the line of practical sense and experience than any former one has done; but I must say that among all the efforts of ingenuity to pervert and betwist and violate what would seem in the ordinary course of human transactions to be wise, few have fallen under my observation which can lay claim to originality so great as this.

Here are pension agencies, a great many of them differing very much in the vastness of the business which they transact. A consolidation has taken place recently which in the State of New York, for example, has committed to one agency a number of pensions to be paid so great that a doubt has been expressed whether a single agency could acquit itself properly of all the duties thus committed to it; and now in that case, where quite recently the Senate was asked to pass and did pass a special act to avoid the rigors of the statute as to the bail required, the suggestion is that the pension agent freshly appointed, by about the 1st of January becoming familiar if he has good fortune with his duties, and all others are to give way and a new agent everywhere is to be selected in every place on the same day, selected from a limited class of persons, and all of them to be new in the discharge of their duties.

Mr. DORSEY. How limited?

Mr. CONKLING. I only mean that in place of the appointing power going at large throughout the community to find persons variously skilled, persons skilled as accountants, wherever they may best be found, the selection is to be confined to one class of persons, namely, those who have served creditably in the military service; and the Senator from Massachusetts reminds me—and I believe that is the amendment—that it is still further restricted by confining it to those who have received wounds.

The honorable Senator who puts this question to me, of course will not misunderstand me by supposing that I mean to suggest that any class of persons more meritorious than this, any class who should be preferred for office, could possibly be suggested. I only mean that if the restriction was to a certain profession, whether to medical men, to lawyers, to merchants, to those who had been in any single walk of life, it would be a restriction upon the appointing power; and it seems to me to render more conspicuous than it would otherwise be, the hazard of undertaking at once all over the country, North, South, East, and West, to dismiss every pension agent, whether he has been such for one month or one year or eight years, and then resort being had to one single profession or class of citizens to supply their places on the same day with those the great body of whom must necessarily be new and untaught in the duties.

Mr. DORSEY. I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether in his judgment there are not plenty of wounded or disabled Union soldiers in the State of New York to supply these positions, who are abundantly capable, who are able to give the bond, who are in every way fitted, mentally, morally, and socially, just as much so as the person whom we confirmed the other day, and who, if I recollect aright, had a good deal of trouble in filing his bond?

Mr. CONKLING. If I understand the Senator's question I can answer it affirmatively and heartily. I have no doubt in the State of New York can be found a great number of persons distinguished and meritorious for the services they rendered and for the wounds they received in the war, entirely competent to be pension agents; but let me ask my honorable friend does he think that anywhere in the State of New York, or in any other State, you could find a man as pension agent unless he had been taught in that particular business, who at the beginning, at once, would be as fit as a man who had grown accustomed to the duties.

Mr. DORSEY. I presume the suggestion the Senator makes is true, but these officers are being changed all the time; men that are new to the duties are being put in, and those who have served awhile are being put out. We have had an example in the Senator's own State in the last few months. We know that fresh men have been put in the last six months, and that fact is no evidence that changes will not be made in the future because these men have learned the business.

Mr. CONKLING. I am not making the argument which the Senator answers, but rather one which his remarks confirm. When a pension agent resigns, as was the case to which he referred, of course another appointment must be made. Whenever a pension agent is derelict, another appointment should made. Whenever in the case of any pension district a better man can be found than the one who holds the office, I think he should be superseded. And that is my idea of civil-service improvement, or reform, using the cant phrase. I believe that the person who wields the appointing power, like any man of business and affairs and integrity, should select as well as he can the right man for the right place, not put a square peg in a round hole, nor a round peg in a square hole; in short to adapt the selection to the thing to be done. But is that an argument to show that everywhere, in the instance where you find an exceptionally good pension agent, and I can point to such, he shall be removed to make place for a particular class? There is one in the western part of the State of New York, Mr. Drury, who for years has been a pension agent. He was not a soldier; he lacks that merit; but I am told, and have been told for years by the Pension Bureau and by the Secretary of the Interior, that this man is exceptionally, conspicuously fit for his place, and when another sought his place the pensioners themselves by thousands sent here petitions and letters without end saying that they were more than satisfied with this man, that he had become accustomed to all his duties and their ways and understood them, and they understood him, and they wanted him to continue pension agent and the office to be continued in the little village in which it is. Now does the argument of the Senator tend to prove that that pension agent and all other pension agents, however satisfactory, regardless of all distinctions, the good, the derelict, the meritorious, with those who are the reverse, should be dismissed all on one day the country over?

If it is true of this office, it is true of the post-office; and I submit to the honorable Senator—I did not know that this amendment came from him; however I had intended to speak of it with entire respect as to the mover—that nothing more entirely at variance with every sound view of the administration of a public trust could well be suggested than that on one day, the good and the bad should all vanish together and fresh hands simultaneously be substituted for the work.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am opposed to this whole thing. I am in favor of striking out the provision in the House bill which provides for selecting soldiers for this place. I am in favor of it in the first place, for the reason that it is against the spirit of our rules most explicitly about having legislation on appropriation bills. The twenty-ninth rule provides that:

> No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill; nor shall any amendment not germane, &c.

I admit that this does not fall within the letter, because perhaps this would not be called a general appropriation bill, and in the second place because amending a provision that is already in the bill from the House might not fall within the letter of this rule; but the spirit of the rule which we have tried to enforce by striking out legislation from House bills and sticking to it over and over again, has been that bills appropriating money should stop when they had appropriated the money, and not undertake to provide legislation on a subject of this character or any other general character.

In the next place, I am opposed to this provision, both the amendment and the original text of the House bill, upon the ground that, although in my judgment it is perfectly constitutional for Congress to make this provision, it is really class legislation, which as applied to the soldier may in this instance be very good and kind to him, a recognition of his great services that we all talk so much about, while at the same time it involves the principle of the right of Congress and its expediency, whenever there is a majority that happens to wish to do such a thing as that, to make other class distinctions in the selection of officers of the United States. I for one shall hesitate a good while before I adopt any such provision. It is not a class distinction to say, as the law always has said, that the Attorney-General of the United States shall be a person learned in the law. That is necessarily inherent in the duties that he is to perform. It is merely another way of saying that he shall be qualified for the position. And so of a great many other provisions that already exist. But here you propose to adopt the principle of saying that a particular class of citizens of the United States who are justly thought to have done the country great service shall be appointed to a particular class of offices, and nobody else shall. I say I do not doubt at all the constitutional power of Congress to do that thing, but I believe it to be contrary to the principle for which these very soldiers fought, and that is the principle of a just and equal Government that leaves open to all classes of citizens all the honors and preferments that the Government constitutionally, through its constitutional departments, may call upon them to fill. But, under our Constitution, Congress is not one of the departments who are expected to select pension agents or any other officers of the United States or to narrow that selection to particular classes of persons, except so far as that narrowing is necessary to the due discharge of the office, to the qualifications that the officer shall possess.

In saying that, Mr. President, I think I am expressing the just sentiment of the soldiers of the State of Vermont at least, whose intelligence is as great as their patriotism was, and who understood the principles for which they fought and suffered, and who believed in them, and who believe in them yet, and who would scorn this little method of undertaking to get votes and to tickle their fancy by saying that they, to the exclusion of everybody else, right or wrong, fit or unfit, shall be the class of persons from whom pension agents shall be selected. So that, Mr. President, I shall vote against the whole thing from beginning to end.

Mr. BLAINE. I wish to ask one question. I can understand perfectly well when you speak of a wounded soldier what that means; there is no kind of doubt as to the precise meaning of that; but what would be the constitutional meaning, the lawful meaning, of a "disabled soldier?"

Mr. DORSEY. I do not know the constitutional meaning of a disabled soldier; but we all understand it.

Mr. BLAINE. Does it mean a man who cannot do his duty?

Mr. DORSEY. It means men who incurred disease during service, for which they are now drawing a pension.

Mr. BLAINE. When you say "wounded soldier," that is plain.

Mr. DORSEY. I say "wounded or disabled."

Mr. BLAINE. That leaves a very loose meaning there. If you mean to say "wounded and pensioned," there are a great many soldiers wounded and pensioned that you could not call disabled. The word "disabled" is a very loose phrase. If you give it its full extent, it means a man who cannot do anything, who is helpless, on his back. I move to strike out the words "and disabled," so as to confine it to wounded soldiers. The words are indefinite; they do not mean anything in particular.

Mr. WITHERS. Is an amendment in order now to this amendment?

Mr. BLAINE. What is the pending question? Let it be stated, and I will adapt my amendment to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas. The Secretary will read it.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out the second section of the bill as amended, and insert in lieu thereof:

That on the 1st day of January, 1879, the terms of office of all pension agents shall expire, and thereafter honorably discharged wounded or disabled Union soldiers, or the widows or daughters of Union soldiers, shall be appointed to said offices.

Mr. BLAINE. If it embarrasses the vote I will not insist on my proposition to amend.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment just read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The second section of the House bill, as amended by the Senate yesterday, I think far preferable to that offered by the Senator from Arkansas for several reasons. One among them is that recently the number of pension agents in the country has been reduced from fifty-three to eighteen. The eighteen take in perhaps the most efficient of the whole number that heretofore existed. That has been so recent that they have hardly got to work thoroughly yet. We attempt by an amendment on the pension appropriation bill now to change the whole system; that is, on the same day to put out of office all pension agents and appoint a new set, probably entirely. That it is well known, as has been expressed by the Department, will create great confusion. I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will be voted down, so that the amendments made by the Senate yesterday to the original section of the bill can be squarely acted on.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand the exact position of the vote. I understand it to be now a motion to strike out section 2, as amended, and insert.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the question.

Mr. DAWES. It is to strike out the second section of the bill as amended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As amended by the Senate and insert the substitute which has been just now read, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 16, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Cockrell,	McDonald,	Paddock,	Spencer,
Dorsey,	McMillan,	Plumb,	Teller,
Ingalls,	Mitchell,	Rollins,	Voorhees,
Kirkwood,	Oglesby,	Saunders,	Wadleigh.

NAYS—39.

Bruce,	Dennis,	Lamar,	Windom.
Butler,	Gordon,	McPherson,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	Patterson,
Chaffee,	Hamlin,	Sharon,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move now to strike out the second section of the bill as amended, which will leave it merely an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. Section 2, as amended, reads:

That from and after the passage of this act, in case of vacancy from any cause, the office of pension agent shall be filled by wounded or disabled Union soldiers or the widows or daughters of Union soldiers.

Mr. SARGENT. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion. I find my friend from Vermont, for whose legal attainments I have the very highest respect, differs from the argument I made yesterday and those made by Senators who spoke with me on the constitutionality of this matter. That would be the principal objection with me to this section in the bill, even as amended. If it were unconstitutional, that would control my vote. His strong dissent induces me to doubt. But I find on account of the prevailing opinion of the two Houses that there seems to be a necessity that there shall be some legislation toward the point the House seek by this section. I think I shall be very much embarrassed in conference committee and elsewhere unless I have something of this kind to fall back upon. I shall therefore be compelled on this question to vote "nay," notwithstanding what I may have said yesterday as to the general policy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My motive in making this motion of course is understood from the remarks I made when the amendment of the committee as amended was pending; and that is, that I believe the principle upon which the second section is founded, although its practical result is one that I should be very glad to see, is an unjust principle in the true characteristics of a free government, because it is class legislation and a kind of legislation that I do not believe the soldiers of this country, patriotic and intelligent citizens as they are, will believe in when they reflect upon it any more than I do. I think the true place to leave this question of appointments is with the President of the United States and his constitutional advisers where the responsibility truly belongs. That they have not wisely and rightly exercised that responsibility within the last year, I have very good reason to think. I know a section of New England where there were six or seven pension agencies, two in each of the three northern New England States, Vermont, New Hampshire, and Maine. There were I believe in those three States seven pension agents, and I think that six of the pension agents were soldiers; most of them had been wounded severely; all of them had done gallant and meritorious service. One was a civilian who found it convenient for the public and for his own purposes—and I do not complain of him for it—to be, as I am told, a clerk in the city of Washington not far from the other end of the Capitol during the period of the strife. But through some, as I must suppose just, reasons the Secretary of the Interior, or the President of the United States, wherever the law left any responsibility in the consolidation of these seven agencies into one and in the selection of one pension agent, happened to hit the civilian and to miss the six soldiers. Of course, if this civilian was not hit during the war, he ought to have been hit some time; and he got hit at last.

This of course would lead me to feel pretty strongly that there ought to be a rectification of this sort of business somewhere, because there is a fitness I entirely agree, other things being equal, that the President of the United States, himself a soldier, and the Secretary of the Interior, himself also a soldier, should have selected, if other things were equal as I say, a meritorious and gallant soldier to perform this duty from their own comrades. But, after all, the constitutional responsibility and the constitutional duty rested with them, and not with Congress, and I am disposed that they shall bear that responsibility, be it an honorable one or an unfortunate one, whatever it may be, and that it shall stay where it justly belongs. All these things will rectify themselves in the end; and for the sake of correcting temporary evils of this character that accident or misfortune imposes upon us, it does not appear to me that it is wise to depart from what is really the fundamental theory of the true relations of free government, and that is that all its citizens capable of doing particular duties shall have the right to be selected by the constitutional authorities for that purpose to perform public functions.

As I was saying, these inconveniences will always rectify themselves after a little; and I cannot believe that any class of persons who are supposed to be honored and benefited by this legislation will regard us as doing our duty because, out of the friendship, kindness, and gratitude that we feel to them, we undertake to depart from the true theory of law-making in order to render them a peculiar honor and benefit. The honors that they deserve they receive now and will continue to receive. No act or omission of the Administration, no act or omission of the Congress of the United States can strip them of one tittle of the perpetual remembrance and honor in which they will be held in every part of this country. As time rolls on, when the unity of this Government and of this people shall become more and more perfect, when the interchange of its commerce and of its emigration and the community of its interests become more and more homogeneous, there will be South and West, as well as North and East, a perfect concord of respect in a perpetual memorial to those people who, at the risk of their lives, and many of them by losing them, in maintaining the unity of this Republic, because it will be more and more a unit, more and more free, more and more prosperous when the temporary evils, that such a great convulsion has caused, have passed by.

On the whole, then, I do not think, Mr. President, that we are called upon in order to show our honor and gratitude to the soldier to indulge in this species of what is really class legislation, which, applied in a thousand ways upon this principle, would be of great detriment to the Republic.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I expressed in a very few words yesterday evening my views in regard to this matter, and I now desire a little more fully, in order not to be misunderstood, to explain how I feel about it.

As a mere legislative expression of opinion that the Congress of the United States would suggest to the President that in the selection of his officers preference should be given to the disabled soldiers who had become so disabled in the service of their country, I was willing to agree. That was the amendment of the Senate Committee on Appropriations; but that was changed here so that the Congress of the United States directed whom the President should appoint. I deny that Congress has the right to dictate to the President whom he shall appoint. For this reason I cannot vote for the proposition as it comes in now. I would be willing to vote for the amendment as it came from the Senate committee, which was simply an expression of opinion that in the judgment of the Legislature the President ought to make his selections from that particular class; but I fully agree with, and I was very glad indeed to hear the Senator from Vermont express himself as he did; I fully agree that this is class legislation which should be avoided, and I am the more ready to say so now, because coming from the section I do an expression of that kind from me might be misunderstood. It certainly cannot be now.

Mr. BECK. Will the Clerk read the amendment as it now stands?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont is to strike out the second section of the bill.

Mr. BECK. I know that is the motion, the same motion I made yesterday, but I want to know what the section now is that is proposed to be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the section as it stands.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act, in case of vacancy from any cause, the office of pension agent shall be filled by wounded or disabled Union soldiers or the widows or daughters of Union soldiers.

Mr. TELLER. The honorable Senator from Texas said he was entirely willing to vote for the proposition when we requested the President to bear in mind in making his nominations the deserving character of these soldiers, but he is not willing to make it obligatory upon the President. If we have not any right to make it obligatory on the President, it is simply a piece of impertinence on our part to suggest anything to him about it. If we have the right to say he shall appoint these men and out of this class because this class possess some particular qualifications not possessed by other men, then let us do it. If we have not that right, do not let us be guilty of the impertinence of making a suggestion that will fall harmless at the feet of the Executive.

Mr. MERRIMON. Before I vote I beg to say that I am not unfriendly to the Union soldier or to his widow or his children. On all proper occasions I shall be ready to vote for such measures as are calculated in a proper way to benefit him; but in my judgment this provision in the bill and amendments offered like it are not calculated to advance the public service. It seems to me that they savor very much of a desire to make a little small political capital to be used in the newspapers and on the stump. To encourage such a spirit is, it seems to me, unworthy of the Senate, and I will not consent to do it. I shall vote against all such propositions, come from what quarter they may, and my vote must not be construed as hostile to the interests of the Union soldiers, their widows, or their children.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, to strike out the second section of the bill.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont in the last remarks made by him took occasion to throw blame upon this Administration for the appointment of a pension agent at Concord, New Hampshire, rather than one in the State of Maine or in the State of Vermont, who was not a soldier as the other agents then in office in the other States were. Now, it is but fair and just to the Department by which that was done to say that what was then done was merely a consolidation of the three States into one pension district for the sake of saving expense; that it was not attempted to create any new officer, to make any new appointment, but simply to consolidate the three offices for the sake of economy into one without removing anybody. Now, it so happens that, fortunately for the State of New Hampshire, she stood between the two other States and that her capital, where the pension office was located, was the most convenient point for the three States to do business of that kind in, and the selection of the agent in the consolidation depended simply upon his locality. I am not aware that there has ever been any complaint whatever from any source as to the manner in which he has performed his duties. I believe that he has performed them to universal acceptation and that no fault has been found in any quarter.

But, sir, believing with the Senator from Vermont that a provision of this kind is constitutional, I am willing that Congress should give the Executive the opportunity to repair any wrong which the Senator thinks has been done to the soldiers of New England or that part of New England, and to give him an opportunity to appoint, in the place of the very estimable gentleman who holds the office of pension agent in the three northeastern States of the Union, a soldier of the Union who has been wounded or disabled in its cause.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He has that chance now if he chooses.

Mr. WADLEIGH. The Senator from Vermont says that he has that chance now. That is certainly true; but it is not improper for us to take our share of the responsibility in bringing about a change which we deem desirable, for us to say that we believe in the policy of appointing soldiers who have been wounded or disabled in the cause of their country to offices which are partially, to some extent, military offices, offices which concern the payment of pensions. I say, Mr. President, I do not feel that it is improper for us to indicate to the Executive our views in regard to the matter.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I do not know that I should have said anything on this subject if it had not been for the Senator from New Hampshire suggesting that Concord was selected as the central point for the three States of Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont. Now I undertake to say that there was not a conspicuous town in the three States that was so inconveniently located for the pension office of the three as Concord was. The mail matter from Maine destined to Concord practically all goes by way of Boston. There are five trunk lines of road that lead from Maine into New Hampshire, and on none of them is Concord located. If the Secretary of the Interior had desired to locate the pension office in New Hampshire as the middle State between the other two, he could not have selected a point so inaccessible to Maine as Concord was and is. I do not know how it was, but she happens to have two thousand more pensioners than Vermont and New Hampshire together; she sent considerably more soldiers to the field than both those States together; and the city of Portland is nearer to Lake Champlain on the extreme western side of Vermont than it is to the eastern side of Maine.

The last time I had the honor to meet the Secretary of the Interior officially, I went into his Department just after this order was issued, and I asked him who was the geographer-general for that Department and who had suggested to him that Concord was a central point for those three States, and I think that I had the honor to suggest some geographical knowledge to the head of that Department which he did not possess before. So I have the pleasant satisfaction of having been able to communicate to an admirable officer some information.

I cannot let the case go before the Senate as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, that when the pensioners of those three States were forced to Concord it was in the line of convenience at all. It was a most ingenious way of finding out how not to do it for the public convenience, although I join with the Senator from New Hampshire in saying that the agent who was retained has been a most efficient and so far as I know admirable agent in every respect. But the letters of the average pensioners of those three States can reach Portland, Maine, a whole twenty-four hours in advance of their reaching Concord, New Hampshire. I do not know what the motives of the Secretary were in selecting it. Undoubtedly they were good. Probably he was influenced by the fascinating manners and suave address of my friend from New Hampshire. I do not know but that might have been it. Something or other I know was at work to start it and twist his vision around to see that a place one hundred and fifty miles west of the center of a territory was precisely in the center.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I shall vote against the motion of the Senator from Vermont to strike out the section of the bill under consideration. I am in favor of the legislation which was inaugurated by the House of Representatives on this subject. I concur with the Senator from Vermont that there is no constitutional prohibition to this legislation. I have on most subjects shared with him the keen apprehension, which he has expressed to-day, in regard to class legislation. I am glad there are some subjects that excite his opposition to class legislation. On this particular occasion, however, I am in favor of class legislation, and I believe it is the first instance in my life. There is a class of people in this country, embracing about one million I should say, the survivors of the war, a quarter of a million of whom bear wounds or are disabled by their services in upholding the Government, and we have spent two days here trying to determine whether we can afford to fill eighteen offices with eighteen persons of that quarter of a million. I have no trouble in my mind on that subject. I have been ready all the time to vote, and to direct the President of the United States, not to ask him but to direct him, not to request but to compel him, to fill these offices that are incidental to the very services these men have undergone, incidental to the wounds they have received, incidental to the glory they have acquired for themselves and for the flag, to fill these offices with these meritorious, heroic, wounded men.

A more appropriate piece of legislation, in my opinion, has never occurred in the history of this Government. It is according to the eternal fitness of things that these pension agencies should be filled by soldiers, their widows, and their orphans. It is trifling to talk about their qualifications; it is trifling to discuss their ability to execute bonds; it is worse than trifling to talk about whether they are capable of faithfully administering the duties of these offices as soon as they are appointed, as if they cannot acquire knowledge as quickly as anybody else. I know no more capable men; I know no men more responsible as a class, or who could give bonds any more readily, and all concede that none compare with them in claims upon the Government, upon its gratitude, and recognition.

I did not expect to say anything, but I have said this much to justify the vote I shall give.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Mr. President, I wish to say one word in reply to what has fallen from the lips of my friend the Senator from Maine. I said, and I reiterate, that the selection of the gentleman who holds the office of pension agent at Concord was based upon the belief, either well-founded or ill-founded, that the office at that point was the most convenient office within the three States for the three States comprising that pension district. So far as my address is concerned and any influence that that had upon the Secretary of the Interior, I can only say that it must have reached him through my letter. I had prepared by a gentleman who had been connected with the mail service of New England a careful statement of the number of mails going to Concord and to the other points, the time when they left, and everything connected with them, and that statement convinced me that Concord was the most convenient place within the three States.

Mr. BLAINE. That paper was made by a New Hampshire gentleman.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Certainly it was. I sent it to the Secretary of the Interior requesting his attention to it. What its effect was I do not know; but it seems that it was more powerful than the representations of my friend the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BLAINE. I never made any at all, only to point out to him that, as I said, the suave address of my friend from New Hampshire or some other influence had distorted his vision as to geography. It had been done when I appeared at the Department. It had been done and done against the convenience of the pensioners. I do not care what the Senator may produce in the way of certificates from postal agents; there the fact stands that the entire mail from the State of Maine to Concord goes by the way of Boston.

Mr. ROLLINS. Not necessarily by any means.

Mr. BLAINE. What do you mean by "not necessarily?" They might go on horseback across the mountains.

Mr. ROLLINS. I will explain to the Senator from Maine, if he wishes me to do so. The railroads from Maine to Boston cross trunk lines running through Concord.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand what the Senator means.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Eastern Railroad, the Boston and Maine, and the Nashua and Worcester routes. It is not necessary at all that the mail in passing from Portland, Maine, to Concord, New Hampshire, should go within fifty miles of Boston.

Mr. BLAINE. This matter is not of course of any great interest to the Senate at large; but inasmuch as it is a matter at issue between our States in a friendly way, let me be more specific. Five trunk roads start from Portland, Maine: the Eastern Road, the Boston and Maine, the Portland and Rochester, the Ogdensburgh, and the Grand Trunk Road, and all go into New Hampshire at different points, all touch New Hampshire towns of importance; but Concord is not on any one of these. The great mail-route from Maine, the Eastern Road, goes to Boston, and the next morning the letter goes up to New Hampshire. Whether occasionally stray bags are thrown off or whether, if they do, they lie over to wait for some connecting train, I do not know. What I mean is that the letter either goes by Boston or does not gain in time from what it would if it went to Boston by reason of being thrown off at a way-station.

Mr. ROLLINS. Now allow me to suggest a case. The train leaving Portland for Boston makes close connection at Newmarket Junction with the train to Concord. All the mail matter from the city of Portland, from the city of Bangor, or elsewhere in the State of Maine may go direct to Concord without any delay whatever, without going within fifty miles of the city of Boston, and reach Concord earlier than Boston.

Mr. BLAINE. That may have been in the certificate which the honorable Senator's colleague produced.

Mr. ROLLINS. That is the fact, Mr. President.

Mr. WADLEIGH. If it was in that certificate, it was true.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the mail service of the interior of New England, but to make a reply to a single remark that was suggested by the Senator from North Carolina. He stated that he should vote against this amendment because, in his judgment, it was an attempt to obtain a little cheap glory by seeming to advocate the cause of the soldier. I beg to observe to that Senator that this proposition comes to us from the House of Representatives.

Mr. MERRIMON. Did I not say that I did not care what quarter it came from?

Mr. INGALLS. And I beg to say further that during the last two years the House of Representatives, which has been of the same political faith in its majority with that of the Senator from North Carolina, has repeatedly from time to time sent us various measures, of which this is the last, all looking toward the interest of the soldier. They have passed a bounty bill; they have passed, by a large majority, a bill granting arrears of pension; they now come and offer us this amendment proposing that the office of pension agents shall be filled by the wounded or disabled Union soldiers of the country. I am not going to say that the democratic party are disingenuous. I do not propose to assert here on this floor that they pass these measures in the other end of the Capitol and send them here knowing that the majority of their friends here will vote against them, but I have observed during the short time that I have served here that the democracy in one end of the Capitol favor the soldier and in the other they do not. I am exceedingly glad, therefore, that the yeas and nays have been called upon this proposition.

Mr. VOORHEES. May I ask my friend from Kansas a single question? and that is whether the party to which he is attached, and of which he is a distinguished and brilliant ornament, has not all this time had the majority in this body, and whether they could not have passed any of these numerous measures favorable to the soldier that have been sent to them here from a democratic House.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator has anticipated the remark that I was about to make in regard to the republican re-enforcement that the democratic party have uniformly received in the Senate. I was proceeding to say that I was exceedingly glad that the yeas and nays had been called for on this proposition, so that at last we shall understand precisely how parties are divided on this question in the Senate.

As the Senator from Indiana says, this is a body that is, as I said yesterday, nominally republican. They have it in their power, if they see fit, to pass this amendment. The democratic party in this body by dividing, as I think they undoubtedly will, by a large majority against it, can defeat it, and I want it to go to the country that this is so far a matter that has been marked by a singular want of ingenuousness. I want to have the blame of the defeat of this amendment rest where it properly belongs, and not have one political party in this country able to say that they are the friends of the soldiers and point to the fact that the House has passed these bills and that the Senate has defeated them. I venture to say that the result of this amendment will prove that a majority of the democracy are opposed to this bill and to this amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that the five-minute rule be applied to this bill unless we now have a vote. ["Vote!" "Vote!"] I make the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California moves that the five-minute rule be applied to this bill. Is there objection? ["Yes!" "Yes!"] The Chair will put the question on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to strike out the second section.

Mr. MERRIMON. I wish to say a word in reply to the Senator from Kansas. I do not care to inquire whether what he has said about what the House has done, it being a democratic House, is true or otherwise. All that he has said does not affect the truth of what I said in the few remarks I submitted. I say that it is unworthy of the Senate and unworthy of the Congress of the United States that we should look to anything else than the public interest. The Union soldiers of this country have not asked for this legislation, and all the intelligent ones know that this is a mockery of them which affords them no substantial relief, no substantial advantage. In the way that they ought to be provided for they have been provided for; and it is well to leave it to the discretion of the President whether he shall confer this office on a soldier or on a civilian. The law fixes it there; the Constitution devolves that duty upon him; and, as the Senator from Vermont said, let him take the responsibility of it.

I repeat what I said a while ago, whether motions like this come from one quarter or from another quarter they savor of a desire to make a little political capital for the stump and through the party newspapers of the country; and to encourage such a purpose is unworthy the Senate of the United States, and I will not vote to encourage such a spirit, come from what quarter it may.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I rose at the same time that the Senator from Vermont rose, with a view of making the motion which he made, to strike out the whole section in regard to the appointment of Union soldiers to office. I did it because I do not believe such legislation is within the Constitution. I have heard for too many years about our being free and equal; I have heard for too many years about discriminating against classes. I recognize it as an American principle that every citizen of the United States is entitled to the benefits of life, liberty, and the pursuit of public office. It is an American principle, and I see no reason, I see no constitutional authority to set up a barrier to the appointment of any man as a pension agent, if he is competent, if he can be trusted to be faithful, if he can give a proper bond with security, whether he has been a Union soldier or not. He is entitled to consideration by the Executive. I do not think that Congress has the right, when the power is lodged with the President under the Constitution to nominate, to cripple that power and to circumscribe it within so narrow a compass as this provision of this bill would circumscribe it.

I believe in taking care of Union soldiers. I believe it is right and proper to give them the advantage, all other things being equal; and I do not believe that any republican administration or any democratic administration will discriminate against a Union soldier; and therefore I think it wrong, constitutionally wrong, wrong in principle, improper in practice, to insert in the laws passed by Congress any such prohibition, for this amounts to a prohibition of the appointment of a man who does not happen to be wounded or disabled. Why, Mr. President, many men contributed to the service of this country in its councils, as much as some contributed on the battlefield; and many of them controlled its destiny with as strong a hand, with as firm an intellect, as he who carried his musket; and why should they be precluded from obtaining the office of pension agent? What would Senators say if it were proposed that there should be a constitutional amendment to prohibit any man from occupying a seat in this Chamber unless he was a wounded soldier? Bring it home to them, and how eloquent they would be in favoring the proposition of submitting to the Legislatures of the States such an addition to the qualifications of a Senator!

Then as to the humbler man, why exclude him from being a pension agent when you will not exclude a man who was not a Union soldier from a seat in this Chamber? When I see all around me gentlemen who were engaged in honorable warfare on the other side occupying seats on this floor, entitled under the Constitution to seats on this floor, with their political disabilities removed, why should the humbler soldier in the private rank, why should he who has no constitutional impediment to his entry upon an humbler political station, be excluded from enjoying the profits and emoluments of political office in humble ranks? It is a principle that I oppose; I do not care what party is committed to it; I am willing to take all the responsibility among my people of voting against this amendment put in by whatever party it may have been. I take the whole of the responsibitity. I do it because it is wrong, and it is unworthy in my judgment (without meaning any disrespect) of legislators to incorporate it in a bill of this kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to strike out the second section.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, some of the Senators on this floor who were once antagonized to Union soldiers will, I know, vote against the motion to strike out; others of them will vote for it; and perhaps it is not inappropriate in behalf of those who occupy the latter position that I should say that the reasons for these votes by no means concern any disposition on our part to deny to Union soldiers any of the advantages of the gratitude which a grateful country should bestow upon them. I believe that those honorable gentlemen who met the confederate soldiers in the war entitled themselves, by the execution of their patriotic devotion, to the consideration of the entire people of the United States; and for my part I would not in the slightest degree withhold from them any of the advantages or any of the privileges justly belonging to the high character with which they went upon the field of battle in defense of the cause they believed to be right.

In casting a vote for this motion to strike out, I wish to be understood as not expressing the slightest feeling of ill-will in regard to that class of American citizens. I believe that on all sides we are now arriving, if we have not already arrived, at that condition where we can have a just appreciation of the principles of government without reference to what may have been our past deeds; and I feel entirely at liberty to consider this question as an American Senator without reference to what effect it may have on the political situation now or hereafter, and also without reference to what effect it may have upon the passions which so long agitated the bosoms of the country and which I now hope have at last given way to kindly feelings.

The "Union soldiers" are mentioned in this section of the bill. That is a distinction which I suppose is easy and obvious enough in the minds of the Senators who approve of this proposition; and yet it does not seem to my mind to be a strict definition in law. In order to cover those men who have served under the flag of the United States, it would be better to say "All who have served in any of the controversies which the United States have had either with foreign powers, or with Indians, or with rebels." The term "United States soldiers" or "soldiers of the United States" would be altogether a more apt expression than that which is used in the bill. There is no necessity, it seems to me, for excluding soldiers of the war with Mexico, although they may not have fought in the war of the rebellion; or if there be some of the old veterans of the war of 1812 yet remaining who may not have been able to participate in the war of the rebellion and are still able to make good pension agents, I can see no reason why men of that class should be excluded. But evidently the terms used in this enactment have reference only to the late war. These gentlemen have been rewarded with pensions; and is it a proper system of legislation that we should make the pension system an agent for the bestowal of officers under the United States Government? Should we not, when we undertake to pension Union soldiers, confine our legislation to that particular subject and bestow upon them by the direct act of benefaction those things which we conceive they deserve for the sacrifices they have made for their country?

I do not believe in the constitutionality of this provision, and hence I must record my vote in favor of the motion to strike out upon that ground. I do not believe in the constitutional authority, for instance, of the House of Representatives to participate in any respect with the President of the United States in reference to what appointments he may make in the public service. Only the Senate and the President have the right to consider the subject of supplying vacancies in offices or making appointments to offices that may be created unless other direction is given in the body of the law itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, which is to strike out the second section of the bill, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 30; as follows:

So the motion to strike out did not prevail.

Mr. SARGENT. Before the bill is reported to the Senate, in line 47 of section 1, I move to add the words "or at that rate for a fraction of one hundred" after the word "vouchers." That is the meaning of the bill, but I offer the amendment to make it clear.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There should be no objection to that. It only makes the meaning more plain.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to take up House bill No. 4549, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4549) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BURNSIDE in the chair.) The bill will be read by the Secretary and the amendments of the committee acted upon as they are reached in the reading.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Secretary proceeds to read the bill I may state that the Senate Committee on Appropriations have made very few amendments to it, and that they are rather unimportant amendments. I think it would facilitate the passage of the bill if we were to agree that the five-minute rule shall be applied to it. I ask that that may be assented to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? No objection being made, it is understood that the five-minute rule shall be applied in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not know whether the Senator who has charge of the bill stated the fact that the amount appropriated by the bill has been reduced by the Senate committee in their amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not state that fact, but it is a fact, and it is well worth stating.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Therefore, while the amendments of the Senate committee may increase the amount in places, upon the whole the amendments decrease the bill instead of increasing it.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from West Virginia is correct in his statement. The bill is decreased some $40,000 by the Senate committee's amendments.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in lines 25 and 26 of section 1, to reduce the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Colville agency from $2,000 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 31 of section 1, to increase the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Round Valley agency from $1,100 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 35 of section 1, to reduce the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Nevada agency from $2,000 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 37 of section 1, to reduce the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Western Shoshone agency from $2,000 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 49 of section 1, to reduce the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Crow agency from $2,200 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 62 of section 1, to increase the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Sisseton agency from $1,400 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 69 of section 1, to increase the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Shoshone agency from $1,400 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 72 of section 1, to reduce the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Pueblo agency from $2,200 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out lines 74 and 75 of section 1, in the following words:

At the Abiquin agency, at $1,200.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee recommended the striking out of the Abiquin agency on the ground that the Indians at that agency would be removed. It is the purpose of the Department to remove those Indians, but it is thought probable that they may not be removed before the 1st day of July. Although I have not consulted the committee with reference to it, because I have not had the opportunity, I think it would be well enough to allow that agency to stand. Of course when the Indians are removed from there the agency will no longer exist and the money will be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the Senator desire to make provision for the agency for the whole year or for only such time as the Indians may remain there?

Mr. ALLISON. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs states that efforts are being made to remove the Indians from this agency; that the real impediment against their removal is the want of a few United States troops at that point; and that these may not be supplied before the 1st of July. Of course, until the Indians are removed, there ought to be an agency there. I think in the administration of the Department there will not be any trouble about it. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that I stated that I did not have the assent of the committee in proposing to disagree to the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understood the Senator. The Senator is perfectly right in his statement, but the question upon which I wanted information was whether it is necessary to continue the agency there the full year or whether it would not be better to provide for the Indians so long as an agency may be there. I merely submit this to the Senator, he having information from the Department.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course the moment these Indians are removed the agency is terminated, and the agent will be no longer in the service, and will receive no pay, and the money will be covered into the Treasury, whether there is a provision made for it or not.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa whether it would not be well, as we have information that efforts are being made to remove the Indians before the 1st of July, to have it kept open and to so amend the provision as to say that the Abiquin agency shall be continued at the rate of $1,200 a year until the Indians are removed from their agency?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to such an amendment, and I think it would make it more specific.

Mr. BECK. The Senator can frame the language to suit himself; I merely suggest the idea.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, in lieu of the lines proposed to be stricken out, I move to insert:

At the Abiquin agency, at the rate of $1,200 per annum during the continuance of such agency.

Mr. BECK. That is right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The motion to strike out the lines as amended was disagreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 76 of section 1, to reduce the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Navajo agency from $2,200 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 78 of section 1, to increase the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Mescalero agency from $1,300 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 82 of section 1, to increase the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the White River agency from $1,000 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 84 of section 1, to increase the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Southern Ute agency from $1,000 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 97 of section 1, to increase the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Ponca agency from $1,000 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 112 of section 1, to insert:

At the Union agency, at $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 119 of section 1, to reduce the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Green Bay agency from $1,600 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 121 of section 1, to reduce the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the La Pointe agency from $2,000 to $1,500.

Mr. BECK. When this clause was under consideration by the committee I am not sure but that on my suggestion $2,000 was stricken out and $1,500 inserted. Since then I have seen Mr. STEWART, a member of the House from Minnesota, who advises me that there are seven different agencies under the charge of the agent there, and that he has to travel four or five months during the year to visit the different agencies, and that it is in fact one of the largest and most difficult agencies, there being so many places to visit, and that the sum ought to be $2,000; that the Commissioner says so and the facts require it. Having made the motion to reduce the appropriation I am now inclined to withdraw it.

Mr. ALLISON. In addition to what the Senator from Kentucky says, I will state that I consulted the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with reference to this particular appropriation, and he stated to me that this agent is not only resident at the La Pointe agency proper, but that he is obliged to visit six other reservations, and that he has charge of some six thousand or seven thousand Indians in all. He thinks the sum of $2,000 is a reasonable sum. Therefore I hope the amendment proposed by the committee will be rejected, and thus leave the matter as it stood in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is right.

The amendment was rejected.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 123 of section 1, to reduce the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Mackinac agency from $2,000 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 125 of section 1, to reduce the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the New York agency from $2,000 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 127 of section 1, to reduce the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Papago agency from $2,200 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 129 of section 1, to increase the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Colorado River agency from $1,200 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 131 of section 1, to reduce the appropriation for the pay of the agent at the Pima and Marocopa agency from $2,000 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after the word "at," in line 144, to strike out "two" and insert "one;" in line 145, after the word "and," to strike out "seven thousand and one" and insert "three thousand and three;" and in line 151 to strike out "Commissioner of Indian Affairs" and insert "Secretary of the Interior;" so as to make the clause read:

At the Mission agency, at $1,000; in all, $103,300: Provided, That in the case of the consolidation of two or more agencies, the sums appropriated for the salaries of agents at said agencies, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, to increase the salary of the agent who shall remain or be placed in charge of the consolidated agency: Provided further, That in no case shall such salary exceed the sum of $2,200 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 157 to 160, inclusive, of section 1, in the following words:

The Union agency in the Indian Territory is hereby abolished, and the duties heretofore devolving upon said agency are transferred to the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "employés," in line 238 of section 1, to strike out "thirty-two" and insert "twenty-eight;" and after the word "dollars," in line 239, to strike out the words:

Out of which sum the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby, at his discretion, authorized to employ two special Indian agents at large, at a compensation not exceeding $2,000 each per annum.

So as to make the clause read:

For contingencies of the Indian service, including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents and of their offices and for pay of employés, $28,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaties with Indian tribes, under the head of "Flatheads and other confederated tribes," in line 548 of section 1, to strike out "one" and insert "three" before "hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For nineteenth of twenty installments, for keeping in repair blacksmith, tin and gun smith, carpenter and wagon and plow maker shops, and providing necessary tools therefor, per same article and treaty, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 577 of section 1, after the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" so as to read:

For last of five installments, last series, for beneficial objects, to be expended under direction of the President, per fourth article of same treaty, $3,000; in all, $16,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill till he reached line 767 of section 1.

Mr. MAXEY. I move to strike out all between lines 767 and 782, inclusive. That is an appropriation——

Mr. INGALLS. Let the words proposed to be stricken out be read.

Mr. MAXEY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the part proposed to be stricken out.

The CHIEF CLERK. The words proposed to be stricken out are the following:

NEZ PERCÉS OF JOSEPH'S BAND.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the removal of the Nez Percés Indians of Joseph's band, now held as prisoners of war at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, to a suitable location in the Indian Territory, and for their settlement thereon, and for clothing, subsistence, and such other articles as may be required for their advancement in civilization, including the employment of such skilled labor as may be necessary to aid in teaching them civilized pursuits with a view to their future self-support, the sum of $20,000: Provided, That such amount of the above sum as may be necessary for said removal and for subsistence for remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, may be immediately available.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas, to strike out the words just read.

Mr. DORSEY. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to make a suggestion instead of striking out the entire provision?

Mr. MAXEY. I prefer to say what I propose to say in regard to the matter on my motion to strike out, and then the Senator from Arkansas may suggest any amendment he pleases.

Mr. DORSEY. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Texas that instead of striking out the whole provision, he strike out the words "Indian Territory," in line 772, and insert "the Territory of Idaho." If the Government desires to educate these Indians and send instructors among them, let them go back on the reservation where they came from and spend the money there.

Mr. MAXEY. I do not propose to complicate the proposition I have made with any other. I objected, when the same question was sprung here last year, to the removal of these wild, untutored Indians of the warlike tribes to the Indian Territory, for the reason that the Indians who occupy the Indian Territory are rapidly becoming civilized and enlightened. They have their schools, their churches, their forms of government; they have executive, legislative, and judicial departments, the same as we have in the States; they have their county organizations, in which a will may be probated, executors qualified, an administrator or a guardian appointed, and all the other business transacted which is ordinarily performed in probate courts. There is the entire machinery of civil government there. It is the policy of our Government to foster and encourage the progress and development of the civilization which exists in that Territory among those tribes which went there under a contract with the Government more than forty years ago and whose property it is. If the tendency of removing these wild tribes into that Territory would be to demoralize the Indians there, then it is unwise on the part of the United States Government so to remove these wild tribes and intermingle them with those who are in a condition of progress in civilization.

Having this view of the matter, I opposed last year such a provision as is now contained in the bill. I was joined in that opposition by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] whose State is interested in like manner as mine; the Senators from Arkansas took the same view of the matter then; and the provision was stricken out. I take upon myself the privilege of opposing it in the bill now before the Senate, not because I propose to interfere with the Indians or their civilization, but because it is a matter of direct interest to the State which I in part represent. My State lies just south of and contiguous to the Indian Territory. The intercourse between the Indians of the Indian Territory and the people of Texas is pleasant and kindly. They have much trading, much dealing with each other, and their relations are entirely pleasant. When criminals escape from Texas into the Indian Territory the Indians there aid us in recovering those fugitives, and passing them back into the State for the purpose of being brought to justice. In like manner, when their fugitives escape into our State we aid them in the recovery of those fugitives, and send them back for trial in the Indian Territory.

My deliberate and candid judgment is that the United States Government ought not to interfere with that which is moving on so successfully and well as the Indians are in the Indian Territory. I believe in letting well enough alone. I do not believe it to be wise to pass into that country these wild and warlike tribes who, according to the very statement contained in the bill, are now prisoners of war.

For these reasons I oppose the provision and have moved that the clause be stricken out. It may be, if the clause is stricken out, that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DORSEY] may see proper to insert as an original proposition an amendment such as suits him; but the object I have in view is to strike out the whole of the provision, because this entire appropriation is for the purpose of removing these Indians now held as prisoners of war at Fort Leavenworth to the Indian Territory.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas a question. Do I understand the Senator from Texas to say that the Indians there own the Indian Territory?

Mr. MAXEY. What I stated is that the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees, who occupy the country known as the Indian Territory, were removed from east of the Mississippi River into that Territory, called the Indian Territory, and settled there under solemn treaties with the Government which provided that they were not to be disturbed in their possession of that country throughout all time to come.

Mr. TELLER. But what I mean to ask is do they own all of the land?

Mr. MAXEY. On that point I can only say—and if the Senator will put himself to the trouble of examining he will find it to be so—that a portion of the land was sold by the Cherokees to some other tribes. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who will doubtless explain this matter, can give the names better than I can; but some other Indians have been removed into this Territory which belongs to the tribes I have named, and if the United States Government owns a foot of land in the country known as the Indian Territory, I am not aware of it.

Mr. DORSEY. If it was the intention, as I presume it was, of the Government of the United States when certain tribes of Indians were removed to the Indian Territory that this country should be set apart to them for the purpose of civilization, of education, and of general advancement, then I should like to inquire upon what theory of morals or ethics these wild Indians are being constantly sent to the Indian Territory. Two years ago we passed a bill appropriating money to remove the Modocs from the north part of Oregon down to the Indian Territory. Last year we passed another bill removing a portion of the Sioux Indians, one band of the Poncas, from Dakota to the Indian Territory. Now we propose to add the Indians that our Army has been chasing through the country for the last six or eight months at a very large cost to the Government—the Joseph band, I believe it is called—we propose to add them to those already sent. The land in that Territory belongs either to the tribes named by the Senator from Texas or it has been transferred by them for the use of other tribes, the names of which are specified in the treaties transferring the land. None of the land, so far as I know, belongs to the United States, and the United States Government has no more right to set apart a reservation in that Territory for the use of these Indians than it has to set apart a portion of it for sale to any private individual.

Mr. MAXEY. I would ask the Senator from Kansas the question which I was asked by the Senator from Colorado. I stated my recollection to be that the United States does not own any land within the Territory known as the Indian Territory. Is not that the case?

Mr. DORSEY. That I understand to be the case. Whatever transfers have been made there have been made for specific purposes named in the treaties, and the Government of the United States in its own right, in the sense that it owns other public land, owns no land whatever in the Indian Territory.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from Arkansas for information, how it was, then, that in the railroad charters of 1866 alternate sections through the Indian Territory, north and south and east and west, were granted by the United States, if there is no title in the Government to those lands?

Mr. DORSEY. If the Senator will look at the charters to which he alludes, he will find that no grant was conveyed to railway companies except upon conditions. In one of the charters, that of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas road, the land was conveyed to the railway company when it should become public land of the United States and the tribal relations of the several tribes should be abolished, and it will never probably become the public land of the United States. The land grant to the Atlantic and Pacific Railway Company takes effect when the land becomes public land under similar restrictions. The precise words of the statute I cannot now recall, but the restrictions are similar, and I have stated their substance. It has first to be declared by Congress to be public land of the United States before the railway companies get any right whatever under the grant, and I believe they claim no right under the charters to which the Senator from Kentucky alludes. At all events I am satisfied that at this time the United States owns no land in the Indian Territory which it has a right to dispose of either to Indian tribes or to individuals. I say that the Government has the same right to sell that land to private individuals that it has to give it to these wild Indians.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Texas will not prevail. These Indians are now in the Fort Leavenworth military prison.

Mr. INGALLS. Oh, no.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, they are at the Fort Leavenworth reservation, held by the military.

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. And they are being subsisted by the War Department at the rate of about $2,000 per month. They were captured, as is well known, in the Nez Percé war, which war it is not necessary now to inquire into. Suffice it to say that this identical band in Idaho, entering upon the war path, murdered some twenty or thirty families. But for that fact, I think it might be well at some time to return these Indians to their old reservations and to their former associates. It must be perfectly apparent to every Senator that to return Joseph and his band now to their reservation would be to consign them to another war, more bloody perhaps than the one that took place more than a year ago.

Mr. MAXEY. Do I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that the Nez Percé band of Joseph murdered twenty or thirty families?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAXEY. I wanted to understand that.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand very well the argument the Senator from Texas proposes to draw from that fact.

Mr. MAXEY. Therefore we do not want them moved down to murder our families. That is the point.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly. There is no proposition to remove them within several hundred miles of the State which is so ably represented by the Senator from Texas. There is no proposition to place these Indians in any relations with white people. The proposition is to remove them to some suitable place in the Indian Territory, a Territory set apart by treaty for the use of Indians alone, and consecrated to Indian tribes by treaties made over and over again between the United States and the five civilized tribes that are now in that Territory, and who own a large portion of the land there.

Mr. DORSEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa what Indians he alludes to, the Nez Percés, the Modocs, or what tribes?

Mr. ALLISON. Any Indians that we choose to place in the Indian Territory, with the consent of the Indians who are already there by authority of law.

Mr. DORSEY. Then I should be glad to see the consent of the several civilized tribes filed here for the removal of these Indians to the Indian Territory.

Mr. ALLISON. They have already consented in advance that other Indians may be placed there. They are desirous that other Indians may be placed there. The Indian tribes who occupy the Indian Territory are not in favor of opening up that Territory to the spoliation, if I may use that word, of the whites in that neighborhood. They are in favor of holding this Territory for the use and occupation of the Indian tribes.

There are no wars in the Indian Territory. This band under Joseph has been conquered by the United States. I do not believe that they will give the people of Texas or of Arkansas or of any of the adjacent States any more trouble than will the Cherokees or the Choctaws. If they are not to be removed to the Indian Territory, where shall they go? Senators will not say that we are to keep this band of Joseph perpetually under military surveillance at the expense of the Government of the United States. They are not to be kept in a military prison. Although not technically in prison, they are on the Fort Leavenworth reseservation, and they are held as military prisoners, men, women, and children. If Senators can tell us any other place that is more appropriate where these Indians may sustain themselves or make an effort to do so, I shall be glad to at least hear such a proposition.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator if a tribe is a bad and pestiferous population, troublesome to people where they were born, is there any good and moral reason why they should be picked up out of that neighborhood and carried into another neighborhood where they do not naturally belong?

Mr. ALLISON. None whatever. Allow me to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Modoc band was guilty perhaps of greater atrocities than the Nez Percés band, or any other band of Indians in the United States; yet the Modocs have been taken into the Indian Territory, and they are to-day self-sustaining.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Iowa answer me by what authority the Modocs were taken there?

Mr. ALLISON. By the authority of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. By act of Congress?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SARGENT. There was an appropriation made for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Iowa has expired, and he can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say, in addition to what was stated by the Senator from Arkansas, that the Cheorokees by their treaty of 1866 surrendered a strip of land fifty miles wide, adjoining Kansas on the south, and extending from the Arkansas River west to the one-hundredth degree of west longitude. It was provided by the treaty of 1866, however, that the United States may settle friendly Indians within the limits of the latter tract, "and when such settlements are made the rights of the Cherokees to the lands so occupied terminate, the lands thus disposed of to be paid for to the Cherokee Nation at such price as may be agreed upon by the parties in interest, or as may be fixed by the President." And so with other portions of that Territory the disposition of which was provided for by treaty stipulation.

Mr. DORSEY. That land is occupied by Osage and Pawnee Indians.

Mr. BECK. I am only answering the Senator from Missouri and others who seem to think the United States had no right to go into that Territory. By treaty stipulations with the Indians, the Indians have given them that right, and the Government has exercised it time and again.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Kentucky answer the question whether these Indians are friendly Indians or not?

Mr. BECK. They are as friendly as any other Indians, for they are held by power and they remain friendly as long as they are treated justly. That is the whole history of our Indian relations as I understand it. The great difficulty we have had with our Indians is that we have neither treated them with justice, nor have we at times shown the power that the Government ought to have shown to keep them friendly. I have no question about the power of the Government to hold them. I will here read from the report of General Walker, who, I think, was the best Indian Commissioner we ever had. He in one sentence states my idea exactly of what we have got to do with the Indians. He says:

> It is right that those who criticise the policy of the Government toward the Indians, and ridicule it as undignified in its concessions and unstatesmanlike in its temporizing with a recognized evil, should fairly face the one alternative which is presented. There is no question of national dignity, be it remembered, involved in the treatment of savages by a civilized power. With wild men, as with wild beasts, the question whether in a given situation one shall fight, coax, or run is a question merely of what is easiest and safest.

So in all the management of these people we never have had the power of this Government shown, nor have we treated them with the justice with which the Government should have treated them. Therefore the Nez Percé Indians and perhaps others thought they were aggrieved. Now they are west of Kansas, held as prisoners of war. They are obliged to be held somewhere. We have a right to put them on these lands with other Indians in the Indian Territory, not to injure Texas, not to injure Arkansas, not to injure Missouri. The country between Kansas and Texas is less than three hundred miles from north to south, and I suppose it extends five hundred miles from east to west. It seems to me we are compelled, unless gentlemen can suggest a better way, to send the Indians somewhere, and to protect Texas and Missouri and all these people from them, for that is in the power of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Kentucky is very correct when he says that the trouble arising with these Indians is the failure on the part of the Government to keep its contract. That was the cause of this Nez Percés war. It was a failure on the part of the Government to maintain its plighted faith with these Indians. While I have no doubt of the right of the Government to send these Indians as prisoners of war to the Indian Territory, and that in very many respects it would be better for the Government to do so, yet I believe in justice that they ought to be returned to the reservation from which they came, or where they ought to have been when they commenced their war.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him what, in his judgment, would be the treatment that these Indians would receive from the white settlers in the neighborhood of the origin of that war should they go back there? Does not the safety of both Indians and whites require that they should be settled somewhere else?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know what the temper of the people may be in the section from which those Indians came. I know they did commit some atrocities when the war first broke out, but after the first few days they carried on that war entirely free from the usual Indian atrocities. I think they fought it upon high, honorable principles. I believe no set of men ever went to war in the history of wars who had a better cause for war than the Nez Percé Indians, and if we paid out a million of dollars it was our fault, and not theirs.

Men in high public positions have been compelled to admit to me that this war was brought about by the misconduct of Government officials and not by these Indians. They went to war just as men of spirit will go to war, and they demonstrated that they were not only men of honor when they fought, savages as they were, upon the principles of civilized warfare, but they demonstrated that they possessed a military character and a military ability that was second to no men in this country. I undertake to say that there is but the history of one great fight that compares with theirs, and that is when the Greeks returned from their Asiatic invasion. These men, with their wives, their children, their flocks, and their herds, fled before the American Army, outnumbering them three to one, more than a thousand miles through an inhospitable and mountainous region, and when they came across the straggling settler or the straggling emigrant they passed him by, taking only such things as they needed. They are entitled to the clemency of this Government and to the decent respect of the people. They ought to be returned to their reservation, and then the Government ought to keep its plighted faith, and if the settlers are disposed to commit atrocities upon them the Government is bound in honor and by its treaties to send the American Army there to protect them in their place. Justice, I say, to them, respect for our obligations require that these men should not, contrary to their will, be removed to the Indian Territory. I understand that they are opposed to it. They desire to return to their reservation and to take their chances with the settlers. I will guarantee that the men on the border who have witnessed their acts of bravery and the manner in which they have curbed their usual savage desires in warfare will treat them as honorable and subdued enemies so long as they abide by the law and treat the whites in the same manner.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas will be adopted by the Senate. I do not intend at this time to discuss the general policy of concentrating and consolidating all the Indian tribes of the Northwest in what is known as the Indian Territory. That region, however, I might say, in passing, comprises a tract of country about two hundred by four hundred miles in extent, exceedingly fertile, with a salubrious climate and every element necessary to make it the theater of an opulent and splendid civilization. It is surrounded on three sides by three of the most important and growing and wealthy communities in this Union. Upon the north is the State of Kansas; upon the east is the State of Arkansas; upon the south is the great empire State of Texas, while upon the west it extends very nearly to the borders of Colorado. It is at the present time penetrated by one great line of railway, extending from Kansas through Texas to Galveston, which is in itself the artery along which the people of the interior and of the West expect to transmit their products for distribution to the foreign nations of the earth.

Those communities naturally feel a profound interest in this matter. They believe, and I feel with them, that it is un-American, that it is unwise and unjust, to make this great extent of country a closed portion of the surface of the earth, into which no white man can intrude, which shall stand as an obstacle in the way of commerce and the growth and the prosperity of those great communities to which I have referred. The people of those States view with apprehension and with alarm the successive steps of the Executive toward concentrating still further and further Indians within the limits of this Territory, so that it will ultimately become impossible, by reason of the numbers of those people, by reason of the perpetuity of the institutions that will there be raised up, to remove it from the pathway of this great commerce which is destined to spring up between the West and Northwest and the Gulf of Mexico. On general principles, therefore, Mr. President, speaking for those people, I should say that the Senate of the United States ought to pause and to prevent any further encroachment on the part of the Executive upon what I conceive to be the inherent rights of those people.

I do not agree with those who claim that this Government has the absolute authority to assign portions of this Territory to the use of Indian tribes. By treaties of the highest sanction and of great antiquity the Territory was given to what are known as the civilized Indian nations. By the treaty of 1866, the Cherokees, who owned the larger portion of it, relinquished all that part lying west of the ninety-sixth meridian of west longitude upon certain conditions and for certain uses which I shall briefly describe to the Senate. The fifteenth article of the treaty to which I allude reads as follows:

> The United States may settle any civilized Indians, friendly with the Cherokees and adjacent tribes, within the Cherokee country, on unoccupied lands west of ninety-six degrees, on such terms as may be agreed upon by any such tribe and the Cherokees, subject to the approval of the President of the United States, which shall be consistent with the following provisions, namely.

Then follow the terms upon which the civilized Indians are to be admitted into that Territory formerly claimed by the Cherokees and relinquished by them in trust to the Government of the United States upon certain conditions. I say that it is time for Congress to pause——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can only proceed with the unanimous consent of the Senate, his time having expired. There being no objection, the Senator will proceed.

Mr. INGALLS. It is time for Congress to pause in this promiscuous assignment of Indians, friendly and unfriendly, to this Territory, and to inquire whether or not the rights of the Cherokees under this treaty are complied with. If they are not complied with, then Congress ought not to be asked to give its sanction to such a removal. I hold that the United States have no territory in what is known as the Indian country which is at their disposal for these purposes. It is necessary before the Nez Percés or any other band can be removed there, in the first place, that it shall be shown that they are friendly; and, in the second place, that the removal is with the assent and the approbation of the Cherokee Nation. During the last three or four or five years, in fact I may say almost ever since the treaty of 1866, the Government has proceeded without reference to the terms of those treaties to assign tribe after tribe to the Indian Territory, building up a more impregnable barrier between the States to which I have alluded and their natural and necessary outlet to the sea.

The Nez Percé Indians, Mr. President, offer a fair illustration of the very great injustice which the United States Government has frequently been guilty of toward its Indian wards. They are not what is commonly called a savage race. From time immemorial they have been regarded as friendly Indians; they have been the allies of the United States Government in the Northwest; they had a quasi civilization; they were upon a reservation that was exceedingly fertile and exceedingly desirable; they had certain treaty stipulations with the United States Government, and, as the Senator from Colorado has said, they have been the victims of the grossest wrong and the most monumental oppression. I have been at the camp of these Indians upon the Fort Leavenworth military reservation. I have seen them in their present confinement. They live in lodges and tents. They are a noble, heroic-looking race of men. They are intelligent; they are peaceable; they are inclined to submit to law; they are obedient; they are willing to labor; but in their reservation in the Northwest they were subjected to continuous encroachments by the white settlers around them; the Government neglected to carry out its treaty stipulations with them; and what was there left under the circumstances for them to do except to revolt and rebel? After a war that has few equals in the annals of heroism—as General Miles himself told me, they exhibited the most wonderful strength in the war that ensued—after a war in which they were at last conquered, they have been removed to that reservation, and I say intelligently what I do say, that they are unwilling to be removed to the Indian Territory. They have been brought up amid the rigors of a colder climate. They are pining to-day; they are suffering; they cannot endure the enervating influence of the climate of the interior and of the south, to which they are about to be assigned. They wish to be sent back north again. They ask that. They never revolted until aggressions were committed upon them, and it is a grievous wrong to those people to compel them to take quarters in the Indian Territory against their wishes and against the wishes of the communities that surround them.

Chief Joseph and the leaders of that tribe have signified their willingness to acquiesce in the authority of the United States Government. They say if they can be sent north they will obey the laws and submit to the stipulations of the treaties. They ask to be sent there.

Mr. ALLISON. North, where?

Mr. INGALLS. I say where they came from, to Idaho or to some other point in the Northwest, where they can be subjected to the same influences under which they were born. If there is any objection arising from the suggestion made by the Senator from Iowa that, in consequence of the atrocities that have been committed upon the people in Idaho Territory, feuds, and forays, and internecine war might arise, they can certainly be assigned to some other locality in the great Northwest where they will be subjected to the same climatic and territorial influences under which they have been born and raised.

Therefore, sir, upon every consideration that can be named, moral, humane, legal, constitutional, it appears to me that this section ought to be stricken out and that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas ought to prevail.

Mr. TELLER. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Texas by striking out the word "Indian," in line 772, and inserting after the word "Territory," in line 773, the words "of Idaho;" so as to read: "to a suitable location in the Territory of Idaho."

Mr. MAXEY. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment has already been proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. DORSEY.]

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment is first in order because it is an amendment to perfect the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, that amendment will be considered adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. There is objection; but it is first to be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question then is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, there probably is not a more tempting strip upon this continent than the Indian Territory. Very covetous eyes rest upon it all the time. Powerful corporations are endeavoring to seize upon it. They already have obtained by means of improvident legislation on the part of Congress a species of inchoate right which ever since they have been trying to change into a possession under the authority of the United States.

Without any shadow of right, I believe, on the part of the General Government, alternate sections of this land were given to several railroad corporations belting this fertile region in all directions, and the pledge was put in the statutes, without any consideration whatever by the Congress of the United States, that the Indian title to the land should be extinguished; that is to say, that these persons were to have possession and ownership of it when the Indian title was extinguished. What right had Congress to provide for the extin-guishment of the Indian title? If, as alleged by the Senator from Kansas, these Indians possessed this land by virtue of treaties, were placed there to own it, and had a right even to resist the presence of other Indians among them, what right had the Congress of the United States to provide that it would extinguish the Indian title? No more right than it would have to provide that it should extinguish the title to my homestead or of you to your farm, or that it would extinguish the right of the inhabitants of a State to possess that State, whether made in behalf of a railroad corporation or any one else.

Now, sir, it is contrary to the interests of these railroad corporations that any more Indians, whether they are friendly and civilized or not, shall be settled in the Indian Territory. It makes, in the language of the Senator from Kansas, a greater barrier in the way of the natural communication between certain States. It puts further off the day when the Indian title will be extinguished. It is exceedingly embarrassing to these railroad corporations and their friends, for they want an easier prey of these rich acres in the Indian Territory, and they want the Indians removed, whether it shall be done by whisky, or by war, or by emigration, or by plundering the Treasury of the United States to take out the enormous sum which shall be necessary to extingnish the Indian title. To facilitate this object we have had various schemes for the organization of an Indian government in the Territory, thinking perhaps that a Legislature made up by the Indians themselves would look with carelessness or favor upon a proposition to soon extinguish the Indian title and give these railroad companies their coveted prey.

It was the policy of the United States when it authorized the segregation of the Indian Territory that there should be a resting-place for the Indians on this continent, certainly for those who were east of the Mississippi River. The Indians, on this very plea of their being in the way, of their taking up fertile lands which the settlers might want, have been driven from one State to another, from North Carolina and from Georgia, driven off toward the Indian Territory; and at the time that selection was made it was far beyond the bounds of eastern settlement; it was open and virgin to be used for this purpose, and it was solemnly dedicated by treaty and by law for this purpose. Now, however, the same inconvenience arises. There is the same indigestible mass in the West that there formerly was in Georgia, in North Carolina, and in other States, which compelled the original moving of these Indians; and the logic of it all is——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from California will have permission to continue his remarks.

Mr. SARGENT. The logic of it all is that there is no spot on the continent where the Indians can be allowed to remain unmolested. If they have gradually in the course of years withdrawn of their own accord, and are in the Black Hills, gold is discovered, and, in spite of laws and treaties, rushes a restless, aggressive tide, and they are deprived of their possessions there. In Idaho the Nez Percés, though I believe not Joseph's band, had two reservations. The settlers, coming in there on account of the discovery of gold and finding good agricultural lands, encroached upon them, drove them off, and Indian wars arose there. You cannot plant Indians anywhere, in the most unlikely place on this continent within our jurisdiction, where you can confidently predict that they will not be removed by and by by the aggressions of our people and by the indifference of the Government of the United States or its careless dealings. The Government pursues no settled policy with reference to these things. It goes on in a sort of haphazard way as the eloquence of gentlemen may from time to time move the two Houses of Congress, changing its policy, and always at the expense of the Indian.

Now, sir, the Indian Territory is a fertile tract of country, and it is just the place for such Indians as those described by my friend from Kansas: men who are of a noble character, men who are brave, who are merciful, who are disposed to obey the laws, who are semi-civilized. There is the very place of all this continent where such men may develop their manhood and their civilization, and live in peace. That was the use for which the Indian Territory was dedicated, and I say that it is humane and just to these Indians that they should be allowed to settle there. You put them in Idaho, and it will only be a few months, perhaps, certainly only a few years, when there again Indian wars, because of aggressions upon them, are certain to take place, and they will array themselves again and fight bravely and cost us another million or two million dollars to capture them, and you will have the problem unsettled. So with reference to others situated as they are.

These Indians are now on our hands as prisoners of war, with their wives and their children, at Fort Leavenworth, in a camp there under our own power. What are we going to do with them, about five hundred altogether, I understand? They are a great expense to us as now situated. Of course that cannot be a solution of the problem. Congress ought not to adjourn and leave them in the hands of the military at Fort Leavenworth. They ought to be disposed of. Shall we send them back to Idaho, where there is no reservation whatever for them, where there is not a foot of ground dedicated to them? And even if it were dedicated under the most solemn promises, we have no assurance that the discovery of a gold or silver mine within a circuit of twenty miles of them would not root them out again. You send them to a distance where the cost of transporting supplies is very great, where in case you have to fight them you must fight them at arms' length while they fight you at their home.

I do not believe the mild and temperate climate of the Indian Territory is not adapted to the health and constitution of these Indians, and I should like to see in some authentic form from them some document or something more than mere rumor or hearsay that they are opposed to settling on the fertile land of the Indian Territory. They will make good residents of that Territory, I had almost said make good citizens. I believe they will be like many of the Indians in the Indian Territory; that under the wholesome and good influences there, under the schools which are there established, under a comparatively high civilization which can be given to them, they will develop into citizens of the United States as many of the Indians of the Territory and in that vicinity have become. Therefore, I believe the provisions of the bill are wise and humane, and to strike them out is to take a step backward, and I do not believe the Interior Department, when it sent us this proposition, did so in defiance of law, and I am sure that that which they propose is just and right.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the Senator from Texas be permitted to speak a second time on this question? If there is no objection, he will proceed.

Mr. MAXEY. I have a right to do it because the question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has permission to proceed.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish briefly to reply to the Senator from California. The first point he makes would indicate that he believed at least that those only were opposed to the removal of these Indians to the Indian Territory who are in some wise interested in the railroads or railroad lands. I agree with him that the attempted conditional grant of alternate sections of lands to railroads passing through the Indian Territory is not worth the paper it was written on. I regard it as absolutely worthless, and a proposition is now pending by those Indians in one of the committees here to inquire how it is and under what kind of claim those companies claim their lands. On that point I have nothing further to say.

In the next place, he seems to think that those who in somewise are disposed to get hold of these lands are in favor of establishing the Territory of Oklahoma. Well, I can reply to him on that subject that I am opposed to that. Under the treaties which we have with the Indians occupying the Indian Territory, the Congress of the United States has no right to legislate against the will of those people as to the establishment of a Territory different from that set forth in the treaties under which they are, and the position which was taken some time ago by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] on this question I believe to be perfectly constitutional, perfectly right, perfectly wise, that these people are treated as nations, and being nations the only mode in which the Government of the United States can deal with them is by treaty, and not by law. The history of this country will show that long before the revolutionary war, all through that war, and ever since until the last few years, the only way the Government of the United States ever attempted to make contracts with the Indian people was by treaty, and not by statute.

I believe in carrying out the contracts or treaties solemnly made, like men. The Government of the United States has put this country in the possession of these people, the Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Seminoles, and Creeks, for them and their heirs forever; the treaty reads "as long as grass grows or water runs;" and we have no right to put other people in there against their consent. We violate a treaty when we do; we violate our word; and a nation is worth nothing that will not stand to its word on any subject, however weak may be the people to which the pledge has been given.

So much for that. Now, I am told by one Senator that these are brave people and would make good citizens, and I am told by another Senator, occupying the same side of the question, that they cannot go back where they came from because they murdered twenty-five or thirty of the families there. How do you put the two statements together? If that be the character of these people, I do not want any such "good citizens." I hear it from other sources that their settlement here does not interfere with Texas. Oh, no, we can get these people down there; it does not interfere with Texas; "you are in no danger." Sir, it is within the knowledge of any man who studies this question that the Indians within the reservations are in the habit of breaking across the line into Texas and murdering our people and carrying our women and children into captivity. It is because we know these things that we object. No man knows them better than my colleague who when the governor of the State of Texas felt it his bounden duty as governor, as it was, to inquire into these things. He knows that such things did take place and this very day are taking place. So away with all this talk by men who do not know what they are talking about. They are dangerous to our community. The Senator from Kansas knows it; the Senators from Texas know it; the men who are interested in this matter more than anybody else know it; and the Congress of the United States is acting unwisely not only toward the Indians within this Territory, who are there under solemn treaties with the United States, but is acting unwisely toward the three great States bordering upon the Indian Territory, and who have the right to have their territories peaceably protected under the Constitution by the Government of the United States.

The question was asked, "What are you going to do with these people; where will you put them?" I was only surprised that in the Senate of the United States such a question should have been asked. Were they not born somewhere? Did they not live somewhere? Did they not have a home somewhere before the war took place between the Nez Percés, under Chief Joseph, and Miles and Gibbon? Did they not have a home? Did they not have their hunting-grounds? Then, I ask, why not put them back where they came from? If they make the brave and the noble and the generous citizens that the Senator from California tells us about, then put them back there in the arms of the people from whence they came; but if they be the murderers of women and children that the Senator from Iowa says, then do not send them down to a people who are not responsible for them.

Under this view of the case I have moved to strike out the clause proposing to put them in the Indian Territory, which is my object. The Senator from Colorado proposes to perfect the text by striking out "Indian Territory" and moving them back to the Territory of Idaho, where they belong, which is the answer to the question that was asked; and I accept that, because all I want is to do justice. It is no injustice to the people in Idaho to send these Indians back where they were before. It is an injustice not only to the people within the Indian Territory, retarding civilization, but it is an injustice to the border people of Kansas and the border people of Texas to have these people sent down there among them, who were driven away from their former habitations because they had murdered twenty-five or thirty families.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado will be allowed to speak a second time if there be no objection.

Mr. TELLER. I will propose an amendment which will permit me to speak. After the remarks of the Senator from California, I wish to enter a disclaimer, so far as I am concerned, against any desire on my part to enable any railroad company or anybody except the Indians to use or occupy the Indian Territory. I believe it has been set apart to the Indians and that it belongs to the Indians; and if this were a proposition to send there Indians who were willing to go, I should have no objection, but, Mr. President, it is to take Indians who are the unfortunate victims of a war forced upon them against their wishes and against what they think is their interest and put them in this Indian Territory. Now, perhaps of all men the Indian is the most attached to his home and to the country in which he was born. About a year ago Congress without much attention passed in an appropriation bill of this kind a provision that the Poncas, a semi-civilized tribe living north of the Missouri River, might be sent to the Indian Territory. The whole number of them was eight or nine hundred, occupying a large amount of valuable land, and it was desirable to get them off.

Mr. ALLISON. May I interrupt the Senator? He says that the provision in relation to the Poncas last year was passed without much consideration. The question of the removal of the Poncas had been under consideration for many years, and most stoutly disputed by our distinguished friend from Nebraska, and they were removed because they were occupying a reservation belonging to the Sioux tribe by treaty, and the Sioux were constantly making war upon them because they were on their reservation. It was a necessity.

Mr. PADDOCK. Even in that case it was not within the rule. It was a positive hardship to the tribe, and they ought to be brought back.

Mr. TELLER. I know something of the history of the Poncas. They made their first treaty with the United States Government in 1817, and they have kept it as religiously as any people ever kept their vows.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not say that they violated the treaty.

Mr. TELLER. They had by treaty made in 1828 and by subsequent treaties an agreement with the Government that they should remain on that identical land. Subsequently the Government, in violation of its faith, to its utter degredation and disgrace, proceeded to allot that land to other Indians, and then made that an excuse for moving these Indians from the land of their birth into a land that they had never seen.

About a year ago ten of these Indians were taken by the authorities and sent down to view the ground where they were to go to live. When almost there eight of them deserted, and for forty days those men, without anything except their rifles, through a country entirely destitute of habitations, destitute in a great degree of water, traveled to reach their homes. When they got down near the Indian Territory they could not be compelled to go another day's journey, and fled into the wilderness and back to their cabins. The Government by force took these seven or eight hundred Poncas down there and put them on the Indian reservation against their will, and the report of the agent shows that four years would entirely destroy the remnant of that tribe that had friendly relations with us for three quarters of a century, contrary, I say, to the dictates of humanity and in utter violation of every principle of justice they were removed, and it stands as a shame and a disgrace to this nation, as it ever will. If there is any page of American history that ought to make an American blush it is when he reads the page that treats of the treatment of these red men of the forest. Finding three millions of them here when we settled the country, we have reduced them by our perfidy, by our disregard of treaties, by carrying on wars contrary to all civilized rules and regulations, to less than three hundred thousand, and now at the rate we are going you and I, Mr. President, may live to see every one of them under the sod; and yet we assume to be a nation of honorable characteristics!

Mr. President, I say if these Nez Percés were willing to go I should be entirely willing that they should, but they are not willing to go. Smarting under the wrongs inflicted upon them they proposed to flee this land, and they asked nothing from this Government but to be allowed to get out of it. They said, "We will seek protection under the flag of Great Britain." It had somehow reached these Indians as it has all the Indians that the British government manages to maintain its reputation among the Indians; it keeps its treaty obligations and we do not; and they said, "We will leave this country;" said, as Joseph said to the commissioners when they went to treat with him, this was a nation of liars, a nation of treaty-breakers, and they would go to Canada. They started and the Government brought them back. They were willing to take themselves out and to remain out of this country if the Government had been willing they should. But we bring them back. We first incite them to war, then chase them with the Army and bring them back, and now it is proposed to send them contrary to their will to the Indian Territory.

The Senator from California alluded casually to the treatment of the Indians in the Black Hills. I want to call the attention of the Senate, if they will listen to me for a moment, to the treatment of the Sioux, a war brought on, I say, by the treatment on the part of the Government, not on the part of the Indians. We had stipulated in the most solemn manner that those Indians should occupy this ground, now known as the Black Hills, for all time. Some trappers and hunters who went into that region of country discovered that there might be gold. Not satisfied to wait till the curiosity and the cupidity of the people had carried them there, in violation of law the Government organizes an expedition with a scientific head and sends it out there to determine whether there was gold there or not, that it might thereby invite the people of the United States to trespass upon the Indian soil and the Indian reservation. Not satisfied with that, the Government sent an army there in direct violation of a provision that the army should not invade these reservations. Out of that grew the war, and Sitting Bull fled from the protection of this Government over into Canada, where he now remains.

Mr. President, the first thing to be done on the part of the Government, if it is disposed to make itself respectable in this Indian matter, is to maintain its treaty obligations. It did not do it with these people whose case is now under consideration; and, inasmuch as we did not do that, the Government has no right to treat them as malefactors. It has no more right than any government, having subdued an honorable enemy, to put them to death or to treat them as prisoners of war. They are no more to be treated as prisoners of war than the men who surrendered on a hundred battle-fields during the war that has recently closed. These men are entitled, I say, to be returned to the place from which they came; and if they obey the laws, it is the duty of the Government to protect them against any violence at the hands of the settlers, if there is any danger of it, which I deny.

It is not a question whether the Indian Territory ought to be settled by Indians or whether it ought not. It is a question of good faith and honorable dealing on the part of the Government; and I say now that Indian wars can be stopped from this time if the Government will enter upon a system of obeying its own treaties. If the Government will do with the Indians what it demands of the Indians there will be no more Indian wars on this continent.

Mr. President, in my own State to-day there are signs of war and hostility on the part of the Utes. This Government, having made a treaty with them to pay them a certain sum per annum, is in default $125,000 now, at least $75,000 of which is standing to their credit on the books of the Department, already appropriated. Not a dollar of that can be taken by this present Indian administration for some reason; not a dollar can be got to treat with these Indians; not a dollar to pay their back annuities, while it lies idle in the Treasury; and yet there is danger and there is a fair probability that unless some change is made in the administration of affairs in reference to these Indians there will be a war; and I suppose when they, too, will be taken prisoners then some will want to move them off to some section of country, and we shall hear it charged upon them that they have been violating their treaty stipulations, when it is a notorious fact, known to every man on the border who has paid any attention to the subject, that it is the Government that violates its treaty obligations in the first instance, and thereby induces the Indians to do so.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I wish to inquire whether or not the Senate is proceeding under the five-minute rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado was proceeding under unanimous consent to speak a second time. The Senate is acting under the five-minute rule, and the Chair asked the distinct question whether the Senator should be allowed to proceed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I give notice that hereafter I shall insist on the enforcement of the rule.

Mr. EATON. We have adopted the five-minute rule. We extended the time to the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from California, and I give notice now that I shall object to any further extension.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has this bill in charge, representing the Committee on Appropriations, whether this removal is the result of a conference with the Indians and at which their consent was obtained?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course the Senate Committee on Appropriations have had no conference with these Indians, but we understand from the Interior Department, having charge of these Indians, that this is the best possible method of treating this subject.

Mr. PADDOCK. Does the Senator himself understand from the Indian Office that there has been a conference with these Indians and that they have consented to the removal? That to me is an important consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot say that, in the face of what the Senator from Kansas says is within his own knowledge, namely, that they do not wish to go.

Mr. PADDOCK. I make the inquiry because I have been absent from the Chamber, and have not had the pleasure of listening to the debate till within a few minutes.

Mr. ALLISON. My impression is that these Indians would prefer to go back to their old hunting-grounds and roaming-places and their old associations, if we are to do what they want done, but that I take it is a question wholly within our own discretion what we shall do.

Mr. PADDOCK. May I inquire of the Senator if they had a defined district or section of country which was known as a reservation for them or in which they had hunting privileges which they considered to be their abode?

Mr. ALLISON. There were two small reservations assigned to the Nez Percé Indians, Joseph's band, and White Bird's band.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that this colloquy cannot go on without unanimous consent of the Senate under the rule.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator can speak in my five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska by addressing the Chair can have his five minutes.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am simply asking some questions, within the limit of my time, of the Senator who has charge of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has spoken several times on the bill. If there is no objection he will proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no desire to speak further. I was simply answering the questions of the Senator from Nebraska. Indeed, I would prefer not to answer them if I could avoid it.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am seeking light and groping in darkness in reference to this matter. I am a friend of the Indian so far as it is practicable to be at this juncture.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to say in answer to the inquiry of the Senator that there were two reservations assigned to the Nez Percé Indians; but the Joseph band and the band at the head of which is White Bird refused to go on those reservations. General Howard and the Indian agent whose name I have forgotten, Montieth I believe it was, undertook to make a treaty with Joseph's band and White Bird's band, and they agreed to go on one of those reservations. They, after promising to go on the reservation, instead of doing so went on the war-path. That is all there is of this question. Whether or not the Indian agent or the Government or these bands were to blame I am not prepared to say and will not say now. There are two small reservations. Of course Joseph's band could go upon either of those reservations if he saw proper to do so and if the Government is willing that his band may go back there.

Mr. PADDOCK. Do I understand it to be the policy of the Indian Office to undertake to concentrate all these Indians within the limits of the Indian Territory?

Mr. ALLISON. I am not familiar with the general policy of the Indian Office. I presume that is not their purpose, however.

Mr. PADDOCK. Unless I can be satisfied that these Indians themselves have consented to the removal and are anxious that they may be removed to that Territory, and that the Indians now in the Territory, the more civilized tribes, also have assented and are desirous that these Indians should go there, I certainly would be unwilling to vote with the committee upon this question. I desire on all questions, so far as I may do so, to stand by the committee; but after the experience that we have had during the past few years in respect of the involuntary removal of some of the tribes of Indians, I am unwilling myself to be a party to any other removal. I know there have been two or three cases of removals of tribes of Indians within the limits of my State which have been cases of very great hardship; the removals have been very great wrongs to those Indians, such wrongs as white people under similar circumstances would resent most violently.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, this is a very important question which is now before the Senate. Though the ultimate policy of the Government may not be decided upon this provision in this bill, yet every step we take is a step toward deciding it one way or the other. I want simply to call the attention of the Senate to a few facts, as many as I can in the space of five minutes, although I do not know but that I should do better by proposing to extend the five-minute rule for an hour, not for the purpose of speaking an hour myself, but for the purpose of allowing the debate to go on. I might move an indefinite postponement of the bill so as to let the debate go on without limitation as to time.

In the first place, nothing is clearer than that we have no right to place these Indians in the Indian Territory without the consent of the Indian nations or tribes which are now there. My friend from Iowa shakes his head, but, unless there has been some treaty made with them since the original treaty, that is clearly true.

Mr. ALLISON. The treaty of 1866 provides that west of the ninety-sixth meridian friendly Indians may be settled.

Mr. THURMAN. I said unless there was some subsequent treaty, and my friend now tells me there is a treaty that west of the ninety-sixth meridian other Indians may be settled there. If there is that treaty which authorizes us to go upon the lands, which belong for instance to the Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches, which are all west of the ninety-sixth meridian, and half the Chickasaw Nation nearly is west of that meridian—if there is such a treaty as authorizes us to do that, then of course we can take them down there. It had, however, escaped my attention that there was any such treaty made with them.

Mr. INGALLS. The fifteenth and sixteenth articles of the treaty of 1866.

Mr. THURMAN. My attention is called to that for the first time. Now, what I wish to call the attention of the Senate to is this: the Indian Territory is three hundred miles east and west by an average of two hundred and twenty-two north and south; and then west of that there are one hundred and seventy-eight miles east and west by thirty-four and a half miles north and south, a kind of handle projecting out to the west. There are in that Territory seventy-one thousand square miles, or in acres 45,440,000. Its population according to the last estimate was 65,500, or less than one person to the square mile, while the country, it is said, is capable of supporting as much as almost any equal amount of territory in the United States.

Now, Mr. President, it is simply impossible that that country can wait to be filled up by the natural increase of its present inhabitants. Then, if it is to be filled up at all, one of two things must be done: steps must be taken by which, with the assent of its present occupants, white people may become settlers there; or you must fill it up by transplanting all the Indians of the United States upon it, if it is to be filled up at all.

Which policy is likely to prevail? I think there will be a very great pressure, as there has been for several years, to fill it up by transferring Indians from other parts of the United States to that Territory. They are not a welcome population in any State or Territory of the Union; the people want to get rid of them; and they will naturally press Congress to take measures to send them into this Indian Territory. On the other hand the States that border the Indian Territory, Texas, Kansas, and Arkansas, all of them will be very much opposed to such an aggregation of an Indian population there, especially as it will bring into that Territory Indians who are not by any means the civilized or semi-civilized persons that the Cherokees and the Choctaws are.

I think, therefore, that the ultimate policy this Government will have to pursue will be by some treaty obligation with these Indians to secure the right for white settlers to go in upon that Territory. I see no other solution that is likely to be wise and just and reasonable. It is a difficult subject, it is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not wish to take up any more time than the rule allows; otherwise I should have extended somewhat more fully the view that I take.

Mr. BECK. I hope the Senator will be allowed to go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Notice was given by the Senator from Connecticut that he would object to any violation of the rule.

Mr. EATON. I move to rescind the rule. Do not let us go on against the rule we have made.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope my friend from Connecticut will withdraw that motion.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not care anything about it. I can take some other time. I have no feeling about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Senator from Ohio will proceed. The Chair hears no objection. The Senator from Ohio has unanimous consent to proceed.

Mr. THURMAN. I would rather not go on in violation of the rule.

Mr. BECK. I rose for the purpose of moving that this bill be informally laid aside, and that we adjourn or do something else. It is perfectly obvious that all the information necessary can be obtained in the Indian Department by consulting the original terms on which this Indian Territory was laid off and the subsequent reservations allotted to these Indians. All this information can be had to-morrow morning at the Interior Department. I have not got the information now. I observe by looking over Mr. Spofford's work that there are in the Indian Territory forty-four million acres of land, nearly sixty-nine thousand square miles, eighteen million of acres yet unsurveyed. I find that reservations have been made——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has already spoken once on this question.

Mr. BECK. I think not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs the Senator's pardon. The Chair was wrong; the Senator from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. BECK. I was about to say that the Cherokees have had a reservation of 3,800,000 acres allotted to them; the Choctaws have had a reservation of 6,668,000 acres; the Creeks 3,125,000; the Seminoles 200,000; the Quapaws 104,000; the Ottawas 25,000, and divers other tribes, making in all about 24,000,000 acres; leaving in the Territory some 30,000,000 acres yet unallotted; and I find on looking over the books that in 1866 and in 1867 that Kiowas, Comanches, and others had large amounts given to them by executive orders.

Several SENATORS. By treaty.

Mr. BECK. A treaty was made first with the Kiowas and Comanches and Apaches giving them 3,549,000 acres, but they were not permitted to go upon it, and thereupon by executive order they were assigned to another part of the Territory; and so the United States all through has been dealing with a large portion of this Territory as if it controlled it. I suppose the chairman of the committee, not expecting the matter to come in this form, we being not fully prepared, now will consent that the bill be laid aside and that we adjourn or go into executive session, and by to-morrow morning every fact can be ascertained accurately from the Interior Department.

Mr. SARGENT. If the Senator in charge of the bill has no objection, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection; but before doing so I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that so far as this debate has progressed it does not disclose any doubt of the right of the Government to set aside certain portions of this Territory to Indian tribes. It is a question of policy rather than a question of right, because the right is perfectly clear.

Mr. BECK. I understand that is the Senator's view.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and eighteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 7, 1878.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. S. DOMER, D. D., St. Paul's English Lutheran church, Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

BOARD OF ASSISTANTS FOR UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 4548) providing for the establishment of a board of assistants for the United States Navy, and for other purposes, and the accompanying report be reprinted, the first supply having been exhausted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SOLDIERS' REUNION AT DES MOINES, IOWA.

Mr. MARSH. I ask unanimous consent to report back, with a favorable recommendation, from the Committee on Military Affairs, for present consideration, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) granting the use of tents at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Des Moines, Iowa.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The joint resolution was read. It authorizes the Secretary of War to send from some convenient Government arsenal, to be used at the soldiers' reunion at or near Des Moines, Iowa, to be held during the fall of the year of 1878, such tents as can be conveniently spared; said tents to be returned after the holding of said reunion meeting in as like good condition as when received.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARSH moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MULLER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is the unfinished business at the time of the adjournment yesterday, the bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia. In the absence of the gentleman from Maine, Mr. HALE, the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. SAMPSON, will occupy the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. What becomes of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour is interrupted by the unfinished business. It may be had afterward, however.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House, as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, under the order of the House, now resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia. The Clerk will report the pending paragraph and the amendment thereto.

The Clerk read the pending paragraph, as follows:

To the extent to which Congress shall approve the said estimates they shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent. thereof, and the remaining 50 per cent. thereof shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property in said District other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia, in such manner as the commissioners of the District of Columbia may deem best, and shall be collected in the manner now provided by law for the collection of taxes in said District, with such change in the manner of advertising sales for taxes as may seem expedient to said commissioners: Provided, That the rate of taxation in any one year shall not exceed $1.50 on every $100 of real and personal estate not exempt by law, according to the cash valuation thereof: And provided further, Upon lands used and held solely for agricultural purposes, and to be so designated by the assessors in their annual returns, the rate for any one year shall not exceed $1 on every $100.

The committee recommended an amendment, to strike out in line 198 "fifty" and to insert in lieu thereof "seventy-five;" so that it will read:

Provided, That the rate of taxation in any one year shall not exceed $1.75 on every $100 of real and personal estate.

Mr. HENDEE rose.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to be heard on the amendment I have offered.

Mr. HENDEE. The pending amendment is that reported by the committee. What is the amendment of the gentleman from Texas?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first on the amendment reported by the committee. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] will be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 189 strike out "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty;" and in line 190 strike out "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixty;" so that it will read:

To the extent to which Congress shall approve the said estimates they shall appropriate the amount of 40 per cent. thereof, and the remaining 60 per cent. thereof shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property in said District, &c.

Mr. HENDEE. I understand the proposition now before the House is the amendment of the committee to strike out "$1.50" and insert "$1.75."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. HENDEE. I stated yesterday I did not understand this to be the request of the majority of the committee, and that I thought it had come into the bill by mistake or at the request of certain members of the committee, rather than by a direct vote of the committee.

Now if the sum of $1.75 is agreed upon, then in line 205 the tax upon the real estate used for agricultural purposes should be increased to $1.25, as the committee have agreed there should be only one-third difference between the taxation on property in the city and that in the country used for agricultural purposes, but personally I have thought that a tax of $1.50 upon the real and personal property of this District, as now imposed by law, is ample for all the current expenses of the District, and that anything which is required outside of current expenses should be taken care of by independent or direct appropriation.

I am not particular, as a member of the House or of the committee either, that the rate should be retained at $1.50, but in my judgment it is better that we confine it to that limit. In view of this fact that if you make the limit $1.75, I am quite sure the history of taxation in this District will warrant me in saying that the outside limit will be imposed.

Mr. EDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Vermont a question, whether this independent appropriation that he speaks of will not come directly from the Treasury instead of any portion of it coming from the taxable property of the District?

Mr. HENDEE. It certainly will unless an extra tax is provided for by special act.

Mr. EDEN. And does the gentleman from Vermont hold, after we appropriate, if we do appropriate the amount fixed in this bill, 50 per cent. of the expenses, that the Government of the United States ought to pay over and above that to the exclusion of the District?

Mr. HENDEE. I think the Government ought not to pay anything independent of 50 per cent. of the expenses of running this District, whether for current expenses or special improvements. I do not think the Government ought to make any special appropriation.

Mr. EDEN. Where will the gentleman get the money to provide for the contingencies to which he has referred which might exceed the amount that would be realized upon $1.50 on the $100?

Mr. HENDEE. I cannot conceive of any such contingency at this time.

Mr. EDEN. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. HENDEE. I did not say there was any and I do not think there can be any.

Mr. BUCKNER. Will the gentleman from Vermont inform me what is the estimate of the amount of taxation that will be realized on $1.75 per $100 of the taxable value?

Mr. HENDEE. I have not stopped to figure up; but at $1.50 on the $100 there will be obtained about $1,500,000 as the share of the District; which, with the share of the Government of the United States, will make the sum of $3,000,000 to run the government of the District. It seems to me that that will be ample.

Mr. LAPHAM. Will the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HENDEE. Certainly.

Mr. LAPHAM. By reference to lines 188 and 189 it will be seen that after the District officers have perfected their estimate of annual expenses, the whole subject is to undergo review at the hands of Congress. To the extent to which Congress shall approve the said estimates, it shall appropriate 50 per cent. of the amount, and the District shall furnish the other 50 per cent. Now, whether the maximum of taxation be fixed at $1.75 or $1.50 per $100 cannot be material, in view of the fact that every appropriation for the expenses of this District is to undergo the scrutiny of Congress.

Mr. HENDEE. Allow me to say that the difficulty lies in this: if you fix the rate at $1.75 per hundred dollars, that will give the commissioners power to estimate to that extent; and the great trouble is that Congress will be influenced by the estimates of the commissioners.

Mr. LAPHAM. I think there will be no difficulty of that kind. If Congress sees that inordinate appropriations are recommended, it will cut them down.

Mr. HENDEE. Congress is not always interested in the expenditure.

Mr. LAPHAM. Congress is interested, because it is proposed that the Government shall pay 50 per cent. of the estimates; therefore Congress will have a direct interest in keeping the estimates within proper bounds; therefore there is no danger of excessive taxation, with this reserved power in Congress to keep the estimates within proper bounds.

Mr. HENDEE. Let there be a vote upon the amendment of the committee.

The question was taken upon the amendment recommended by the committee, to strike out "$1.50" and to insert "$1.75," and it was not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the amendment offered by Mr. REAGAN.

Mr. REAGAN. I have modified the amendment to some extent, and I ask that the Clerk now read it.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In line 189 strike out "50" and insert "25," and in line 190 strike out "50" and insert "75;" so that that portion of the paragraph will read as follows:

To the extent to which Congress shall approve the said estimates they shall appropriate the amount of 25 per cent. thereof, and the remaining 75 per cent. thereof shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property in said District, other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I ask to have my amendment read.

Mr. REAGAN. I cannot yield for that purpose now.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I have a right to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is it an amendment to the amendment or a further amendment to the paragraph?

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. It is an amendment to the paragraph.

Mr. REAGAN. The amendment proposed by me has reference to the proportion of money to be appropriated by the Federal Government toward meeting the expenses of the District government. In looking to what the expenses of the District government will be under this bill it will be necessary to look at something further than the mere administration of the affairs of the government. More is provided for and more is contemplated to be appropriated for than that. I call attention to the following paragraph:

All contracts for the construction, improvement, alteration, or repairs of the streets, avenues, highways, alleys, gutters, sewers, and all work of like nature shall be made and entered into only by and with the official consent of a majority of the commissioners of the District, of which majority the commissioner appointed from the Engineer Corps of the Army shall be one. And the entire control and supervision of the execution and fulfillment of all contracts entered into and the preparation of all plans, specifications, and estimates for work as above mentioned shall be vested in and exercised by that commissioner of the District of Columbia appointed from the Engineer Corps of the Army, as hereinbefore provided.

Then, there is another paragraph of the bill to which I call attention, and upon the examination of which it will be seen that further expenses may be incurred:

Before any moneys shall be raised or taxes levied and collected for the purpose of carrying on the government of the District of Columbia, the said commissioners shall submit annually to the council for their approval a statement, showing in detail the work proposed to be undertaken by them during the fiscal year next ensuing, and the estimated cost thereof; and also an estimate in detail, which shall include the cost of all courts in said District, except the United States courts, the judges, officers, witnesses, jail fees, and all expenses incident thereto; also the cost of constructing, repairing, and maintaining all bridges, authorized by law, across the Potomac River, within the District of Columbia, and also all other streams in said District; the cost of maintaining all public institutions of charity, asylums, hospitals, reformatories, and prisons, and the Washington Aqueduct and its appurtenances, belonging to and controlled by the District of Columbia, and which are now by law supported, wholly or in part, by the United States or District of Columbia, of the amount necessary to defray the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the next fiscal year.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REAGAN. I surely have not occupied five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I will take the floor and yield my five minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I thank the gentleman.

I have read these paragraphs for the purpose of calling attention to the things which the Government of the United States will be called upon to appropriate for outside of the ordinary expenses of the city government, and they include the general improvement of the city.

The Government itself owns considerable property, but it improves it at its own expense, as will be seen when we come to consider the grounds around the Capitol, the Botanic Garden, the Smithsonian Institution grounds, and the public grounds down to the Potomac River and the public parks and grounds in the city. The Government improves all these grounds at its own expense, but these improvements are made as much for the convenience of the people of the city as for the Government; in fact, far more so, because they are much more numerous than the officials of the Government.

It is now proposed that the Government shall pay one-half of the expense of all other improvements, whether they benefit the Government or the city; and it is proposed to make that a part of the organic law of the District. It is said that this shall be done because the Government owns one-half of the property in the city; that, I understand, is the assumption. Now, it cannot be supposed that the Government owns one-fourth of the real estate of the city; and it improves its own real estate at its own expense, and does not ask the city to contribute anything for that purpose. In that estimate is left out entirely the personal property of the District. Now, will any gentleman tell me where there is a city within whose limits may be property of any State where the Legislature of that State appropriates one cent to aid the people in carrying on their local government? And is there higher reason why we should do so here?

Then, sir, if we take into consideration the amount of taxable property in this city and the rate at which such property is taxed elsewhere the Government has not an interest to the extent of one-eighth.

It was suggested yesterday that formerly the Government made very small allowances, as a matter of favor; but the practice has grown until we are asked, not only to take care of the public property, but to pay half of all the expenses of the city government, while supporting the United States courts. This demand is made as a claim, and we are called ungenerous if we do not concede it. If such a question could go before the constituents of gentlemen here who propose to tax their people to pay what ought to be paid by others it would receive a different sort of decision. Suppose a gentleman residing in this city should come to a member on this floor and say: "Sir, you are a member of Congress, and I ask you to pay half of my taxes;" that would be regarded as a very singular request, and one which could not be conceded; but the same citizen residing here has no hesitation in asking that my constituents shall aid in paying these expenses of the District that should be paid by local taxation. Such a proposition could not be agreed to except upon the principle that we are always exceedingly liberal with other people's money. We give freely when we give the money of others. When the people know that in this time of commercial and financial depression everywhere, when they are taxed to the last extremity in their own localities, we are voting their hard-earned dollars to pay the taxes of people in a better condition to pay taxes than themselves, to pay the taxes of a city where millions on millions of public money are disbursed annually, it seems to me that a different view will be taken of this question. After the Government maintains its own courts at its own expense and takes care of its own property and improves it at its own expense, if we should contribute one-quarter toward making improvements for the benefit of the citizens of this District and one-quarter toward the expenses of the government of the city, it seems to me that we do quite enough.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Speaker, I cannot help expressing some surprise at the amendment of my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and the remarks submitted by him in connection with it. He takes the ground that in the payment of the expenses of the District of Columbia the Federal Government ought to pay no more than 25 per cent. on the dollar. This subject has been before the Congress of the United States certainly since the year 1835; and various committees have had it under consideration, but not one of them up to 1876 has ever put the proportion of expenses that should be borne by the Federal Government at less than 50 per cent.

Now, the gentleman says as an excuse for his amendment—I might say as an apology for it, because it ought to be apologized for——

Mr. REAGAN. I do not desire to make any apology for it.

Mr. HUNTON. Well, I offer an apology for you. The gentleman says that while the Government owns half the property it improves its own property, and therefore it ought not to be obliged to pay for the improvement of the streets and the running of the District government. Why, sir, does not my friend from Texas know that every individual in the District of Columbia improves his own property as the Federal Government improves its property, and that every dollar expended for the improvement of private property in this District adds to the taxable value of that private property? The gentleman does not state—he may not recollect for the moment—that the Federal Government pays no taxes upon its real estate in the District of Columbia. If the Federal Government were taxed upon its real estate as the people are taxed on theirs, the expense to be paid on the part of the Federal Government for running this District would be about 50 per cent.

Mr. BLOUNT. In making that estimate does the gentleman put down as belonging to the Government of the United States all the streets of the city?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir; and I ask the gentleman, as has been suggested here to-day, whether the people of this District are to be taxed alone to improve the streets of the Federal capital which were laid out not for the purpose of having here a commercial or a manufacturing city, but to have a grand capital for the Federal Government. Hence the streets were laid out ranging in width from one hundred and sixty feet down to ninety feet?

It has been suggested here this morning that the Government might give up these streets to the District. If the Federal Government chooses to surrender these avenues to the people of the District, to be owned and built upon if they choose, to be reduced to the ordinary width of streets in the cities of this country, there might be some reason in the proposition. But the Federal Government holds the fee-simple title to these streets; and the people of the District are taxed year by year to pay a portion of the improvement upon these streets.

Mr. REAGAN. Surely the gentleman knows that public streets have no individual owner, but belong to the whole people.

Mr. HUNTON. I know exactly the contrary, if my friend will allow me to say so.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no doubt that the Government originally owned the land; but the gentleman is too good a lawyer to say that there can be any individual owner or Government owner of any public street.

Mr. HUNTON. I am too good a lawyer to assail the judgment of the Supreme Court, which has decided that the fee-simple title to every street in the city of Washington is in the Federal Government.

Mr. REAGAN. Then there is nothing else like it in the whole history of the world.

Mr. HUNTON. The Federal Government has the right to control these streets; it may to-morrow close them up or use them for any purpose.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER. I want to say a word about the streets and avenues of this city. I want to call to the attention of gentlemen a piece of history. Why were these immense avenues laid out? Why were lettered streets running one way and numbered streets the other at right angles and then these avenues thrust through them diagonally, with their circles radiating from all points, first to the Capitol and then in the neighborhood of the President's house? History tells us that this District was about to be laid out by Washington at the time when the mob of Paris was overawing the National Assembly of France by erecting barricades across the narrow streets of Paris. That was brought to the attention of George Washington, and in order to prevent that in the great future he made these wide avenues radiating from the places where the public buildings were to be erected, so that it would be impossible ever for the mob of this city to barricade and overawe and imprison the National Legislature or the President. There is no place near the public buildings, as they were planned by Washington, where a troop of horse cannot charge five different ways into a square if necessary. And these great streets which impose these heavy burdens upon the people are simply a proper precautionary measure of the General Government in having this Capitol here, and have no sort of relation to the convenience, the commercial prosperity, or the commercial uses of the people of the District, and therefore we ought to pay for them. They are for the use of the nation. They may not be of use this day. They were waste when Washington laid them out; but the time may come when misguided men may come here in force and overawe the Legislature of the nation. Then there is provision by which the avenues cannot be blocked up, so the force of the nation may not relieve the legislators of the people; and for such purpose we ought to pay for them and the expense of maintaining them just as much as we ought to pay for the forts on the coast. It is unfair to the people of this District to tax them for these avenues.

Mr. LAPHAM. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas cannot be characterized in any other way than as treating this District of Columbia too harshly. It is niggardly parsimony on our part to propose to pay one-fourth of the annual expense of improving this District in which is located the seat of our National Government. It should be remembered that the territory of this District was set apart for the national capital and that the great mass of expenditure of money made here is made for the purpose of promoting the health and comfort of the representatives of the people who are here for a great portion of the year; of the executive officers, the heads of Departments, the representatives of foreign governments, and the vast number of employés in the Departments who make it a permanent residence. They are all interested in having a healthy atmosphere, in having good drainage and sewerage, and having everything which will promote their comfort and the health of this city as a residence. These various classes of persons to whom I have referred, Mr. Speaker, constitute a large quota of the population of this city and they should be provided for in these respects at the expense of the nation, and surely the practice which has hitherto prevailed of the General Government contributing one-half of the quota of this expense, coupled with the reservation in this act that Congress shall at all times have supreme control over the amount to be expended, it seems to me relieves this case of any danger so far as burdens on the Treasury are concerned. I hope, therefore, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas will be rejected and the recommendation of the committee that Congress shall appropriate one-half of the annual expense will be retained as one of the provisions of this bill when it shall become a law.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the cost of improving these streets in the city is represented in some $13,000,000 of bonds bearing interest at 3.65 per cent. It is said there is a floating debt growing out of the same and large enough to make the amount up to about $15,000,000. If, therefore, Congress should assume the whole that has been expended, wastefully or otherwise, upon these so-called improvements and have to meet the interest on those bonds, the amount would be just about $550,000. The estimate of the commissioners of the District is about 3,400,000 for the expense of the District during the coming year, but if you omit those things which are declared to be exceptional it is about $3,000,000, consequently one-sixth would represent the interest on the total cost and of all the waste which has been made upon these streets. This should be considered in estimating the proportion which honorable gentlemen think the United States should bear. If people did not choose to come and live in this city and take the chances of sharing the expenses of these plans of improvement they were under no necessity of doing so. When they found their streets too wide they applied about eight years ago to Congress for permission to make the roadways and paved portions narrower, and not only were their streets made as narrow as they wanted, but you threw into their door-yards and inside their fences some thirty or forty feet of the most valuable real estate they have. Upon a hundred foot lot you gave them 30 or 40 per cent. additional of land, the most valuable in the city and which can never be of any more use to the Government.

Now the proposition is to take this estimate of $3,000,000 and appropriate out of the Treasury of the United States a million and a half per annum, and we are told we shall be niggardly if we do not do this. I should say we had a great deal better assume squarely these $15,000,000 of 3.65 bonds if we want to pay for past mistakes and then let the people take care of their own local affairs just as the people, of say, Saratoga would do, for I will not make a comparison with a business city since gentlemen urge that that would not be fair. The people of Saratoga would be doing what would be thought an absurd thing if they were to ask the State of New York to pave their streets and light them and educate their children because Saratoga is not a business town.

I have been in a good many cities of the Union and know that numbers of them have as much street room proportionally as Washington. Indianapolis, the capital of Indiana, has in general the same diagonal system of streets and avenues, and they are as wide relatively as they are here. The city of Cleveland in Ohio has relatively as much street-way as you have here. I venture the assertion that the city of Savannah has more. I know that Nashville, Tennessee, has nearly if not quite as much. Through the country everywhere you will find the same thing, and the people take pride in their airiness and beauty and would not change them.

Mr. HENDEE. I am certainly very much surprised at the speech of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. COX.] I do not know what he meant to say, and in fact he did not say much any way that tends toward any conclusion. There was no particular point in what he did say; and for that very reason it may do some harm, else I would not reply. The gentleman spoke of the city of Saratoga and other cities in comparison with this city. He does not recognize the fact that in this city the United States Government absolutely owns the fee not only in the streets but as a whole in fifty-five hundredths of the entire area of this District.

We do not by this bill, or in fact by any bill, tax the property of the United States directly. We make the United States pay in proportion to its property by direct appropriation; that is by this bill 50 per cent. Now we have the State building going up; we have the Treasury building; we have the building of the Interior Department; we have in buildings here some twenty or thirty millions of dollars invested by the United States. Should it not pay the expenses of improving the streets and lighting them around that property? It has the magnificent Capitol, which its own money has built. And yet the gentleman says that because people have seen fit to come here to live they must take the entire burden of supporting the government of this city and maintaining these streets and taking care of United States property even. What an idea!

It is true there has been expended here some $15,000,000 in the improvement of this city in the last few years; and that has been as much for the benefit of the United States and its property as for the benefit of the people and their property, and perhaps more so. And now shall we say the United States shall not pay its share of the interest on that debt and the principal too? Certainly not. The gentleman from Ohio was not here in 1874 when Congress, not the people of this District, took the matter in hand. And in 1871 also, when it appointed agents, as to whose appointment the District people had not the slightest voice, to make this expenditure.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Did not the people of this District insist upon that being done?

Mr. HENDEE. I suppose I might ask the gentleman from Ohio to cut his throat, but that would not make it necessary for him to do it. Even admitting for argument's sake that Congress may have been asked by the citizens to do this, still the United States Government absolutely had the control of this expenditure and made it for the benefit of the people of the United States as well as of the citizens here. And now shall we be so mean, so despicable as to say that the United States will not pay any of that debt? Certainly not. That was the tendency of the speech of the gentleman from Ohio if it had any tendency. He must have been soured about something or he never would have taken such ground as that in regard to the expenses in this District and its debt.

Mr. BURCHARD. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Vermont to the fact that the United States paid five-sixths of the cost of the improvement opposite its own property.

Mr. HENDEE. I want to say in answer to that that I have looked up the statistics and up to the present time the people—remember, the people of the District of Columbia—have paid over $30,000,000 in improving the streets in this city and other property while the Government of the United States has not paid $9,000,000. That is the proportion as it stands to-day, and now I want to know if there is an element even in this House that will say to the people of this country that, although owning half the property, the Government will refuse to pay its share of the taxes to take care of that property. Shame on such an idea.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I have no doubt that were we to locate the capital to-day it would be perfectly easy to find a large and flourishing city that would be very glad to assume all the responsibilities of the capital and carry it on without charging the Government a dollar. But that is not the position in which we find ourselves. In the early history of the Republic it was deemed wise to locate the national capital at the head of navigation upon the Potomac. The national capital at that day was a series of abrupt hills and quagmires, and the whole history of the capital has been the correcting of the evils which nature had generated upon this spot of ground. It has been made now certainly the most beautiful city not only in this country, but the most beautiful city that ever was built in the world. It has cost money, but the money has not been spent against the will of the National Congress. All along the National Congress has been connected with the development of this city and the surrounding country, as was stated here to-day. We have made the city to a great degree. There is not any large accumulation of wealth here. There is very little commerce. There are no manufactories. This city exists in connection with the National Government, and but for the National Government it would cease to exist.

But that is wide of the purpose for which I rose. I rose for the purpose of saying that my notion is that we never should have abolished the territorial government. It was a profound mistake. It should have been left, and under the territorial government we should have avoided much of the burden that rests upon us now. But sooner or later the burden that now rests on the District of Columbia and partially on the Government has got to be moved, and every day's delay makes that burden heavier. Put off the adjustment of this matter for a time and a favorable Congress will come here, a favorable hour will be sought, and every dollar of the burden of debt will eventually come from the Treasury of the United States. I am trying by my vote to get the Government out from under that burden which now rests upon the country. I do not say that it is a fairly ascertained obligation. We need not do that. Every man experienced in the legislation of Congress knows that the obligation need not rest fairly on the National Government, and yet if there be a pretext the time will come when the Government has got to pay it, and to avoid that day I am willing to yield my notion as to what would be the proper government for the District of Columbia. I am willing to yield a great deal to save a little, and I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and other gentlemen on this floor will yield to the idea embodied in the views of the Committee of the District of Columbia so far as to allow us to pass a bill and save this Government from what is imminent now, the bearing of the whole burden that rests upon the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDEN obtained the floor.

Mr. HENDEE. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he allow the amendment of the gentleman from Texas to be voted upon before he proceeds.

Mr. EDEN. I should be willing to do that, but other gentlemen desire to speak upon that amendment. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that while it is right and proper that the Government of the United States should bear some proportion of the expenses incurred in keeping up this city, the amount provided in this bill is too large. The theory upon which we are called upon to pay one-half of the expenses of keeping up these streets, and for the city government and the schools and the other expenses here, is that we own one-half of the property, and in order to charge us with one-half of the property they charge us with the streets and avenues of the city. Those streets and avenues are not property in the sense in which these buildings all over the city are property. Those streets and avenues are property only in the sense that they are for the public use, for the use of the people of the city, and of everybody that has occasion to be here.

Streets and avenues are not the species of property upon which taxes are levied anywhere, and, simply because the title remains in the United States while the public have the use of them, the committee assumes that we ought to pay one-half of the taxes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it will be borne in mind that under this bill those onerous taxes of which the people of the District of Columbia have justly complained are all to be removed. There are to be no special assessments under this bill. The property is all to be improved, the streets and avenues kept in repair out of the common fund, one-half furnished by the tax-payers of the city and the other half by the Government of the United States. Now, I ask if one-half is a fair proportion for the Government of the United States to pay under these circumstances?

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] says that the District has already paid $30,000,000 for the improvement of the streets and that the Government has paid but $9,000,000. But the District still owes about $15,000,000 of this amount that has been paid by the District in the shape of 3.65 bonds, and there are certificates that yet remain unadjusted, and under the operation of this bill we are to pay one-half of that, and when we pay one-half of that we will have paid about as much for the improvements already made since the foundation of the Government as has been paid by the District. Now I repeat that I am willing that the Government of the United States shall pay its fair share, and because I am not willing that it shall pay more than its fair share I do not think that I am amenable to the imputation that the gentleman from Vermont would cast upon those who do not agree with him that the people of the District ought to pay only 50 per cent. Everybody knows that so far as property is concerned, excluding the streets and avenues, the Government does not own anything like one-half or one-third of the property in the District. I do not know what the precise estimate is.

Mr. O'NEILL. I rise more for information than for anything else. In the discussion of this bill I have not heard any one advert to the old system of government that prevailed here some years ago of a mayor and council. I would like to know how the expenses of the government compared in those days with what they are now. It seems to me that the citizens of the District would be better pleased. I have heard some of them so express themselves, if they had the old form of government, a mayor and council, elective of course. Then the citizen has some direct interest in taxation and in the government, but I have never known and I do not know yet whether the Committee for the District of Columbia have ever considered the subject of returning to the old form of government. I recollect that when I first came to Washington that form of government prevailed in this District and it seemed to be a good one. It would be a better government now if we had the elective system. I am sure the people are better satisfied if they have some hand in electing their own officers and in a District which has improved so much in property and otherwise it seems to me that the old system would be better. It is certainly more in conformity with the genius of our National and State Governments. The appointment of officers for cities does not seem to be a good plan. We have tried here various plans. I think that the old form of mayor and council and added to them perhaps a Delegate in Congress, to represent the Government, as the Government must pay a part of the expenses of the District, would be the best plan. At this stage of the consideration of the bill it is too late to offer an amendment to that effect, but that is a simple form of government, such as we have in all the other cities of the country, and I believe in the government being represented on this floor by a Delegate and the District having a mayor and council so that all questions of expenditures may be properly considered. Look at the large cities, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, which are governed by a mayor and council. There are complaints of extravagance everywhere, but the people have a voice in making their local government and if faults occur they can cure the faults by electing others. I do not propose to offer any amendment, for it could not be done at this stage of the bill, but I sit here and wonder—when I consider this subject, and it is a very difficult one to solve, and must have been found so by the committee—whether the old form of government was suggested to them.

Mr. EDEN. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew it.

Mr. HENDEE. I suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that he allow a vote to be taken first upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLOUNT. I prefer to go on, for I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas. I have great respect for every member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I have no doubt that they have reached conclusions that are entirely satisfactory to their minds and are based upon much more extended and careful examination than I have made, for I must confess that it is an exceedingly casual examination that I have given to the subject. But I do believe that we are on the eve of committing a great political blunder, that we are about to inaugurate a government that will bring about a worse state of affairs than has existed at any period in the history of this Government.

Sir, let us look first at this matter of assessments and in connection with it the powers of the District commissioners and of this council. It is provided that the National Government shall pay one-half of the expenditures of this District, and the idea upon which that rests is that the Government owns one-half of the property in this District. The distinguished gentlemen from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] tells us that in estimating that he puts to the account of the Government all of the streets of this city of one hundred and fifty thousand population. Fortunate city! Peculiar of all others in this land, magnificent, beautiful beyond any other in its streets and avenues, and not a farthing to pay for it, and possessed of and using and furnished by the people of this country!

Now, sir, you gentlemen expect that the plain sense of the masses of the people of this country will accept such an argument in satisfaction for charging them with one-half of the expenditures of the government of the District.

Again, we have been told that the Government has brought into the District a vast population of non-taxpayers. Such a population is found in every city, and the Government has furnished to this city the best non-taxpaying population of any in the world.

Go to your shops and see what the workmen there are paid, and then find out what the employés of the Government receive. Look at the magnificent buildings which they occupy as tenants and the amount of trade to which they give life. When you do that you will see what that argument is worth. I say it is idle trash, and you will find that the common-sense American people will think so when you go before them and tell them of it.

Gentlemen speak about the original history of this District, of its streets and avenues, when Washington first planned them. I say to you that the time never was in the history of the Government when it could be seriously proposed with any chance of success in this House that the General Government should assume one-half of the expenses of this District.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, that the very arduous duties imposed upon my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] in managing the appropriation bills of this Congress should have deprived us of the benefit of his counsel in drafting the bill for the government of this District. I regret still more that that same rigid economy that prompts him now to criticise the work of the Committee for the District of Columbia had not been illustrated in all of those bills which have been molded by his hands for the disbursement of millions, involving in many instances, I fear, unwise and unnecessary expenditures, in comparison with which 50 per cent. of the expenses of this District would dwindle into nothing.

It is a very easy matter for almost anybody, especially for a gentleman wise in matters of legislation as he is, to criticise a bill that proposes to constitute a government, to provide all the machinery of government under which one hundred and fifty thousand people are to live. I regret that just at this juncture, when we have passed the material portions of the bill, it should be found necessary to go back into a discussion, as the gentleman has done, of the results that are to attend the establishment of the government here proposed.

The gentleman draws a horrid picture and tells us that it will be worse than under any régime which has hitherto cursed the people of this District. I have not time to defend the general scope of the bill which has already been elaborately argued.

When this bill was first presented for the consideration of this House I stated that but one object, one purpose, had actuated us in its consideration. That purpose was to impose every restraint, to incorporate every check that human ingenuity could devise to prevent the abuse of power such as in the past had disgraced the administration of the affairs of this District.

I went further and said that if any member of this House would suggest any additional check or limitation I would approve and support it. I believe this bill is exhaustive in this regard. We have come down now to the naked question as to the proportion of the expenses of this District which the Federal Government shall bear. This bill proposes that that proportion shall be 50 per cent., and the reasons for that basis of calculation have been very lucidly stated to this House.

If gentlemen will take the trouble to sum up all the appropriations which have been made by Congress since 1872, they will find that 50 per cent. will not cover the proportion of expenses which the Government has already borne. You are to-day paying more than that; you have for the last six years paid more than that, and unless some legislation is adopted by Congress you will pay more than that not only for the next six years, but indefinitely.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hardly have time.

Mr. REED. I merely want the gentleman to state the items, if he has them at hand, of what the Government is now paying.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If I had them in my desk I could not state them in five minutes.

Mr. REED. I will try to get you five minutes in which to state them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HENDEE. I have them here and will have them published.

Mr. BLACKBURN. This is what I desire to say: the people of this District have a right to demand that we shall fix permanently their relations to the Federal Government. It is the Federal Government on the one side treating with the Federal city on the other side. The people of this District have a right to protest against being left subject to the whim and caprice of Congress with each recurring session. They have and can have no tangible value to their real-estate property. Should you go out, any one of you, to purchase a piece of real estate in the city of Washington, naturally you would ask in the first instance to what taxation it was subject. If the owner is an honest man he can simply reply to you that he does not know.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. CANDLER. I renew it, and yield my time to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CANDLER] for his courtesy.

Should the Federal Government pay 10 per cent. of the expenses of the District, then the tax which would be imposed upon the property of the District would be so much. Should the Government pay 50 per cent. of the expenditures of the District, then to the extent of that 40 per cent. difference the tax upon the property of the District would be lighter.

Now, whether the proportion paid by the Government be 50 per cent. or 40 per cent., or, as proposed by my friend from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] 25 per cent., whatever the figure is to be, I insist that some definite plan shall be adopted and that the relations between this city and the Government shall be permanently determined.

Coming now to the amendment which is pending, the one offered by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] proposing that the Federal Government shall pay 25 per cent. of the expenditures of this District, I say that a careful examination of the interests involved, of the relations which exist between the country and the capital, will satisfy any unbiased mind that that proposition is not fair, much less liberal. I admit that the people of this District are at your mercy; they cannot enforce their rights, even if it is admitted they have any. It is perfectly competent for you to refuse appropriations and to refuse to bear any proportion of the expenses of this District. There is no appeal. This constitutes to them the court of last resort; and year after year as Congress has gathered here the demands of justice and fair play have sufficed to extort from you during six years past appropriations, governed by no rule, recognizing no principle of apportionment, but making in the aggregate a larger proportion of the expenses of the District than this bill proposes you shall pay.

It should be taken into consideration—and I address myself now to those gentlemen upon this floor who coincide with the views expressed yesterday by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. COX]—it should be taken into consideration that we pay nothing of the debt, amounting to-day to $24,000,000, which has been saddled upon this District and for which it is admitted we are not liable, for which we do not propose to assume any responsibility, which we do not propose to aid in paying, either principal or interest. By the provisions of the eighth section of this bill we protect ourselves to the fullest extent, declaring that every dollar that we shall pay of the 50 per cent. of expenses which it is proposed the Government of the United States shall assume shall be credited to us upon the interest on the 3.65 bonds.

I am not going to make any appeal to the sympathies of this House in behalf of this bill. If the people of this District are poverty-stricken, if they are debt-ridden and taxation-burdened, it is to the American Congress they are indebted for this curse. Less than 12 per cent. of the debt that now bows them down to the earth was fastened upon them by rulers of their own choosing. More than 75 per cent. of the debt they are now carrying, and which must be left to their children as a heritage of bondage, has been fixed upon them by agents selected by you and placed over them, with plenary powers to dispose of their property by legalized confiscation or plunder. The Government of the United States, acting through its Congress, is alone responsible. Yet in this impoverished and pitiable condition they make no appeal to you to assume one farthing of their debt, either principal or interest. They simply ask that you shall establish the relations, whatever they are permanently to be, between the Federal capital and the Federal Government. If this Congress should do it grudgingly, should repudiate the action of former Congresses, it is not in the power of these people to avert it.

Mr. HENDEE. I rise for the purpose of asking that debate close upon this section and amendments.

Mr. FORT. This is the most important provision of the bill, and I hope the gentleman will not impose a restriction just now.

Mr. EDEN. As I understand, amendments will be in order even if debate is closed.

Mr. HENDEE. If we can have a vote upon the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] I am willing to let the gentleman from Indiana, the gentleman from New York, or any other gentlemen offer further amendments and to have the ordinary debate upon them. But it seems to me we ought to dispose of the pending amendment. I move that debate be closed upon the amendment of the gentleman from Texas and any amendments thereto. It has now been debated for an hour.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I would like to say a word or two on this subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall all debate be closed upon the amendment of the gentleman from Texas and any amendments offered thereto?

Mr. MILLS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] for what this debt was created. Was it for the improvement of the streets?

Mr. HENDEE. In part it was.

Mr. MILLS. How large a part?

Mr. HENDEE. We are not talking about the debt now.

Mr. MILLS. But I am asking for information in order that I may know how to vote. I want to know whether the Federal Government ought to pay this debt.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion to close debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. REAGAN, it was declared not agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I have an amendment pending. I call for the reading of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Columbia," in line 193, to and including the word "commissioners," in line 198, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

And all proceedings in the assessing, equalizing, and levying of said taxes, the collection thereof, the listing, return, and penalty for taxes in arrears, the advertising for sale and the sale of property for delinquent taxes, the redemption thereof, the proceedings to enforce the lien upon unredeemed property, and every other act and thing now required to be done in the premises, shall be done and performed at the times and in the manner now provided by law, except in so far as is otherwise provided by this act.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. One word in reference to this amendment. If there is any one subject on which there ought to be no discretion vested in any tribunal, it is the subject of the assessment, levying, and collecting of taxes, and the condemnation and sale of property in arrears for the non-payment of taxes. It will be seen that this bill proposes in the text to invest the District commissioners with the power of levying and assessing upon the taxable property of the people of the District taxes to the amount of 50 per cent. of the estimate which may be approved by Congress, "in such manner as the commissioners of the District may deem best."

In other words, it proposes, instead of their judgment being regulated by law, that, if their judgment convinces them it is best to set aside a law and exercise their arbitrary discretion they may have the power to do it. It also provides with reference to the sale of the property, in regard to the advertising of it, they may change the law if they deem it expedient to do it. The amendment I have offered proposes simply this: that in reference to the assessment, the equalization, and levying of taxes, in reference to the collection of them, in reference to the proceedings in the collection of delinquent taxes, in reference to advertising sales, and in reference to every other step which is authorized or required by law, it shall be had and performed at the times and in the manner prescribed by law, except in so far as it is modified in the present bill. So when this bill shall pass, the District commissioners, in reference to that great and inalienable right that every citizen should have and does have by the Constitution, namely, that he shall not be deprived of his property, except by the judgment of his peers or in accordance to the law of the land, shall be protected by having the law applied instead of the best judgment or the best discretion of the commissioners.

Mr. HENDEE. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I have nothing further to say, then.

Mr. EDEN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 189, after the word "of" strike out "50" and insert "40," and in line 190, after the word "remaining," strike out "50" and insert "60;" so it will read:

To the extent to which Congress shall approve the said estimates they shall appropriate the amount of 40 per cent. thereof, and the remaining 60 per cent. thereof shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property in said District other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia, in such manner as the commissioners of the District of Columbia may deem best, &c.

Mr. EDEN. I do not wish to speak, but simply ask for a vote on that amendment.

Mr. HENDEE. The gentleman from Illinois, as I understand it, simply makes the division 60 for the District of Columbia and 40 per cent. for the Government, instead of 50 for each?

Mr. EDEN. Yes, sir; and I only want a vote on it.

Mr. HENDEE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered: and Mr. EDEN and Mr. HENDEE appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 89.

Mr. EDEN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 92, nays 134, not voting 65; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

During the vote,

Mr. BRAGG said: My colleague, Mr. POUND, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. MAISH. My colleague, Mr. MACKEY, is detained at home by reason of illness.

Mr. McKENZIE. I wish to announce that my colleague, Mr. CARLISLE, is paired with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. COLE. My colleague, Mr. MORGAN, is paired with Mr. JAMES.

Mr. HAYES. I am paired with Mr. DEAN. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. HUBBELL. I was paired until yesterday with Mr. BLISS. As I understand he is not here to-day, I withdraw my vote and will consider the pair to continue for this day.

Mr. LATHROP. I am paired with Mr. COVERT. If he were here, I would vote "ay."

Mr. HUNGERFORD. My colleague, Mr. BAGLEY, is paired with Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire.

Mr. DANFORD. I am paired with Mr. HOUSE.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am paired with Mr. WILLIS, of New York. If he were here, I would vote "ay."

Mr. STONE, of Michigan. My colleague, Mr. ELLSWORTH, is absent on account of sickness, and my colleague, Mr. WILLITS, is absent by leave of the House.

On motion of Mr. HENDEE, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "estimates," in line 189, insert "if said estimates amount to $3,000,000 or less, 40 per cent. of said estimates shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States, and the remaining 60 per cent;" and after the word "commissioners," in line 198, insert the following: "And if the sum of said estimates exceeds $3,000,000 the United States shall pay 33⅓ of said estimates."

Mr. BUCKNER. It seems to me that the effect of the amendment just passed upon by the House is not thoroughly understood. Last year upon a taxation of $1.50 upon the $100 in this District, which I undertake to say is less than any city of the same size in the United States pays, there was realized $1,700,000. This amendment would assume that the estimates necessary to carry on this government without making any provision for the ultimate payment of the 3.65 debt would amount to $3,000,000, and the present rate of taxation therefor would about remain the same. Do the gentlemen on this floor propose to reduce the rate of taxation on the property of this District with its immense debt amounting to more than the debt of many of the States, more by several millions than my State owes, and that is burden enough—do they propose to reduce the taxation more than 1 or 2 per cent. under that paid by Chicago and Saint Louis and hundreds of cities in this country? That is the effect of this proposition, that the Government shall pay one-half, because upon the present assessment you raise at that rate a million and a half dollars. Five million dollars being the amount of the estimate, the District pays a million and a half of taxation, which would be less really than the amount it is now paying.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to antagonize this bill. I am in favor of its general features. I believe there can be no more important legislation than to determine the relations in this matter between the District and the Government of the United States, and I believe the Government is bound, absolutely bound from necessity, to come to the relief of this District with its heavy burden of debt. I say nothing as to how that debt has been put upon the people. That is out of the question at present. The debt is upon these people and we should do something to relieve them. But I am unwilling to go for a proposition that in point of fact makes their taxation less than that of any other city of the United States that I know of with anything like its population or wealth.

That is the effect, in my judgment, of the 50 per cent. proposition. Now, this amendment which I have offered proposes that whenever the estimates are three millions or less then the Government shall pay 40 per cent. Suppose the estimates were three millions; that would be eighteen hundred thousand for the District and twelve hundred thousand for the Government. On the other hand, suppose they undertake improvements here in which the Government has no special interest; suppose they undertake to build a bridge across the Potomac at Georgetown; under those circumstances it may not be right and proper that the Government should pay more than 33⅓ per cent. Suppose in this way the estimates were increased to $3,600,000, then the Government would pay still $1,200,000, while the District would pay $2,400,000. I think it should be graded in that way. At all events I am unwilling to vote for a proposition now that will in effect leave the taxation of the people of this District less, as I understand it, than of any other city of the United States, although they are burdened with a debt of $23,000,000 or $24,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. My friend from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] appears to forget the fact that these estimates upon which it is proposed we shall pay the 50 per cent. have first to be approved by Congress. The estimates of the commissioners and the estimate of the council are sent to both Houses of Congress, and we have to approve of those estimates before we pay the 50 per cent. Now, if they should go and make an estimate for a bridge or anything else, as suggested by the gentleman from Missouri, that imposes no obligation on the Government to pay one-half unless Congress shall first approve of it.

The estimates for the next year by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, the total estimates for ordinary current expenses, are $1,991,274. If you add to that the interest on the 3.65 bonds, $501,628.62, you get a total of $2,492,902.62. There are estimates also for extraordinary expenses, for repairs by new pavements, $300,000; for new work on streets including materials, $300,000; redemption of Washington ten-year bonds, $279,250; redemption of Georgetown bonds due next year, $2,500. So that the grand total of estimates, including all these extraordinary expenses, is only $3,374,652.62; while the ordinary expenses, including the interest on the 3.65 bonds, is less than $2,500,000.

But be that as it may we have according to this bill only to pay upon estimates that have first passed the board of commissioners, then passed the council, then come up here and been approved by Congress.

Mr. FORT. I am not sure whether the 50 per cent. proportion fixed in this bill for the Government to pay is too much or too little. Certainly the rate of taxation of $1.50 per $100 of valuation is very reasonable. As has been said, there is scarcely a city in the Union which does not pay a higher tax than this. I know of very few school districts in the western country that do not pay a higher school tax than the limit of tax provided by this bill. Yes, sir; the school tax alone in many places is twice as high as the tax can ever be under this bill. It occurs to me, therefore, that there will be no complaint from the people of this District about high taxation if the bill becomes a law; and I am glad to know that there will not be, because in the past I understand they have been taxed exceedingly high and have had a right to complain.

But, sir, in order to be consistent, if we pass this bill we ought to pay all the expenses of this District ourselves. This bill strikes down popular government. Every single proposition that has been presented to the House for popular government has been rejected—strange to say, popular government has been rejected by the votes of the other side of the House, and very strange indeed to say under the lead of a gentleman on this side of the House, who has abandoned the principles of the republican party, a popular form of government has been rejected. But, sir, if the people of this District are to have no popular government, if they are not to be permitted to govern themselves, if they are to be absolutely subjugated by Congress, then Congress ought to pay the expenses. If Congress under the Constitution governs the District, let Congress pay the expenses of this its own government, and whatever is thought just can be levied upon the property of the District, real and personal, and I would not favor a high taxation. And the best way to reduce taxation is to reduce expenditures.

Sir, this bill as it stands has been fitly termed a monstrosity. It disregards and violates the Constitution and encroaches upon the prerogatives of the Executive, in order to make it impossible for a worthy, able, and experienced officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army to hold the office of the engineer commissioner. Gentlemen reject a popular form, a republican form of government in order to prevent enfranchised colored men voting. All this is wrong. We should not here in the capital city reject popular government and disregard the Constitution by attempting to control the President. I would not be in favor of levying very high taxes upon the people of this District. I concede that the Government ought to pay a great portion of the expenses of this District; whether 50 per cent. is too much or too little I know not, but will it not be a mistake to undertake to pay any certain percentage, will it not be demoralizing upon the officials of the District of Columbia? I understand, and it has been stated here, that we have paid more than 50 per cent. of the expenses of the District heretofore. And I would be liberal with the District. We ought to pay at least our full portion of these expenses.

It is claimed that the Government owns more than one-half of the city. Whether that be true or not I know not, but certainly I do not believe that we should include the streets and avenues in estimating the Government property. It is bald folly to claim that the United States own the streets and avenues. They belong to the public. But if the Government agrees to pay any certain percentage of the expenses it may induce extravagant enterprises to be entered into by the District government you are about to establish which otherwise would not be entered into, because they would consider that the Government of the United States will have to pay one-half of the expenditure and would readily go into some extravagant enterprise, calling it an improvement. We had better provide by this bill that an appropriation be made of $1,500,000 for the expenses of the present year and leave future Congresses to provide by appropriations what the Government shall pay in the future.

It has been claimed that the District of Columbia has no representation in Congress, but, sir, the District has not suffered from want of representation in this and the other House. I have heard several citizens of this District say that this District has more representatives in Congress than any State in the Union.

Mr. PAGE. How do they make that out?

Mr. FORT. I do not know exactly. Some claim that it has more than any ten States in the other House. They say that members of the House of Representatives and Senators reside here and own residences and other property here and actually live here. Whether that be so or not I know not. It is said in short that they actually live here while they claim their legal residences are in the States or districts which they represent. This city will most likely always be well represented in this House, and especially in the other. Nobody need give himself any undue concern about that matter.

Gentlemen who are here so much of their time will become sufficiently interested to see to it that the District is well treated, as it ought to be. I had hoped it would be under some better form of government than that provided by this bill. I voted against the bill which organized the present form of government for this District, and shall vote against this bill because it is even worse than the one the District now has.

Mr. HENDEE. I rise for the purpose of asking a vote upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER,] which has the same effect as the last one voted upon, and hence I do not wish to make any remarks in regard to it.

The question was upon the following amendment, offered by Mr. BUCKNER:

After the word "estimates" in line 189 insert "if said estimates amount to $3,000,000 or less, 40 per cent. of said estimates shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States and the remaining 60 per cent.," to end of line 190.

And insert after "commissioners," in line 196, the following: "and if the sum of said estimates exceed $3,000,000, the United States shall pay 33⅓ of said estimates."

The question was put, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move to strike out all embraced in lines from 202 to 205, inclusive, as follows:

And provided further, Upon lands used and held solely for agricultural purposes, and to be so designated by the assessors in their annual returns, the rate for any one year shall not exceed $1 on every $100.

I ask the attention of the House for a moment while I state the reasons which have induced me to offer this amendment. In the first place, what are to be termed "agricultural lands?" What are the assessors to designate as such? A great deal of land within the bounds of the city is used for the purpose of raising vegetables for the market, and which is probably the most productive land in the city. Now it is proposed to take that class of land which brings in a large income and exempt it from taxation or subject it to reduced taxation, while the houses and lots which are occupied by the poor people of the city and by the employés in the Government service, and which produce no income whatever, shall be taxed at a greater rate. I submit that this discrimination is unwise, and that it will involve difficulty in the proper administration of the law. There will have to be two assessments made out in every case where the rate of taxation is more than 1 per cent.

There are numerous difficulties that might be suggested in the way of this discrimination, and as there is no just cause for making this exemption as to a class of lands, in my judgment it seems to me wise policy to strike out this proviso and leave all the property of the District of Columbia of every description liable to the same rate of taxation.

Mr. HENDEE. I rise to inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] why there is this difference in the rate of taxation. I simply wish to say that this is confined to land used for agricultural purposes and which is remote from the cities of Washington and Georgetown. The people of Washington and Georgetown have the benefit of light, of pavements, of police, of sewerage, which the people who own agricultural lands have no benefit of whatever. It seemed to the committee quite unjust that the people who have none of the benefits of the cities should pay the same rate of taxation that those people do who have all of these benefits.

If the gentleman's proposition is carried, it requires that the entire expenditure of the government of the District of Columbia, its improvements, its pavements, the taking care of the great aqueduct, the lighting of the streets, the policing of the city, shall be paid for in part by those who do not have one single dollar's interest in any of them. It seems to me that the people who do not have the benefits should not be compelled to pay for them. That is the only reason for the discrimination.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggest that if there is any force in the view that the gentleman suggested it would lead to the exemption of these lands from taxation altogether. They should not be taxed at all upon his theory; they should be exempt from taxation. But they are, by this bill, not only taxed, but the people owning them are given a voice in the matter of taxation; they are to have representatives in the legislative body of the District, and I submit to the House with great earnestness and confidence that there is no good reason for this distinction, exempting the most productive portions of the real estate of the District from paying the same tax as the unproductive portions pay. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question was put upon Mr. LAPHAM's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

SEC. 8. That hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest accruing on the 3.65 per cent. bonds of the District of Columbia as the same matures, and the amounts so paid shall be credited as part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the government of the District, as herein provided: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall ever be so construed as to commit the Government to the payment of the principal of said bonds.

The Committee for the District of Columbia recommended the following as a substitute for section 8:

That until otherwise provided by law, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest accruing on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia as the same matures, and the amounts so paid shall be credited as part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District, as herein provided: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed or considered as an acknowledgment of any liability on the part of the United States to pay the principal of said bonds otherwise than as provided in the seventh section of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to amend the substitute proposed by the committee by adding to it that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That one-half of 1 per cent. of the 3.65 per cent. bonded debt shall be annually set apart from the taxes and appropriations provided for in the sixth section to create a sinking fund for the purchase of said 3.65 per cent. debt of the District.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would ask the gentleman from Missouri whether the adoption of that amendment will not do the very thing which I have been protesting that we are not trying to do by this bill; whether it will not subject the appropriations from the Federal Treasury to the payment of that bonded debt?

Mr. BUCKNER. I will state to the gentleman what I desire this Congress to do. My amendment provides that the Government of the United States shall comply with the obligations which it incurred by the act of 1874. The Committee for the District of Columbia by this bill provide for complying with that obligation only in part. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on this debt, amounting to one-half million dollars a year. That, however, is only a part compliance with the obligation which this Government entered into with these bondholders. That obligation was that by appropriations and by taxation the Government would provide a sinking fund whereby to liquidate this debt.

Now, what is proposed by this bill in regard to this debt which will become due forty-five years hence? This bill proposes to pay the interest on that debt; and so far it is a compliance with the obligations of the act of 1874. But what is to be done with the principal of the debt at the end of that time? Would you repudiate it? Is that the point? I have been charged with others with being willing to repudiate the obligations of the Government. But I am for maintaining its obligations, and for that purpose I have moved an amendment requiring a certain percentage to be set aside now to make a sinking fund.

Mr. MAYHAM. What is the amount of this debt?

Mr. BUCKNER. I can tell the gentleman if he wants to have it.

Mr. MAYHAM. Does the amount reported from the Committee for the District of Columbia in any way affect or prohibit the payment of the obligations on the part of the Federal Government so far as the Government is now bound by existing law?

Mr. BUCKNER. You make no provision at all for the payment of the principal of the debt either by the District of Columbia or by the General Government.

Mr. FINLEY. Is any further legislation needed beyond what we already have?

Mr. BUCKNER. I think it is.

Mr. EDEN. If my friend from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] will allow me, I will say that his amendment commits the Government of the United States to the payment of the principal of the 3.65 bonds, and if it prevails it is in the nature of a contract with the holders of those bonds that Congress will pay the principal of the debt.

Mr. BUCKNER. I will say to my friend from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] that the Government of the United States is already committed.

Mr. EDEN. It is committed only so far as to see that the proper tax is levied upon the District of Columbia to pay the interest on these bonds.

Mr. BUCKNER. More than that.

Mr. EDEN. Not as to the principal.

Mr. BUCKNER. The act of 1874 pledges the faith of the Government——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I will take the floor and yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. BUCKNER. I thank my colleague for his courtesy. I have here an amendment passed February 20, 1875, to the act of 1874, and I ask gentlemen to listen to it:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will do so, provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

Thus it will be seen that the obligation upon the Government of the United States is just as strong to provide for a sinking fund whereby this debt will ultimately be extinguished as it is to do that which the committee for the District of Columbia proposes it shall do under this bill, and which I take it this House will agree to, that is, to pay the interest on the debt; there is no escape from that. Then why not begin now? Why not require that one-half of 1 per cent. of the amount of this debt shall be set aside from all appropriations for the ultimate payment of this debt which will mature in about forty-five years? We ought to leave the people to take care of this debt entirely, or else comply with our obligation. My friend from New York [Mr. COX] asks about this debt of thirteen and a half million of dollars. Upon what basis does the gentleman make the inquiry?

Mr. COX, of New York. Upon the basis of sound sense.

Mr. BUCKNER. I will say that a very large portion of the debt is as much binding upon the District of Columbia as can be any debt whatever. That there was illegality and perhaps fraud in connection with some of the debt I have no doubt. But you might just as well undertake here in Washington to separate the waters of the Shenandoah River from the other waters of the Potomac, as to separate the honest from the dishonest portion of this debt.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENDEE. I hope the vote will now be taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] and that it will be voted down.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. BUCKNER, and it was not agreed to.

The substitute proposed by the Committee for the District of Columbia for section 8 of the bill was then agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

SEC. 16. That it shall be the duty of the said commissioners to report to Congress at the next session succeeding their appointment a draft of such additional laws or amendments to existing laws as seem to be needed for the harmonious working of the system hereby adopted, and for the effectual and proper government of the District of Columbia; and said commissioners shall annually report their official doings in detail to Congress on or before the first Monday of December.

Mr. LATHROP. I have an amendment in the nature of an additional section to come in after the section just read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

SEC. —. That the District of Columbia shall remain and continue a municipal corporation as provided in section 2 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia; and the commissioners and council herein provided for shall be deemed and taken as officers of such corporation, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in this act contained. And all laws and provisions of law now in force relating to the District of Columbia, and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall remain in full force and effect.

Mr. LATHROP. I do not know whether the committee make any opposition to this amendment or not.

Mr. LAPHAM. Is not all this covered by a section already in the bill?

Mr. HENDEE. The committee think it is; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LATHROP] thinks not. The amendment is not in conflict with the bill at all; and so far as I am concerned I have no objection to it. It certainly will do no harm; and the gentleman who offers it has some anxiety to have it inserted so as to set at rest the question whether the District of Columbia is a municipal corporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ITTNER. I move to amend by adding at the close of section 17, the following:

But Congress hereby expressly reserves the right at any time to repeal, alter, and amend any and all provisions of this act.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words rather in explanation of the vote I shall cast upon this bill than for any other purpose. I have offered this amendment believing that the passage of the bill will in less than twelve months be deemed a serious mistake as tested by the experience of time, and that it will be considered necessary to make modifications and amendments or perhaps an outright repeal. In order that no controversy shall arise, in order that it may not be claimed that the Government of the United States has entered into an irrepealable contract with the people of the District to bear one-half of the expenses of the District, I think a provision of this kind will not be out of place. Though I am no lawyer, it is my opinion that this provision is not necessary in order to secure to Congress the power of repeal; yet a controversy might arise on this point, and such an amendment as this can do no harm, while it may prevent the possibility of such a controversy.

Having said thus much upon the amendment I have offered——

Mr. HENDEE. If the gentleman will yield I will say that the committee have no objection to the adoption of the amendment. If he wishes to make a speech of course I do not wish to interrupt him.

Mr. ITTNER. Mr. Speaker, as I was about to remark, having said all I desired to say upon the amendment, I wish to give in a very few words the reasons why I cannot support this bill.

I have no hostility to the people of the District of Columbia. On the contrary, I have good reason to have friendly relations with them. I had the honor to be waited upon by a committee of gentlemen representing the tax-payers and residents of the District of Columbia, and I was very agreeably impressed with their manner and bearing. It would give me great pleasure if I could support this bill; but it embodies features which neither considerations of friendship nor anything else could induce me to support and subscribe to. I object to the manner in which the commissioners are appointed. I believe in the correctness of the position taken by some members on this floor that this mode of appointment is unconstitutional.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Speaker, if there is a gentleman on this floor who believes that Congress, without the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. ITTNER,] will not have full power to amend, alter, or repeal this bill when enacted, then I for one will not object to the amendment. But I presume there is no gentleman in this House—certainly no lawyer, and the gentleman from Missouri says he is not one—who does not know that Congress without this amendment will have the right to amend or repeal this legislation.

Mr. ITTNER. I desire simply to state to the gentleman from Virginia that I myself, not being a lawyer, do not believe the amendment is necessary. But I have had some experience in legislative bodies, and I know what controversies sometimes arise in discussing matters of this character, matters wherein questions of good faith and fair dealing are involved, and these considerations are as potent at times in controlling the action of legislative bodies as are the stern mandates of the law, and I take it the amendment can do no harm.

Mr. HUNTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, if the mover of the amendment does not think it necessary and nobody else seems to think it is so, it is not worth while to adopt it.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to say a single word in support of the amendment. I agree with the gentleman who has just taken his seat, that Congress under the Constitution has full power to repeal or alter legislation of this character. But under this bill, which undertakes to establish a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, there may be acquired rights which it may be claimed ought not to be vitiated by a repealing act. Very recently arguments have been made in the other end of the Capitol to the effect that it would be unjust to repeal any act having even the semblance of a contract. The object of this amendment, as I understand, is to give notice to all persons who may be interested, that Congress claims, and will in its discretion exercise, the right to repeal or alter this legislation. People may come here, and assuming that this is an established law for the government of the District, may invest in property here or otherwise become interested in this District. To all such Congress by an amendment in this form ought to give notice that the power to repeal, alter, or amend the act is reserved.

Mr. FINLEY. I wish to inquire whether the committee has not accepted this amendment?

Mr. HENDEE. When the gentleman from Missouri offered the amendment I supposed that he did so in good faith, believing it necessary to perfect the bill or to protect the rights of the people or the Government. But having learned that he offered it rather for the purpose of explaining the reasons for his vote than for any other object, I do not wish it to be understood that I assent to it as being in my judgment essential to the perfection of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MAYHAM. I understand that the bill is now read through. I ask unanimous consent that a verbal defect in the bill may be corrected. On line 27, section 2, page 3, after the word "February" the words "in the year" should be inserted.

Mr. HENDEE. There is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the modification suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAYHAM] will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDEE. I move the previous question on the bill as amended.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HENDEE. I now demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ELAM demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 131.

Mr. REAGAN demanded tellers.

The House divided; and there were only 23 in the affirmative.

So (less than one-fifth of a quorum having voted in the affirmative) tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, less than one-fifth of those present having voted in the affirmative.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HENDEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM A. PALMER.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the military history of William A. Palmer, late captain Thirty-second Ohio Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DR. ALLEN C. HAMMOND.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers in the case of Dr. Allen C. Hammond; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

WILLIAM A. WILLIAMSON.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers in the claim of William A. Williamson; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. WOOD. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up the tariff bill.

Mr. PAGE. Is not the morning hour the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is in order at this time.

Mr. O'NEILL. I thought the bill from the Committee on Commerce was next to be considered.

The SPEAKER. Priority of business in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is to be determined by the committee for itself and not by the occupant of the chair.

Mr. SCALES. It will be with the committee to determine which business will be first taken up.

Mr. HUNTON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry and that is, whether if this motion is voted down the next business in order will not be the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It will. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from New York to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the tariff bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 80.

Mr. SAYLER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WOOD, and Mr. WHITE of Pennsylvania, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 97.

Mr. WOOD demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 109, nays 108, not voting 74; as follows:

THE TARIFF BILL.

The House, pursuant to order, resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SAYLER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Clerk will report the unfinished business pending before it.

The Clerk read the title of the following bill:

A bill (H. R. No. 4106) to impose duties upon foreign imports, to promote trade and commerce, to reduce taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CONGER. I rose to a question as to the order of business.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has risen to a question of order. The gentleman from Alabama has the attention of the Chair first.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I do not raise a point of order for the purpose of antagonizing the Committee of Ways and Means at all, but simply to assert what I conceive to be the true position of the bill to pension the soldiers of the Mexican war. That is the bill which is the unfinished business in the Committee of the Whole, and I think under the rules it takes precedence of any other business.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that the bill the title of which has just been read was made a special order for Thursday, April 4, and was unfinished business in the Committee of the Whole. Being the special order it takes precedence of the bill referred to by the gentleman from Alabama. The bill of the gentleman from Alabama would stand next upon the Calendar. The Chair will now hear the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. The point I desire to make is that this is not the first special order on the Calendar. I ask the order to be preserved as it stands on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Michigan that this is the first special order on the Calendar that stands as unfinished business, and for that reason it comes first before the committee for consideration, no other special order having had partial consideration in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Michigan will find that to be the fact by examining the Calendar.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] has the floor.

Mr. BANKS addressed the House. [His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. TUCKER obtained the floor.

Mr. WOOD. With the consent of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER,] I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAYLER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to impose duties upon foreign imports, to promote trade and commerce, to reduce taxation, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RELATIONS OF UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent to offer for adoption the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 2,000 extra copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, No. 701, on the relations of the United States and Mexico, with the accompanying documents, be printed for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. Will this involve an expenditure of more than $500?

Mr. WILSON. If it will, let the number be curtailed to 1,000. This is a most important document.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of the importance of the document, and thinks it should be printed in the number proposed by the resolution; but if the expense will exceed $500 the statute requires that the resolution shall be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WILSON. Let the resolution be modified by adding "provided the expense of the same shall not exceed $500."

There being no objection, the resolution, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAINT JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD.

Mr. WELSH. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be respectfully requested to furnish for the use of the House the amount of subsidy in land granted the Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad, together with all information as to what disposition has been and is now being made of said land grant, and why said road has not been completed to a junction with the Union Pacific Railroad at Kearney, Nebraska, according to the survey and profile of said road accepted and now on file in the Interior Department.

Mr. BUTLER. That should be "directed."

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the word is right.

Mr. BUTLER. No; direct the Secretary and request the President.

The SPEAKER. The Secretary is not under the control of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. The House has to do with the Secretary.

The resolution was adopted.

ADVERTISING MAIL-LETTINGS.

Mr. SINGLETON. I rise to a privileged question, and submit a report from a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. SINGLETON. The advertisements for mail-lettings have to go out by the 10th of this month and it is necessary action should be taken at once.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3987) entitled "An act to regulate the advertising of mail-lettings," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 15, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 11 and 12, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of said amendments substitute the following:

SEC. 4 Hereafter all advertisements, notices, and proposals for contracts, and all other forms of advertising required by law for the Post-Office Department, may be paid for at a price not to exceed the commercial rates charged to private individuals, with the usual discounts, such rates to be ascertained from sworn statements to be furnished to the Postmaster-General by the proprietors of the newspapers proposing to so advertise: Provided, That all advertising in newspapers since the 10th day of April, 1877, shall be audited and paid at like rates. But the Postmaster-General may secure lower terms at special rates whenever the public interest requires it.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 13 and 14, and agree to the same with an amendment, namely:

Change the numbers of sections 6 and 7 to numbers 5 and 6, respectively.

And the Senate agree to the same.

O. R. SINGLETON,
ANTHONY EICKHOFF,
Managers on the part of the House.

T. W. FERRY,
A. S. PADDOCK,
ELI SAULSBURY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WADDELL. Mr. Speaker, before that conference report is agreed to I wish to make a single statement to the House. That bill was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and was reported by me. In my absence, by some misapprehension another committee was assigned to the charge of it as conferees. I know nothing about concurrence or non-concurrence, and I wish to make the statement that I am not responsible in any way for this conference report. I have no doubt it is all right; but it is necessary I should make this statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state, after the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina, that the disagreement between the two Houses was called up in the House by the gentleman from Mississippi, and the Chair of course recognized that gentleman as in charge of the bill. In addition to that the Chair desires to state the conferees on the part of the House were appointed on consultation with the gentleman from Mississippi and he may add with his entire approval.

Mr. WADDELL. I only wish to explain the matter so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SINGLETON. This makes it necessary, Mr. Speaker, that I should say a word.

The SPEAKER. The bill originated in the Committee on Printing, of which the gentleman from Mississippi is chairman, and the conferees on the part of the House were made up of that committee on both sides of the House.

Mr. SINGLETON. It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that this was a bill reported from the Committee on Printing, which, by some means or other, was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and when it came back from the Senate there was a disagreement between the two Houses, and on my motion the question was taken up. I supposed it was necessary to pass it through the House because these advertisements for mail-lettings have to go out in a few days, and I deemed it proper, as originating the bill, I should ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. As the Chair has already stated, the conferees were appointed at my suggestion.

I wish to say a word on this report. As the bill passed the House originally it is not changed except in some verbal respects. There is an additional section as to the manner in which we shall pay for public printing. That was not in the original bill. It was put on by the Senate, and after having examined it in conference we have come to the conclusion that with some little amendments it ought to be passed in the form in which we reported it here to-day.

The question being taken, the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. SINGLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ISAAC ROSHON.

Mr. MONROE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4780) granting a pension to Isaac Roshon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN J. HOLLINGER.

Mr. MONROE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4781) granting a pension to John J. Hollinger; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

J. B. M'CARTHY.

Mr. LANDERS. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution, for reference to the Committee of Accounts, to pay J. B. McCarthy for services to committee investigating police commissioners.

Mr. CONGER. Is that for one of the experts? I think the resolution had better go over. I object to the reference.

NEW EDITION OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the joint resolution (S. R. No. 23) providing for the distribution and sale of the new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States, with a view to putting the same upon its passage. The joint resolution has the approval of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. Every member of the House is interested in seeing this matter disposed of at once.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 23) providing for the distribution and sale of the new edition of the Revised Statutes was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the 15,000 copies of the new edition of the first volume of the Revised Statutes of the United States required by the fourth section of the act to provide for the preparation and publication of a new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States, approved March 2, 1877, to be printed and bound, shall be disposed of by the Secretary of State as follows: to the President of the United States, 4 copies, one of which shall be for the library of the Executive Mansion, and 1 copy for the use of the Commissioner of Public Buildings; to the Vice-President of the United States, 2 copies; to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, to the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, 1 copy; to the Librarian of the Senate, for the use of Senators, 120 copies; to the Librarian of the House, for the use of Representatives and Delegates, 410 copies; to the Senate of the United States, for distribution, 760 copies; to the House of Representatives, for distribution, 2,920 copies; to the Library of Congress, 14 copies, including 4 copies for the law library; to the Department of State, for the use of legations and consulates, 380 copies; to the Treasury Department, including those for the use of officers and customs, 280 copies; to the War Department, including 5 copies for the use of the Military Academy at West Point, 55 copies; to the Navy Department, including 3 copies for the library of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, a copy of the library of each navy-yard in the United States, a copy for the Brooklyn Naval Lyceum, and a copy for the library of the Naval Institute at Charlestown, Massachusetts, 70 copies; to the Department of the Interior, including those for the use of the surveyors-general and registers and receivers of land offices, 255 copies; to the Department of Justice, including those for the use of the Chief and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, the judges and officers of the United States and territorial courts, 450 copies; to the Department of Agriculture, 5 copies; to the Smithsonian Institution, 2 copies; to the Government Printing office, 2 copies; and the Secretary of State shall supply deficiencies and offices newly created.

And that the residue of said 15,000 volumes, together with any further number thereafter printed and bound, shall, by the Secretary of State, be sold at the cost of paper, press-work, and binding, with 10 per cent. added thereto; and said Secretary is authorized to make arrangements with booksellers to keep on sale said Revised Statutes, to be sold as aforesaid, for such part of the 10 per cent. above actual cost as he may deem just and reasonable. And whenever the said residue of said 15,000 copies shall be exhausted said Secretary shall cause another 5,000 copies to be printed and bound, at the expense of the United States, to be sold in like manner, unless otherwise disposed of by order of Congress, the cost of the same to be paid from the general appropriation for printing.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ACKLEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REVISION OF THE TARIFF.

Mr. BUTLER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4782) to provide for a commission to aid in the revision of the tariff; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

FRAUDS UPON THE REVENUE.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draught of a bill to prevent frauds upon the revenue; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

A. G. LAWRENCE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, recommending an appropriation to pay Hon. A. G. Lawrence, commissioner to Sioux Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RICE, of Ohio, on account of important business, for one week from to-morrow;

To Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire, for four days; and

To Mr. RAINEY, for four days.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 8, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) granting the use of tents at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Des Moines, Iowa, received yesterday from the House of Representatives, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of John Williams and others, citizens of Campbell County, Virginia, praying for the establishment of a mail-route from Lynchburgh to Loving Creek in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, I believe I can truly say that the great body of the people of North Carolina are very much opposed to that provision of the internal-revenue law imposing a tax of 10 per cent. upon State bank circulation. I this morning present three petitions upon this subject, very numerously signed by professional men, bankers, business men of all kinds, including a great number of farmers. As these petitions are very brief, I ask that one of them may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the petition referred to will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned, believe that the tax of 10 per cent. on the circulating notes issued by banks chartered by the different States is unjust, and against the best interests of the people. We therefore most respectfully petition Congress to repeal that clause in the national banking law which levies a tax of 10 per cent. on the circulating notes of State banks.

Mr. MERRIMON. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OGLESBY. I present the petition of 700 citizens of Chicago, Illinois, merchants, traders, mechanics, and laborers, praying for the immediate repeal of the bankrupt law. This petition was started on the 4th of May, in consequence of the impression there that the law would not be repealed immediately; and, after a very short effort, a number of signatures was sent me with this statement, which I shall read:

Your petitioners would most respectfully urge the immediate repeal of the bankrupt law, for the following, among other reasons:

Our Government, in the practical operation of this law, says to every debtor that by paying $150 to the officers who are connected with its courts in bankruptcy, and delivering to them as much of his property as he shall choose to surrender, he can obtain an effectual discharge from all his debts. His estate yielding comparatively nothing to his creditors, is only valuable to those who administer it. A measure capable of results so foreign to the purposes of its originators, and which has thus become so hostile to our commercial prosperity, should not, in the judgment of your petitioners, be longer continued in the jurisprudence of the country.

The experience of the last few days shows that men owing small sums, and whose debts were contracted for family supplies, are resorting to this mode of paying them.

The recent subsidence of the hope of the immediate repeal of this law has cast a deep gloom upon the business prospects of the West, which we still trust will be dispelled by the final action of your honorable body.

I move that the petition lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOOTH. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of California, in favor of the repeal of such parts of the revenue laws as create a distinction between the taxation upon the deposits in savings-banks having a capital stock, and upon those in savings-banks having none. As the preamble is short, and sets forth all the facts, I ask that the joint resolution may be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas, by the provisions of the internal-revenue laws of the United States, savings-banks having a capital stock, although paying more than the prescribed dividend of 4½ per cent. per annum to their depositors, are excluded from the privilege of exemption from the tax on deposits for deposits not exceeding $2,000, if said savings-banks are paying more than 8 per cent. per annum to their stockholders; and

Whereas in California the standard of interest exceeds considerably said limit of 4½ per cent. per annum, and depositors obtain much higher dividends, to wit, from 7½ to 10 per cent. per annum, and no savings-banks could be patronized or exist in this State unless paying such higher dividends, while obviously no guarantee funds could be obtained without paying dividends thereon exceeding 8 per cent. per annum; that is, exceeding the average rate paid to the funds intended to be guaranteed; and

Whereas by reason thereof the savings-banks having a guarantee fund for depositors, called "capital stock" in California, are made to pay nearly the entire amount of tax paid by such banks in the United States, to wit, $149,033.08 out of a total of $161,148.40, according to the report of the honorable Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1877, which fact establishes an extraordinary and oppressive discrimination against depositors in such savings-banks in the State of California, from whose earnings almost the entire tax in the United States is taken: Therefore,

Resolved by the senate, (the assembly concurring,) That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives requested to use all means in their power to secure the passage of an act of Congress repealing such parts of said revenue laws as create a distinction between the taxation upon the deposits in savings-banks having a capital stock and upon those in savings-banks having none.

Resolved, That the governor of this State be requested to forward to each of our Senators and Representatives a copy of this preamble and of this resolution.

JAMES A. JOHNSON,
President of the Senate.
C. P. BERRY,
Speaker of the Assembly.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Alexander H. Rice and 224 others, citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. Ordered, That Elizabeth Bailey have leave to withdraw from the files of the Forty-fourth Congress the paper accompanying her petition for a pension.

INTERCOURSE WITH MEXICO.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following concurrent resolutions; which were read:

Concurrent resolutions touching the relations of the United States of America with the Republic of Mexico.

Whereas the people of Mexico, animated with the love of free government which distinguishes the people of the United States of America, have long adhered to a republican form of government, as that which is best suited to preserve their liberties, and have maintained their free republican institutions under the embarrassment of the most adverse circumstances with an honorable devotion to their principles which merits the sympathy and regard of the American people; and

Whereas the most essential interest connected with the welfare and prosperity of the people of both governments in their various relations require that permanent peace should be maintained between them, and that confidence, good-will, free intercourse, and liberal reciprocal advantages of trade and commerce should be established:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring therein,) That in defining and settling by treaty the relations of the United States of America with the Republic of Mexico it is just and expedient, and in accordance with the interest which the people of the United States have in the maintenance of the right of self-government on this continent, that the present boundaries between Mexico and the United States shall be guaranteed as permanent and inviolable.

2. That it is proper that both governments shall engage that the territory of each shall be protected against conquest by any power residing beyond the seas.

3. That it is expedient that liberal provisions shall be made by treaty to secure to the people of both countries the equal and reciprocal advantages of intercourse, trade, and commerce with each other; and that, to increase the advantages of such intercourse and to place upon a stable footing the peace and friendship of the two republics, it is expedient that such mutual agreements shall be entered into as will protect the borders of both countries from the predatory raids of bands of outlaws; and that persons who are citizens of either country residing in the other shall enjoy the rights of hospitality secured to the citizens of the most favored countries, and shall be free from all unlawful interferences with or arbitrary exactions and assessments upon their persons or property.

4. And it is also expedient to provide by treaty for the protection and encouragement of such citizens of either country as shall, with the consent of the government of Mexico, build and equip a line of railroad from the City of Mexico to the Rio Grande in the direction of San Antonio, in Texas, or to any point on the borders of the United States, to connect with the line or lines of railroad at the boundary between the United States and Mexico, and to secure the safe transit of the citizens of each republic and their property over such line or lines of railroad within the territory of each country, subject to such commercial regulations as shall from time to time be agreed upon by the respective governments.

Mr MORGAN. I expect to have the resolutions referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. For the present I desire that they be printed and lie upon the table, as I wish to submit some remarks upon the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be printed and lie upon the table.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. INGALLS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4104) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 1186) amendatory of and supplementary to the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and the several acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. JOHNSTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-roads in the several States therein named; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to ask leave of the Senate for that committee to sit during the sessions of the Senate. There are many measures of pressing importance before the committee which will require its attention for perhaps two days.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to granting leave to the Committee on Public Lands to sit during the sessions of the Senate? The Chair hears no objection, and leave is granted.

EUNICE J. STOCKWELL.

Mr. BRUCE. I move that the vote be reconsidered by which the bill (S. No. 965) for the relief of Eunice J. Stockwell was indefinitely postponed, in order that it may be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee. The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims a few days since by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. MCMILLAN.] Had I been in my seat at the time, I should have made the request that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote indefinitely postponing the bill will be reconsidered, if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

THE PENSION LIST—ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. INGALLS. Yesterday when the pension appropriation bill was under discussion the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] stated that the whole number of pensioners that were placed upon the roll under the law of March 9 last, granting additional pensions to soldiers of the war of 1812, had been 10,491. I stated to him by way of interruption that that was the number of applications.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to suggest that the Senator from California is not now in his seat?

Mr. INGALLS. This is a matter that does not particularly affect him. The Senator from California observed that the number that had been placed on the roll up to last Saturday was 10,491, if he was capable of understanding a direct statement by the Commissioner of Pensions. I replied to him that I had inquired upon the subject, and that the number that he named defined the applications and not the number that had been placed upon the roll. In order that there might be no misunderstanding, and in justice to myself and to the Commissioner of Pensions, I sent immediately a telegram to that office asking for information upon that subject. He has stated to me that under the act of March 9, 1878, the number of claims that had been filed was 11,063, and that on the 4th day of the present month the number of pensioners that had been placed upon the rolls was one hundred and fifty-six. Therefore I was correct in my understanding of what the Commissioner of Pensions stated.

I make these observations in justice to him, and in no sense whatever criticising the Senator from California, although I thought at the time that he denied very hastily and somewhat curtly the observation that I made.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to call up, if there is no further morning business, the resolution in reference to the Washington Monument. Its consideration will take but a few minutes.

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, let us pass that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] rose some time ago for the purpose of asking the Senate to proceed to the consideration of some measure, and the Chair will first recognize him.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3679) to amend a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms, approved July 3, 1876.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection to that bill. I should like, however, to make a remark if the Senator from Rhode Island will yield to me a moment.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill first.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not want to speak to this bill, but to make a single remark in reference to a statement made during the only moment I have been out of the Chamber this morning. I understand that the Senator from Kansas explained with regard to the number of pensioners of the war of 1812, under the new legislation, and read a telegram from the Commissioner of Pensions. I dare say the Senator from Kansas is correct in his figures in reference to that matter; but the point which I stated is untouched by his criticism of my figures, and that is, that the effect of the legislation of March last is to put between twenty-two and twenty-three thousand new persons upon the pension-rolls. Whether they have all got on the pension-rolls now, or whether it will take six months to get them all there, or six years, the unquestioned fact is that that will be the increase of the pension-rolls by means of that legislation.

I do not care now to discuss the matter and did not care to discuss it upon the pension appropriation bill except so far as to remark that sometimes when we understand that one or two or three thousand may be added to the roll, the result is that the language used is broad enough to carry twenty thousand or thirty thousand, and instead of costing three or four hundred thousand dollars it may cost a million and a half, as it does in this case, as I am informed, when we shall have reached the full amount. That was the point. So far as the accuracy of the particular state of the pension-roll to-day, I would trust the Pension Committee, for it is their business to study it. I simply stated what I understood to be the effect of the legislation.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to make a remark in reply to my friend from California as to the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions and to defend the action of the committee and the action of this body by the passage of the pension act of March 9, last. It might be inferred from the remarks of my friend from California who has just taken his seat that the passage of that act was secured by some suppressio veri, that is, by an understatement of the number of pensioners who would receive benefit under it and of the cost involved. I would call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to the fact that at the time the bill was passed, embodied in the report which was read here in the Senate, is the estimate made by the Commissioner of Pensions of the number of soldiers and widows of soldiers who would be added to the roll under the operation of that bill provided it should become a law. Therefore the Senate was fully informed with regard to the charge that would be involved by the passage of the act.

It is true that the other day, on my first reappearance in the Senate after a considerable absence, in joining issue with my friend from California as to the correctness of his statement that twenty-two thousand names had been added to the roll, I asserted my belief that that was an impossibility, that he must be mistaken, that it must have involved the names of all the pensioners from all the wars. He insisted upon it that he was correct. My statement, made at the time from recollection merely, was that the Commissioner of Pensions had estimated the addition to the rolls of soldiers of the war of 1812 at between three thousand and four thousand. Since that time I have examined his reply to my inquiry and I find that he fixes the probable addition to the pension-roll of the soldiers of the war of 1812 under the act which we passed at forty-five hundred and thirty-one. That is the number which he estimates as the soldiers of the war of 1812 who will be added to the roll under the operation of that law. He went on afterward to make a conjectural estimate of the number of widows of soldiers of the war of 1812, who were married subsequently to the treaty of peace, and he put the estimate of those widows at thirteen thousand. Therefore the whole addition that will be made to the rolls under the operation of that law by the estimate of the Pension Bureau itself, which was read to the Senate before the bill was passed, would aggregate about seventeen thousand five hundred. The Senate was in possession of every one of these facts and all these estimates at the time the bill was passed, and I think it unnecessary now to attempt to imply that any suppression of the facts of the case was made in order to secure the passage of the bill, affecting the probable cost to the Treasury which would be involved by the passage of the bill, because there was before the Senate the report of the Commissioner making the estimates of the addition, of which the Senate was fully informed at the time action was taken.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Now let us proceed with the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not desire to take time from the Senator's bill, but I ask him to allow me now to say a few words. I do not think the Senator would gain anything by refusing me an opportunity to reply to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Very well. I am not objecting to the Senator from California proceeding.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I was going to allow the Senator from California to proceed.

Mr. SARGENT. What is the regular order?

Mr. ALLISON. The regular order is the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the unfinished business, and will not come up until the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. SARGENT. I have an impression that I shall have an opportunity to say a word further on this subject during the day without trenching on my friend's courtesy.

Mr. HOAR. I called for the regular order because I am satisfied that this matter will lead to a long discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island obtained the floor and yielded to the Senator from California. The Senator from Massachusetts calls for the regular order, which will be the Calendar in the morning hour. The first bill on the Calendar where its consideration was last left off will be reported on the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will allow this bill to proceed; it will take but a few moments. I have been trying for two or three days to get it up.

Mr. SARGENT. I object.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I yielded the floor to the Senator from California, and I think he will not now object to proceeding with the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well, then I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I do not object to the Senator from California making an explanation.

Mr. SARGENT. I would have been through by this time if the Senator had allowed me to proceed. I simply want to say that I do not wish to do injustice to the Committee on Pensions. I have no doubt that they faithfully and well did their duty and at the time understood the facts; but there was a strange lapse of memory on the part of my friend from Virginia since that time, because the seventeen thousand has shrunk to some four thousand, and he was insisting that that was the number involved by the legislation in his remarks the other day. Of course it was a mere lapse of memory. I do not impeach the committee; I simply say that the Senate itself carelessly passes these things; and while it may be true that officially we were informed, technically were informed by the report laid upon our table, (and perhaps the committee did all it could to call the facts to our attention,) still I do not believe that any one understood at that time that we were to put seventeen thousand persons on the roll under that legislation. If the Senate did understand it, my opinion is now—I adhere to it; it has not been impeached—that the ultimate number will be over 22,250.

Mr. WITHERS. That is a mere question of opinion, because the number of applications has only reached between ten and eleven thousand and it is a mere matter of conjecture as to what the whole number will probably be.

Mr. SARGENT. In two months it has reached nearly eleven thousand.

Mr. WITHERS. I have the same right to my opinion that the Senator has to his, and I take it for granted that probably a large majority of those entitled to apply have already applied.

Mr. SARGENT. But the Commissioner of Pensions on this point confirms my statement; that is, that the number will be over twenty-two thousand.

ISSUE OF ARMS TO TERRITORIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the bill moved by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3679) to amend a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms, approved July 3, 1876.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move to insert the word "and" in the seventh line, after the word "word," where it occurs the second time. It will then read:

By inserting in the fifth line, after the word "States" and before the word "each," the words "and Territories," and by striking out, after the word "each" in said fifth line, and before the word "provided" in the sixth line, the words "and not more than five hundred to each of said Territories."

Mr. SPENCER. The amendment is simply to insert the word "and" before the word "Territories."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to have the bill read as it stands.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That a joint resolution approved July 3, 1876, entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms," be amended as follows: By inserting in the fifth line, after the word "States" and before the word "each," the words "and Territories," and by striking out after the word "each" in said fifth line and before the word "provided" in the sixth line, the words "and not more than five hundred to each of said Territories."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish the Senator would explain what the meaning of the bill is. Upon its face it does not explain.

Mr. BURNSIDE. It simply allows the issue of arms to the Territories as well as the States.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is that intended to take from the States a part of their present quota?

Mr. BURNSIDE. It does not take from the States. It authorizes the issue of arms to Territories as well as States.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does it make an appropriation for that object? How do you distribute the arms without an appropriation?

Mr. BURNSIDE. The bill does not make an appropriation. The arms are issued by the Ordnance Department; the arms are on hand in the Ordnance Department and they issue a certain quota to each State under this statute referred to here. Now the Territories are to be included as well as the States in this statute. It requires no additional appropriation, I will say to the Senator from West Virginia. They are taken from the stores on hand in the Ordnance Department.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I beg pardon of the Senator. As I understand the reading of the bill, no such provision is made. The Senator will recollect that there is now and has been since 1808 a permanent appropriation of $200,000 annually for arms to be distributed among the States. Now, if an additional number is to be distributed among the Territories, where is the appropriation to come from to pay for the arms that go to the Territories? Is it not taken from the States, thus lessening their number?

Mr. BURNSIDE. They are issued in precisely the same way they would be to new States. If these Territories were all admitted as States by Congress, then the Ordnance Department would begin to issue arms to them. Now, if we pass this bill the Ordnance Department will simply issue arms to these Territories precisely the same as they do to the States. As I understand, the $200,000 is not exactly used in the distribution of arms to the different States each year.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURNSIDE. No; I think there is a surplus of arms all the time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have recently had a conversation and also correspondence with the ordnance officer. At the beginning of the year the $200,000 appropriated by a permanent appropriation is divided among the States according to population, and the quota of arms is entered up to the credit of each State, and that is taken from the appropriation of $200,000 that is annually applicable. Now, if you give any arms to the Territories there must be some provision by way of appropriation to pay for them. It cannot be taken from any other particular appropriation. It must come from some source.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The Senator from West Virginia is right in one thing. The distribution is made upon that basis; there is no question about that. But then there is a large surplus of arms on hand in the Ordnance Department all the time, and as each new State is admitted of course it is entitled to its distributive share, and so will be the Territories if we pass this bill. There is a sufficiency of arms in the Ordnance Department to issue to these Territories at once.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from West Virginia is in a slight error if he supposes that two hundred thousand dollars' worth of arms is distributed to each State in proportion to population. As I understand it $200,000 is appropriated each year in a permanent appropriation toward the supply of arms, accouterments, and everything pertaining to the supply of military stores, and from our armory from time to time the arms are distributed to the States. There is no provision in the law for distribution to the Territories. The proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island, I understand, is to include in this distribution the Territories to the amount of five hundred per annum. The $200,000 is appropriated, part of it, to the manufacture of arms; part of it is appropriated to the manufacture of saddles, part to bridles, part to swords, and part to pistols, so as to keep a supply on hand. The standing law of the land distributes them from time to time, in proportion, to the States, and now the Senator from Rhode Island proposes to add "the Territories," with the limitations in the bill.

Mr. BURNSIDE. In other words, it puts the Territories upon the footing they would be if they were admitted as States at once.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is true that up to 1876, when the resolution was passed to which this bill is amendatory, the rule of distribution to the Territories pro rata obtained, the same as the rule of distribution to the States. They were distributed on the basis of representation in Congress. That rule obtained all the time until 1876. By that act the Territories were left out. This bill, as I understand, is simply to restore the Territories to their relationship under the law as it stood before.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Nebraska are both in error. According to the report of the ordnance officer, which I hold in my hand, a report made this year, under the appropriation to which I referred each State is allotted the amount of money to which it is entitled, and the Territories are included with the States and have a regular allotment. If this bill passes, it will be giving to the Territories an additional amount of arms that the States do not get.

Again, the appropriation is in money, not in arms, and each arm is valued at so much by the Department and charged to the State as it is drawn.

Mr. DAWES. I wish the Senator from West Virginia would read it and let us hear how it reads.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will send it to the desk to be read.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to the fact that a large number of States have not drawn the arms at all and have large amounts of money due them, some of them have overdrawn, some of them are in debt. The $200,000, as I said a moment ago, is appropriated for the purpose of keeping up a supply of arms for distribution; but the distribution is not made in accordance with that appropriation exactly; that is, there are not exactly two hundred thousand dollars' worth of arms distributed each year, because they are not issued to the States unless the States call for them. The State of Rhode Island has not at this moment, but it had two months ago twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars to its credit, but we have drawn what we are entitled to with the exception of two or three thousand dollars' worth, I think. There is no regular issue of two hundred thousand dollars' worth of arms each year. This bill simply puts the Territories on the same footing as the States.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. They are now. According to the report of the ordnance officer, the Territories and States are treated just alike.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I understand not.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask the Clerk to read the report of the ordnance officer, which he holds in his hand.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The heading of the report.

Mr. SPENCER. Read the special letter from the Ordnance Office.

The CHIEF CLERK. The heading of this statement on page 8 is:

Apportionment of arms for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, under the law of 1808 for arming and equipping the militia, as amended by the seventh section of the act approved March 3, 1855, and regulations established in conformity therewith.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now, in that statement each State and Territory is given, and the amount in money that each State and each Territory is entitled to is embraced in that table.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I will state to the Senator from West Virginia that they cannot receive the money.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Of course not. I stated that they receive it in arms.

Mr. BURNSIDE. And the Territories can receive up to the amount of five hundred, but they cannot receive more than that, no matter how much population they have, and how much they are entitled to.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask the Clerk to read the letter from the Ordnance Office.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The object of this bill is to do away with any difference as between the States and Territories in the issue of arms.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks for the reading of a letter, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 15, 1878.

In the opinion of this office it would be wise legislation to enact the bill introduced by Mr. FERRY amending the joint resolution, July 3, 1876. There seems to be no good reason for making a distinction between the States and Territories as regards the number of arms to be issued; and as far as the knowledge of this office extends there is as much if not more necessity for furnishing arms to the Territories as to the States bordering upon them. The words "and Territories" should be inserted instead of the word "Territories."

S. C. LYFORD,
Acting Chief of Ordnance.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

Mr. BURNSIDE. This simply removes the limitation which now exists, and allows the Territories, if they are entitled to them, to receive more than five hundred arms each. That is the object of this bill. It is certainly just that the bill should be passed.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know that I have any particular hostility to this bill; but the general policy of distributing arms throughout the country I think is a vicious one. The arms become entirely useless in a few years, because they are not taken care of; and at present, as I am informed, the Government itself has less than ten thousand of the best of arms on hand outside of those that are in the hands of our troops in the field. Therefore, to distribute the best arms that we have it seems to me is a very vicious policy, for they are sure to go into hands where they will not be taken care of, and if a time of need should arise when they will be required for national or any other purposes, they would be wholly useless.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator from Vermont will allow me to read from the resolution of 1876, to which this bill is amendatory, he will see that his statement is incorrect. There is a proviso of this character:

Provided, That such issues shall be only from arms owned by the Government which have been superseded and no longer issued to the Army.

So that the kind of arms he speaks of, the improved patterns of arms, are not to be distributed at all, but it is only those arms which have been superseded, the old style of muskets, &c., which are in store in abundance; and this resolution provides that they shall be distributed to the States, a thousand to each State. That is, the limitation is a thousand to the States, and the limitation of five hundred is put on the Territories. If there is occasion anywhere to have these arms, it is certainly in the Territories, on the border, where they are liable always to have Indian troubles.

Mr. MORRILL. I am not objecting to the passage of this bill for the Territories; and if the statement of the Senator is correct that the arms which are to be distributed are only such as have been superseded, we might nearly as well distribute wooden guns as to distribute these.

Mr. PADDOCK. It was not so during the war. They were issued then and thought to be good arms. It happens now that we have repeating rifles and that sort of improved arms, that we had not then; but at that time those we had were thought to be very good arms, and our friends on the border are very glad to receive them now in this time of danger.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I admit readily that the Territories are as much entitled to arms as the States, and I have no wish to deprive the Territories of getting their just apportion; but, according to the report of the ordnance officer, they are now equally provided for with the States according to population.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I call the attention of the Senator to the letter of the Chief of Ordnance, just read at the desk.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The document I hold in my hand from the Ordnance Office, dated February 5, 1878, in making an apportionment of the $200,000 annually appropriated, shows that the Territories are provided for just as the States are; and there should be no difference. I am perfectly content that the Territories should have their equal proportion; but I do not want them to have a double proportion, inasmuch as it is taken from the States to give it to them.

Mr. BURNSIDE. This simply puts them on a footing with the States. It corrects a law which discriminates against the Territories.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to the Senator to amend his bill so as to say that it shall not be taken from the quota now apportioned among the States.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I will accept that.

Mr. PADDOCK. That seems to me to be an absurdity, because the law to which this is amendatory emphatically states that the arms shall be distributed to the States, exactly as the Senator undertakes to insure by his amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then the amendment will do no harm.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I accept the amendment; it will do no harm.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think it will; it is tautology.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the amendment will not be insisted on; it forces the bill to go back to the House, and there is a pressing necessity for the Territory of Idaho to have arms.

Mr. BURNSIDE. It has to go back anyhow. An amendment has been made putting in the word "and."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The amendment I suggest is that in the distribution of arms the quota now belonging to each State shall not be lessened. That is the substance of it.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator had better prepare his amendment and submit it in writing.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Clerk can put it in form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the quota to the States now authorized by law shall not hereby be diminished.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3987) to regulate the advertising of mail-lettings.

The message further announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 23) providing for the distribution and sale of the new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

RETIREMENT OF LEGAL-TENDER NOTES.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the Senate now take up and dispose of the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] about the reference of the bill (H. R. No. 4663) to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes. It will only take a moment.

Mr. DAWES. Will not the Senator allow me to pass the Washington Monument resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. It will only take a moment, I apprehend, to dispose of the motion to refer.

Mr. SARGENT. The morning hour has expired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WHYTE. I object.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from Maryland will not object. I understand the Senator from Missouri desires favorable action on the motion to refer, so as to have the bill referred to the committee. There is no longer any opposition, and I trust the Senator from Maryland will not object.

Mr. WHYTE. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was no intention of mine in calling up this bill to attempt to force immature action upon it; and from statements which have been made by the members of the Finance Committee that they will report this bill back and that it can probably be reported by next Tuesday, I shall not interpose any objection to its reference because that would be as soon as I should attempt to hasten action upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAYARD. I will merely say a word in all frankness before the motion is voted on. The composition of that committee is well known to the Senate; the opinions of the various members, as probably indicated by the discussion on this general subject, are well known. I would merely say that the committee will no doubt act in accordance with their known opinions on the subject, and that on a majority of that committee will rest the disposition of the bill. There is no understanding of any kind further than that. There is meant to be no delay of any kind on the part of those who may oppose the measure. That is all I wish to say before the vote is taken.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. No. 15) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. DAWES. Will not the Senator from Iowa allow me to pass the monument resolution? It will only take a few moments.

Mr. ALLISON. It may take some time. I wish to say to the Senate that I am compelled to be absent from the Senate to-morrow and having charge of this appropriation bill I want to complete it to-day. If there is time after the appropriation bill, I have no doubt the Senate will take up that matter.

Mr. DAWES. I am under the necessity of being gone several days myself.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Judiciary Committee has reported a bill providing for the distribution of the award made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico. It is absolutely necessary that that bill should be passed in some shape by this Congress. I do not ask for its consideration now; but I give notice that I will beg the Senate to consider it the first case in the morning after the morning business is over; or I would ask that it be considered immediately after this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. DAWES. If the monument resolution leads to debate I shall not press it.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very sure that the measure proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will lead to more or less debate, and I am pressed on all hands with reference to other matters; therefore I must insist on the regular order.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4549) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is to strike out the words "Indian Territory," in line 772, and insert "Territory of Idaho;" so as to read

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the removal of the Nez Percé Indians of Joseph's band, now held as prisoners of war at Fort Leavneworth, Kansas, to a suitable location in the Territory of Idaho, and for their settlement thereon, and for clothing, subsistence, and such other articles as may be required for their advancement in civilization, including the employment of such skilled labor as may be necessary to aid in teaching them civilized pursuits with a view to their future self-support, the sum of $20,000."

Mr. ALLISON. Yesterday when that question was up for discussion there was some difference of opinion with reference to the condition of the lands in the Indian Territory. I have a communication from the Indian Bureau upon that subject which is very full and very clearly shows that some sixteen million acres of land in the Indian Territory are subject to the disposal of the United States. I do not ask that this be read in detail unless some Senator requires it, but that it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BECK. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, May 8, 1878.

SIR: In reply to your verbal inquiry of yesterday, as to the amount and condition of land in the Indian Territory, west of the ninety-sixth degree, I have the honor to inform you:

First. That the following lands west of said degree have been granted in fee or purchased and paid for by the tribe occupying the same, to wit:

	Acres.
The Osage reservation	1,466,167
The Sac and Fox reservation	479,667
The Seminole reservation	200,000
The Chickasaw reservation	4,650,935
About one-half the Choctaw reservation	1,667,000
About one-half the Creek reservation	1,607,747
Total	10,647,392

Second. There has been conveyed by treaty or act of Congress, to be paid for when their lands in Kansas and Nebraska are sold:

	Acres.
To the Kansas Indians	100,141
To the Pawnee Indians	283,026
To the Pottawatomies	575,877
Total	959,044

Third. There has been granted by treaties of 1867, (15 Stats. 581-593,) to the Kiowas and Comanches, and to the Cheyennes and Arapahoes for their absolute and undisturbed use and occupation:

	Acres.
To the Kiowas and Comanches	2,908,893
To the Cheyennes and Arapahoes	3,938,117
And by unsatisfied agreement of October 19, 1872, to the Wichitas	743,610
Or a total of	7,600,620

The Cheyennes and Arapahoes, however, have not occupied the territory assigned to them by the treaty of 1867, but have been in occupation under executive order of August 10, 1869, of 4,297,771 acres of land south and west of the Cimarron River and the old Cherokee line.

Fourth. The actually unassigned lands in the Indian Territory, west of the ninety-sixth degree, are as follows:

One hundred and five thousand four hundred and fifty-six acres in the forks of the Arkansas and Cimarron River, east of the Pawnees; 683,139 acres north of the Cimarron and south of the Arapahoe and Cheyenne grant, by treaty of 1867; 1,645,890 acres south of the above tract and between the Cimarron and Canadian Rivers and west of the Sac and Fox Indians; 2,279,618 acres west of the Cimarron River and north of the lands covered by executive order of August 10, 1868, now occupied by the Cheyennes and Arapahoes; and 1,511,576 acres in the southwestern corner of the said Territory and west of the north fork of the Red River.

There are therefore of absolutely unappropriated land west of the ninety-sixth degree, 6,695,679 acres, and of appropriated but unoccupied land, 3,958,117 acres, or a total of 10,653,796 acres of land upon which other tribes may be settled.

Of the 7,266,664 acres occupied by the Arapahoe and Cheyennes and the Kiowa and Comanches, only about 1,500,000 acres is required for their settlement, allowing them 160 acres for each individual.

With each of these tribes treaty provisions exist allowing the settlement of other Indians among them.

The total number of acres, then, west of the ninety-sixth degree, upon which Indians may be located, is 16,420,460 acres.

Further information with regard to the status of the lands in Indian Territory can be found in Executive Document No. 32, Forty-Fifth Congress, second session.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

E. A. HAYT,
Commissioner.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON,
United States Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. The statement that has just been read from the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as it is said about a well-executed counterfeit, is well calculated to deceive. The Commissioner endeavors to leave the impression upon the Senate, inadvertently, I presume——

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me? I desire to ask the consent of the Senator managing the bill to allow the five-minute rule to be extended to ten minutes, on this amendment at least, so that the Senator from Kansas and others may express themselves more fully, as it is too important to limit debate to five minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the extension of time for debate on this amendment? Is there objection to extending the time to ten minutes instead of five on this amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. The Commissioner, inadvertently I have no doubt, leaves upon the mind of the Senate the impression that this land belongs to the United States, and that here is a vast unoccupied, unassigned territory, west of the ninety-sixth meridian of longitude, upon which Indian tribes can be located without any expense to the Government. It is not correct. I call the attention of the Senate to the language of the Cherokee treaty, article 16:

> The United States may settle friendly Indians in any part of the Cherokee country west of 96°, to be taken in a compact form in quantity not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres for each member of each of said tribes thus to be settled; the boundaries of each of said districts to be distinctly marked, and the land conveyed in fee-simple to each of said tribes to be held in common or by their members in severalty as the United States may decide.

Now mark—

> Said lands thus disposed of to be paid for to the Cherokee Nation at such price as may be agreed on between the said parties in interest, subject to the approval of the President; and if they should not agree, then the price to be fixed by the President.
> The Cherokee Nation to retain the right of possession of and jurisdiction over all of said country west of 96° of longitude until thus sold and occupied, after which their jurisdiction and right of possession to terminate forever as to each of said districts thus sold and occupied.

If Indians are located upon these lands they must be paid for at a price to be agreed upon between these several civilized nations and the President of the United States, or, if they cannot agree, then the President is to fix the price. I want the Senate to understand that here is not unoccupied public domain belonging to the United States upon which these Indians can be located, but that this is an attempt on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to compel the United States Government to purchase land there for the purpose of locating these Indians when they do not wish to go, and when they have a reservation themselves that is amply sufficient for their purposes.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I stated yesterday evening pretty fully, or at all events as fully as I could do under the five-minute rule, some of the objections which I had to the passage of this bill containing the clause sought to be stricken out by my motion. It in effect converts the Indian Territory into a Botany Bay, on three sides of which are three of the States of this Union. Disguise it as you may it is the conversion of the Indian Territory into a Botany Bay into which are to be turned all the loose wild tribes of Indians which the Government of the United States acknowledges it is unable to control wherever they may happen to be, and in the particular instance in hand, to turn loose into the Indian Territory a tribe of Indians who were driven from their homes in the Territory of Idaho because they were murderers, because they had murdered twenty-five or thirty families in that Territory; and the inexorable, unjust policy is sought to be followed here of forcing those people into the Indian Territory against, so far as anything comes before us, the wishes of the people of the Indian Territory.

It has been clearly shown by the Senator from Kansas that the Territory known as the Indian Territory is not the property of the United States. In my judgment every foot of land covered by the Indian Territory, as it was originally assigned to the Cherokees, the Choctaws, the Creeks, the Seminoles, and the Chickasaws, is patented land. Bear that in mind. It was patented to these various tribes; and the moment the United States Government issued patents to these nations for those lands the United States became divested of the title, and the title therefor became vested in these tribes. If that position be correct, and that it is there can be no question, then we are endeavoring to take from the Indians, without their consent, their property.

I stated yesterday evening that the United States Government had recognized the Indians as distinct nations, as distinct political communities, that they have done so from the earliest settlement of the colonies, and that Great Britain anterior to the independence of the people of the United States, and while we were colonies of Great Britain, recognized the Indians as distinct political communities, as distinct nations, as nations to be treated with like any other nations of the earth. Hence I stated that if these people are nations, there is but one way under the Constitution of the United States whereby a contract can be made with or the interests of those people affected, and that is by treaty. If you have to deal with those people by a treaty, a law which attempts to take from them their property without their consent is violative of their rights and not sustained by the Constitution of the United States or by any law on the face of the earth.

More than fifty years ago, the great case of Worcester vs. The State of Georgia was before the Supreme Court of the United States, and the opinion was delivered by Chief-Justice Marshall. What was that case? There was a law of the State of Georgia which attempted to prohibit people from settling inside of the Cherokee Nation, except by the consent of the State of Georgia, and a man who should go there without a permit from the governor of the State of Georgia was liable to be indicted and expelled. A missionary, bearing with him God's holy cross, went inside the Cherokee Nation for the purpose of carrying out his mission, and he was indicted for a violation of the laws of the State of Georgia. That case came finally to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the decision was delivered by Chief-Justice Marshall on behalf of the court, the ablest jurist that ever sat upon that bench, and he clearly and unequivocally declared that the act of the State of Georgia attempting to invade the Cherokee Nation and expel therefrom a man who was there by their consent, as was Worcester in this case, was violative of the Constitution of the United States, null and void.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. What became of the missionary? Do you remember?

Mr. MAXEY. I am not sufficiently fresh on that point to remember. I was treating of the question of law. I have not time in the very few minutes allowed me to quote from this decision largely, but I will read from the syllabus enough to cover the point. After going on and tracing out the history of the Indians, the Supreme Court say:

> The extraterritorial power of every Legislature being limited in its action to its own citizens or subjects, the very passage of this act is an assertion of jurisdiction over the Cherokee Nation and of the rights and powers consequent thereto.

That is what they say is the claim of the State of Georgia. Speaking of the law adopted by the discoverers of this continent, it says:

> It regulated the right given by discovery among the European discoverers, but could not affect the rights of those already in possession, either as aboriginal occupants or as occupants by virtue of a discovery made before the memory of man.
> They were well understood to convey the title which, according to the common law of European sovereigns respecting America, they might rightfully convey, and no more.

Speaking of the grants to the various colonies:

> This was the exclusive right of purchasing such lands as the natives were willing to sell. The Crown could not be understood to grant what the Crown did not affect to claim, nor was it so understood.
> The third article of the treaty of Hopewell acknowledges the Cherokees to be under the protection of the United States of America and of no other power.
> This stipulation is found in Indian treaties generally. It was introduced into their treaties with Great Britain, and may probably be found in those with other European powers.
> The treaty of Holston, negotiated with the Cherokees in July, 1791, explicitly recognizing the national character of the Cherokees and their right of self-government, thus guaranteeing their lands, assuming the duty of protection, and of course pledging the faith of the United States for that protection, has been frequently renewed and is now in full force.
> The treaties and laws of the United States contemplate the Indian Territory as completely separated from that of the States, and provide that all intercourse with them shall be carried on exclusively by the Government of the Union.
> The Indian nations had always been considered as distinct, independent political communities, retaining their original natural rights as the undisputed possessors of the soil from time immemorial, with the single exception of that imposed by irresistible power, which excluded them from intercourse with any other European potentate than the first discoverer of the coast of the particular region claimed; and this was a restriction which those European potentates imposed on themselves as well as on the Indians. The very term "nation," so generally applied to them, means "a people distinct from others."
> Georgia, herself, has furnished conclusive evidence that her former opinions on this subject concurred with those entertained by her sister-States and by the Government of the United States.
> * * * * * * *

The Cherokee nation, then—

Say they in conclusion—

is a distinct community, occupying its own territory, with boundaries accurately described, in which the laws of Georgia can have no force, and which the citizens of Georgia have no right to enter but with the assent of the Cherokees themselves, or in conformity with treaties and with the acts of Congress.

* * * * * * *

The act of the State of Georgia, under which the plaintiff in error was prosecuted, is consequently void, and the judgment a nullity.

Mr. President, I read that for what purpose? To show you the character of the title which the Indians hold east of the Mississippi River. What is true of the Cherokees is true of the Choctaws, the Chickasaws, the Creeks, and the Seminoles; and when they, by reason of the vast influx of the American people upon that magnificent country which they had occupied, and more especially after the discovery of the cotton-gin, which settled all that country up as a great cotton country, were forced to leave there, the United States solemnly pledged itself when they went across to occupy the then wilderness where they now live that they should occupy it unmolested; the plighted faith of the Government was given that it should be theirs, for them and their heirs forever, so long as grass grew and water ran.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. MAXEY. I should like if the Senate would permit me to finish the argument I was going on with.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas desires to continue his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. WITHERS. I will take the floor and yield my time to him.

Mr. SARGENT. I rise to a point of order. I have no objection to the Senator from Texas going on; but if we get into the habit which prevails in another body, the one taking the floor and yielding to another, the rule loses all its force. I hope it will not be done.

Mr. WITHERS. The only object I had was to give the Senator from Texas additional time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Texas continuing his remarks?

Mr. ALLISON. How much time does the Senator want?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let him take what time he needs. It is a very important question.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am listening with a great deal of interest to what the Senator from Texas is saying.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas will proceed, there being no objection to his continuing.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, that was the character of title which the Indians held east of the Mississippi River; and when, as I stated, by this great cloud of emigration which went from every portion of the United States into what was then a new country, into Georgia and Alabama and Mississippi, which had been made so immensely valuable to the American Union by reason of the discovery of the cotton gin and the opening up of magnificent cotton plantations, the homes that these Indians owned and which they and their fathers had owned from time immemorial were so coveted by the American people that they were driven from their homes; and the manner in which it was done is a foul spot upon the history of this country. But they were sent where they now live on the plighted faith of the American people, who felt that great wrong had been done them, that they should not be disturbed when they went there. It was a wilderness at that time; Texas was then under the dominion of Mexico; Arkansas was then a territory; Kansas was wholly unsettled; it was all a wilderness. They went there and for long years they were not disturbed. Then for the first time in the history of this country, I will say to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, a wise, humane, and judicious policy was pursued by the American Government toward those five civilized tribes. They were fostered and encouraged in building up schools, opening up farms, acquiring property, making homes, making governments for themselves, and they have been a prosperous and a progressive people. If it is ever to be demonstrated that Indians are capable of self-government, you have the nucleus there with these five tribes now to build up Indian civilization.

Now what course is pursued? When these people are struggling to have a government of their own, struggling to have schools and churches, a government of law, a government of order, we find hurled into their midst, without their consent so far as the Senate knows, people who are driven from where they were born and reared down into the Indian Territory because they are murderers. You are making this beautiful country a Botany Bay. You are doing it against the solemn protest of the Senators who represent the State of Kansas, the State of Arkansas, and the State of Texas, the three States which border upon this Indian Territory, and, so far as I know, also against the consent of those whom it is proposed to remove.

But, again, it was yesterday asserted, and the position was broadly taken I believe by the very able Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, [Mr. ALLISON,] that the United States Government has the right to dispose of this Territory. I deny the proposition toto coelo. The United States Government parted with the title to this property by patent, by grant, which is a better word, to these various tribes. Subsequently it is true that these tribes agreed to surrender a certain amount of property upon conditions; but in the treaties of 1866 all the Indians retained the right not to be disturbed in their property except by their consent, and that consent was to be shown through the national council. Have you got it? Where have you anything to show that the national councils of these people have agreed that these Nez Percés shall go and settle among them?

Mr. SARGENT. Allow me to ask a question. I understand by the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that between sixteen and seventeen million acres of land within the Indian Territory are not the property of the Indians, never have been, never were assigned to their use, but are entirely open and unappropriated, and are available for this purpose.

Mr. MAXEY. He intends to state there, and a close reading of the letter will show it, that the Choctaws, the Chickasaws, the Seminoles, the Creeks, and the Cherokees had parted with that land which was their land, and it is strange that Senators cannot comprehend the real character of this title. It was a title which passed by the Government to them by patent, or by grant, which is a better word, and they agreed to permit this land to be settled up by other tribes of Indians placed there by the United States by their consent, they being paid for it. What evidence have you got that they have agreed through their national councils or otherwise to this thing? How can you legislate in regard to these nations in this way? Contracts made with these nations must be by treaty, and I am proud to say that I have the distinguished authority of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who I understand, from remarks made not long since upon a question involving this very point, entertains that view, and it is going back to the law as it always has been from the very foundation. From the very first transactions of the Government they have been recognized as nations, and so it has run along on down to the last decision I know anything of in 17 Wallace, Holden vs. Joy, which, although hinging on the doctrine that laws may be made, still does maintain the original principle that—

Laws have been enacted by Congress in the spirit of those treaties, and the acts of our Government, both in the executive and legislative departments, plainly recognize such tribes or nations as States, and the courts of the United States are bound by those acts.

So say the Supreme Court of the United States in Holden vs. Joy, 17 Wallace, the opinion being delivered by Mr. Justice Clifford. Now if this be true, we require here, I apprehend, as everywhere else, the best evidence. These Nez Percés are a turbulent people, so turbulent that it is declared on the Senate floor that they cannot be sent back to the reservations which had been assigned to them by the Government, and for that reason they are put in the Indian Territory, thereby making it a Botany Bay. If it be the policy of this Government to turn loose all these wild tribes into the Territory, they inflict a grievous injury upon the surrounding States.

Mr. President, I have trespassed upon the time of the Senate as long as I care to do, but I wished to express my views in regard to the nature and character of the title of the civilized Indians to this Territory, and that the Congress of the United States have no control over it.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, the State of Texas, which I in part represent on this floor, is so much interested in the pending question that, although my colleague has stated fully the reasons for striking out the clause objected to in the appropriation bill, I feel that it is my duty to say something in support of the motion.

The Indian Territory embraces about sixty-eight thousand square miles. It is one of the finest tracts of country upon this continent. Its climate and soil make it susceptible of every variety of production. With a thrifty and industrious population there is no area of territory of the same size in the United States that would produce a greater amount of wealth. The States of Kansas, Arkansas, and Texas border it. All three of those States are interested in the settlement of that Territory. They are all interested that the Territory shall be inhabited by a people who will make good neighbors. The State of Texas especially, bounded as we are on one side by the Rio Grande, and across it with Mexican neighbors, would very much deprecate the establishment of an Indian population upon our northern border.

Besides, there is another consideration. It is about three hundred miles across this Territory from Kansas to Texas on the line of the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas Railroad. The Gulf ports of Texas must do a great proportion of the trade of the great Northwest. The railroads leading from the Gulf of Mexico up into the great Northwest must carry a great proportion of their supplies and bear off a great proportion of their products. Upon the line of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad to-day there is a wilderness of three hundred miles, where there is no cultivation, where there is no evidence of any productiveness. The freight and passenger travel over that railroad going into Texas and passing out is taxed annually to the extent of maintaining that three hundred miles of road because there is no way traffic and no way travel there.

If you make this Territory a recipient for the wild tribes of Indians you dedicate it to the same waste condition in which it now is. You place an embargo upon the commerce of the Northwest and upon the highest interest of Texas. That embargo consists in the tariff for maintaining in running repair all the railroads which traverse three hundred miles of territory which, if settled and placed in a productive condition, would help to lighten the burdens of the traffic.

I do not know that I would agree with my colleague in all his propositions. I do agree with him in believing that the Nez Percé Indians should not be sent there, and that is the question now. The State of Texas has had an experience with the Indians located in that Territory by the Government of the United States, which I hope may not be repeated. The Kiowas, the Apaches, and the Comanches located at the Fort Sill reservation have devolved upon the State of Texas and upon its people a taxation of from $350,000 to $500,000 a year to maintain State troops for the defense of the frontier. Up to 1877 those Indians raided upon Texas an average of twice a week. I can show you a report to the President of Indian Agent Walker, who says, in enumerating the property of the Comanches and the Kiowas, in stating the amount of property they held, that these Indians own about 16,000 horses and mules, the bulk of them notoriously stolen from Texas. He says, further, that these Indians habitually, openly and boastfully brought into the agency the scalps of men, women, and children murdered upon the Texas frontier. He recites these facts. He is a great friend of the Indian, and facts stated by him I take it at least are not exaggerated. Yet, Mr. President, during the time when the people of Texas were being plundered and their women and children and men were being murdered and scalped and some taken into captivity, their property being stolen, I had the honor to be the governor of Texas, and I know the fact to be that the authorities of Texas were never notified that any property of the people of Texas was within this agency in order that the people might go and reclaim it. I know the fact to be that the controllers of these Indian agencies, the agents, denied the extent and the enormity of these depredations; and while the State troops of Texas were fighting the Indians nearly every day, Indians armed with guns furnished by the Government of the United States and with ammunition and clad in clothing furnished by this Government, and with blankets branded with the brand of this Government, these agents were denying that the depredations were being committed. Since I have been here I find the admission of the agent that they were being committed, that the bulk of the property held by the Comanches was stolen from Texas, and that it was a common thing to have war dances over scalps at the agency brought from the Texas frontier.

Now, Mr. President, we do not want any more such neighbors; they are not pleasant people to interchange social civilities with. We do not want the Nez Percés, who have been driven from their reservations for similar offenses, quartered down near Texas where they can join the Comanches, the Kiowas, and the Apaches in making raids upon the Texas frontier.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations it became my duty to look somewhat into this matter, and I am at a loss to see how we can avoid agreeing with the House of Representatives in the proposition they have made. We have now on the Leavenworth reservation some four hundred or five hundred of these Indians. They are described by the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Colorado as men who have been measurably civilized. Let me read what the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] said about them; he knows them better than I do:

> From time immemorial they have been regarded as friendly Indians; they have been the allies of the United States Government in the Northwest; they had a quasi civilization; they were upon a reservation that was exceedingly fertile and exceedingly desirable; they had certain treaty stipulations with the United States Government, and, as the Senator from Colorado has said, they have been the victims of the grossest wrong and the most monumental oppression. I have been at the camp of these Indians upon the Fort Leavenworth military reservation. I have seen them in their present confinement. They live in lodges and tents. They are a noble, heroic-looking race of men. They are intelligent; they are peaceable; they are inclined to submit to law; they are obedient; they are willing to labor; but in their reservation in the Northwest they were subjected to continuous encroachments by the white settlers around them; the Government neglected to carry out its treaty stipulations with them; and what was there left under the circumstances for them to do except to revolt and rebel?

Then he spoke of the heroism with which they carried on the war and the manner of men they were. That is the testimony borne by the Senator from Kansas. Now they are on our hands. It is proposed to put them in the Indian Territory. I was amazed at the statement of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DORSEY]—and that was what troubled me yesterday—that we had no right to settle any Indians there at all, when by the treaty of 1866, which abrogated many of the old treaties because they were changed after the war of the rebellion closed, as the map will show, we have a right to settle any Indians north of the Chickasaw, Choctaw, Kiowa, and Comanche reservations, and all west of the Creek country and south of the Cherokee country—over seventeen million acres in the center of the Territory. There is no idea of settling these men anywhere within one hundred or one hundred and fifty miles of the Texas frontier. All along the Texas frontier and one hundred miles north of it the country is occupied by the Choctaw Nation and the Chickasaw Nation—nations that the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] said were so far civilized and so friendly that when fugitives from Texas escape to the Indian Territory these men surrender them, and when fugitive Indians from these tribes go into Texas, Texas surrenders them back. All along the Texas frontier they are located and for one hundred miles in the interior; so that we are not locating these Nez Percés near Texas.

The Creeks and Cherokees are toward Arkansas and Missouri, but removed from them and from the settled part of Kansas. The territory surrendered by the Cherokees was given to the Arapahoes and Cheyennes, and by order of the President they are now temporarily occupying a part of it. All this country has been paid for by the United States to the Cherokees and is now open for use. These five hundred Indians that we have on our hands must be located somewhere, and if they be settled where it is proposed to locate them they will be one hundred and fifty miles west of Arkansas and an equal distance from Missouri, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs assured me to-day when I spoke to him that the tribes there were not only willing to have them but desired them. I went and asked the question myself.

Mr. MERRIMON. Permit me to ask the Senator a question which I think is pertinent to the point under discussion. What is the special consideration for putting these Indians in the Indian Territory. Why not let them go back to where they belong?

Mr. BECK. I can answer that question in a few moments. These Nez Percés were formerly located there, [indicating on the map,] in the corner of Washington Territory. The Klamaths and they got into a quarrel. The quarrel deepened; they were semi-civilized; they had a reservation; they had their lands; they were working; they were allies of the United States; hostile Indians were allowed to depredate upon them and the United States failed to do them justice. They got into war, and in the midst of the war committed atrocities. The result has been that the people of that Territory have notified the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that if they are sent back there they will be murdered. He can put them into this Territory among friendly Indians, where no white man can go, where liquor is not allowed to be sold, where they can be guarded and protected; but they will be surely murdered if they are sent back to where they came from, and the Commissioner says it is horrid cruelty to send them back. They wanted to go back, but I understand since they have come to understand the condition of affairs that exist in their old neighborhood they are willing to go to the Indian Territory. That is the report that I get.

The climate of the reservation where it is proposed to put them is very much the same as that of their old home. So I am advised by the Commissioner. The isothermal line is all along here [indicating] running up toward the Pacific coast. When the Northern Indians come down here [indicating] it is injurious to their health; but those men coming from this region can be taken to the point where these Indians are to be put without any serious disadvantage.

Some time ago we had trouble with the Modocs and they were removed. Here is the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in regard to them. They were regarded as the most warlike and dangerous of all; and yet those Modocs have been settled near Missouri and Arkansas and have not only not committed outrage, but are as peaceable and industrious and are working as faithfully as any Indian will work. They are a pastoral people, and do not work like white men; but the report of the Commissioner shows that, out of one hundred and twelve, thirty are going to school, and no complaints are made on the part of the other Indians as to them.

I agree with the Senator from Kansas that when the Indian Territory was surrended in good faith to the civilized tribes it was to be theirs forever; and all the arguments of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] who was last up that they are in the way of civilization and that there is no transportation for railroads must not be heeded in this controversy, because he will observe that the railroad which he has spoken of runs through the Choctaw and Cherokee country and does not come within seventy-five miles of where it is proposed to put these Indians. Are the Creeks and Cherokees and Choctaws to be put out now because they do not furnish railroad transportation? The treaty obligations are valid and binding, and these Indian reservations ought never to be touched by the United States as long as good faith exists.

While the original rights of the Cherokees and Choctaws ran as far as the line here [indicating] in 1866 they were all surrendered except the reservation they now hold, which is laid off here, and which they hold by patent and under pledge that they shall never be disturbed, railroad or no railroad, transportation or no transportation, as long as there is justice in the United States Congress. But as to the rest of the country we have a right to place these Indians, such as these Nez Percés are described to be, instead of their being sent back to be butchered or to butcher other people, or being put where they cannot be protected or put among people who have given notice to the Department that they will murder them as soon as they get there because of the old Indian warfare in which they committed atrocities as semi-civilized men always will——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SARGENT. I hope the Senator will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. MERRIMON. I should like to have information on one point.

Mr. BECK. If I can give it, I will.

Mr. MERRIMON. First, are these Indians willing to go into the Indian Territory; and, second, are the Indians in the Indian Territory content that they shall go there?

Mr. BECK. The last question I can answer definitely, because the Commissioner of Indian Affairs this morning told me that the Indians in the Indian Territory were willing and desirous to have them there. The object of the Indians in the Indian Territory is to keep out white men, but they are willing to have these Indians among them.

As to the first question I can only say that the Commissioner said to me—I think I recollect it exactly—that while these Nez Percés preferred and were very anxious at one time to go back to their old neighborhood, yet now knowing what would happen they are willing to go to the Indian Territory. That is my recollection.

Mr. MAXEY. I would ask the Senator from Kentucky in what manner the Indians of the civilized tribes have manifested their willingness to receive them? The treaties point out how that shall be done.

Mr. BECK. I say to the Senator from Texas that I did not ask the Commissioner the form in which it was done or the willingness expressed. Perhaps it might be well to amend this clause to prescribe the form of consent.

Mr. SARGENT. The treaties cover that point.

Mr. MAXEY. They require it to be by the national council.

Mr. SARGENT. Then this legislation will not put them there.

Mr. BECK. I have said about all I desired to say. I took the pains this morning to go and make inquiry.

Mr. MERRIMON. I am willing to vote to put them there if they are willing to go and the Indians in the Indian Territory are willing to take them.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word in addition to what has been said by the Senator from Kentucky. The two very pertinent inquiries made by the Senator from North Carolina are both to be answered in the affirmative. In the first place, the treaties distinctly provide that the United States may place friendly Indians within the Indian Territory, so that the consent of these civilized tribes is not now required. But I understand, in addition to that, that they are willing and desirous that other tribes should come in there and occupy the Territory and fraternize with them. The treaties made between these Indians and the United States distinctly provide for other Indian tribes coming in there and for their participation in an Indian council, the expenses of which are paid by the United States.

So much for the permission of the Indian tribes. Now, with reference to this band of Nez Percés, I understand that they also are willing to go there. I understand that four of their principal chiefs have already gone from the Fort Leavenworth reservation, under the authority of the Government, to the camp of Sitting Bull, with a view of inducing the remainder of those hostile Nez Percés to join this band in the Indian Territory. In the Territory of Idaho in which these Indians rebelled, some fifty or sixty of them have been indicted, I understand, for murder under the laws of the Territory of Idaho. The murder can be proven clearly, of course, because it is perfectly notorious in that Territory that these murders were committed, and that portions of these hostile bands committed the murders under a sense of wrong on the part of the whites there. If these Indians return to their reservation or to the Territory of Idaho, they will be tried for those offenses unless pardoned by the President of the United States. Therefore, under the circumstances surrounding them, I understand it is their desire and wish to be located and settled in the Indian Territory. There are only about one hundred of these Indians that are adult males; the remainder are women and children. It is the intention of the Department of the Interior to place these Indians at some point on the reservation where they will be enabled to sustain and support themselves by grazing and agriculture. It is an experiment no doubt, but an experiment that has been successful in the Indian Territory, notably in the case cited by the Senator from Kentucky, of the Modocs.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator from Iowa if the United States Government has a right to settle any Indians within the Indian Territory, except civilized tribes, by any treaty?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand they have. Just what is a civilized tribe of Indians I would not say.

Mr. MAXEY. Article 15 reads:

> The United States may settle any civilized Indians, friendly with the Cherokees and adjacent tribes, within the Cherokee country, on unoccupied lands east of ninety-six degrees, on such terms as may be agreed upon by any such tribe and the Cherokees.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly, and it is not proposed to place these Indians within that region at all. That applies to that portion of the Cherokee country lying east of the ninety-sixth meridian. Of course these Cherokees do not desire that uncivilized Indians shall be placed in the Cherokee and Choctaw country proper, but they did provide by the sixteenth article of this same treaty, which the Senator did not read quite far enough to see, that friendly Indians may be located west of the ninety-sixth meridian upon the Cherokee lands. But the Cherokees do not own all the country west of the ninety-sixth meridian. The Seminoles, the Choctaws, and the Creeks own a portion of this Territory. The Seminoles, by a treaty made with the United States, parted with a portion of their lands absolutely to the United States in 1866; and the Chickasaws and Choctaws by a treaty made in 1855 leased to the United States over seven million acres of land west of the ninety-eighth meridian, and by a subsequent treaty made in 1866 the United States absolutely purchased those seven million acres, and we have as clear a title to it as we have to any other land belonging to the United States. Seven million acres west of the ninety-eighth meridian are now the absolute property of the United States. So with reference to the lands owned by the Cherokees west of the ninety-sixth meridian we have the right to purchase those lands from the Cherokee Nation upon such terms as may be agreed upon between the United States and the Cherokees, and in failure to make an agreement the President of the United States himself is to decide the price which the Government is to pay for those lands.

These Nez Percés may be placed on lands absolutely owned by the United States, not costing the Government a dollar. They may be placed upon the Cherokee lands west of the ninety-sixth meridian by paying for them a reasonable sum, and that sum has been agreed upon at various times at about fifty cents per acre. So that there is no difficulty in the way except a question of public policy. Is it a good policy for this Government to locate any more Indians in the Indian Territory?

I was pleased with the argument of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] in reference to this country, and I join hands with him in saying that I will with him endeavor by legislation to secure this country to the absolute control of the civilized Indian tribes. They left the most beautiful country that exists under the control of the United States, comprising the States now of Tennessee, of Georgia, of North Carolina, and of Alabama. Nearly the whole of those States belonged to the five civilized tribes now west of the Mississippi in the Indian Territory. When we induced them to leave those fertile fields which they were cultivating long before the independence of the United States was achieved, when we, by treaty stipulation, secured their removal from those fertile lands which they were cultivating and earning their own livelihood upon without any interference on the part of the United States, until the settlers reached out and undertook to seize their lands, when we placed them upon this reservation we said to them "You shall occupy this land as long as grass grows and water runs; you shall have an absolute, indefeasible title to this property," and I am for maintaining them in that title so far as we can in the future.

Mr. BECK. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the Commissioner says that while the Indian Territory contains about sixty-eight thousand square miles, there are only sixty thousand Indians upon it, being less than an Indian to a square mile.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course this Territory belongs to the five civilized tribes, and whatever rights we have acquired in the Territory we have acquired by treaty stipulations with them. In 1834 or 1835 we ceded to the Cherokees seven million acres of land in addition to the lands then occupied by them, and we said to the Cherokees that they should have all the land west of that country until it met the civilization of the United States westward. Under these provisions these tribes have control of all the land in the Indian Territory save and except that ceded by them by treaty stipulations with the Government of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, it is a question of policy for the Senate to decide whether or not this small band of Nez Percés shall be returned to the Territory of Idaho or to the State of Oregon, from whence they recently came, or whether we shall permit them to enjoy a small portion of this land in the Indian Territory.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. President, I dislike to differ with my friends of the Indian Committee upon a subject of this kind; nevertheless I do on this question. I look upon this subject as one of very great importance. Whatever course we pursue toward these Nez Percé Indians we should pursue toward all other Indians in the north. If it is proper to send them into the southern country and into the Indian Territory, then it will be proper to send the others also; and we might just as well settle the question now as at any other time; and it is very much better that we settle it now and save money to the Government, unless we intend to follow this up.

A year or two ago I would have taken the position that is taken by the majority of the Committee on Indian Affairs on this question; that is, that we should send all these Indians to the Indian Territory. I thought then it was probably the best thing that could be done; but I am now convinced, unless Senators wish to carry out the doctrine of the extermination of the Indian, that it would not be proper to send any more from the north into that country. The country is probably healthy enough for the people who live in it, but when men try to be acclimated in going down to that warmer country and more humid atmosphere they die off rapidly. Let me show you what effect it has had on the Indians that went even from my own State, which is further south than the Nez Percé Indians and many others that arrangements are about to be made with to send them south. The Pawnees, according to the report of 1875, numbered over twenty-two hundred; I have forgotten the exact number, but about twenty-two hundred and fifty, I think. Two years ago they were removed to the Indian Territory. The report in the Commissioner's office to-day shows that the number is only about fifteen hundred. Over 33 per cent. of them have died in twenty-four months, in other words, and we do not know the number that have died since that report was made. That is the fact as to the Pawnees.

Another tribe that went from our country, the Poncas, were taken only about twelve months ago into the Indian Territory, and a gentleman well informed on the subject told me yesterday that 20 per cent. of them were already dead. That is the effect it is having on the Indians that go from the North, from the dry atmosphere we have in the North into that humid atmosphere of the South. If the object is to exterminate the Indians, then let us send them there; but if we want to take care of them and treat them as wards properly, as we should, then in my opinion we should either put them on some of the smaller reservations of the North or make arrangements for larger ones, for there is a very large reservation for which arrangements could be made no doubt in the northern part of Dakota or Montana. There is the country on Bear River and on Milk River that would hold all the northern Indians without any trouble, and a very rich and fertile country it is, where they can raise all the small grains, particularly wheat, to very great advantage, and where for hunting purposes they would be much better off than they would be in the Indian Territory.

My opinion is that we must either leave these Indians on the small reservations and let the whites settle around them and finally train them up in civilization in that way, or we have got to have another large reservation for the Indians of the north. I have made up my mind fully on that subject, and I will therefore vote against sending these Nez Percé Indians down into the southern country. If they go of themselves, if they are willing to go, of course I shall say nothing against it. I believe an amendment has been suggested to require their consent. I almost know what the answer will be, that they will not be willing. I do not know that it is best to send them back to Idaho where this war commenced; but there are other reservations that are large enough to be divided up. The reservation that they had in Idaho Territory was more than they could ever cultivate; it was too large for them. There is another reservation in that Territory still larger, and there is a very large one in Oregon, where the Umatillas and the Walla-Wallas are now located. There is another very large reservation in Washington Territory. There are large reservations in Dakota and in Montana; so that there is plenty of room to be had for them in other places. If there were not, we might of necessity have to send them South; but I say, taking the observations and the facts and figures as we have them before us now, that I do not believe it will be good policy to send any more Indians from the north into the southern country, and, if we did, what should we be making out of it?

I am astonished when I come to learn what I have from being in some of these committees, to find how little they have progressed on this subject of civilization. Take the tribes that gentlemen are speaking about, the confederated tribes of the Indian Territory, the Cherokees, the Chickasaws, the Creeks, the Seminoles, and the Choctaws; what have they done? What progress have they made? They are here to-day asking for rights under treaties that are more than forty years old, showing how far back they date with their attempts at civilization; and yet to-day there is not, according to their own testimony, one in ten who wants to have a territorial form of government or to be represented as the white people are represented in this Government. There are only about one-third part of the grown persons, according to the best testimony we can get, that can talk our language. They do not want their land divided up into severalty. They do not want a territorial form of government. They want to be let alone, they say, in their tribal relations and live as a separate nation. That is the progress they have made in fifty years! If that is what they have done, who have been friendly, who have been taught our language, who have been educated many of them in our schools, then I say, if that is the success we have had with them, what hope have we with these who have no affinity for us or any of our arts or any of our improvements? I believe that the best way at present will be to let them alone in their own Territory, in their own reservations. Our people are surrounding them; they are friendly. In my State they are equally friendly and as civilized as the same number of whites are. Nobody objects to them. Their neighbors trade with them. They are visiting around through the country there. There is no more fear of Indians with us than there would be of the same number of whites. Then so far as most of the tribes are concerned, I shall oppose hereafter the sending of any more of them south unless they express by some act of theirs that they want to go.

On that account, without taking any further time, I shall vote against sending these Indians down there unless they themselves express their willingness and anxiety to go. I shall seek for them somewhere else a place where there is room; and I know there is a disposition on the part of the committee to take care of these Indians as best we can. We are all aiming at the same thing, which is to do the best we can for the Indians, and I am convinced from observations that have come before me that it is not the best thing to send them to a country that they know not of, to a climate that they have never lived in, and a place that has proved for others a burial almost as fast as they got there.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senate I would like to add to the observations I made a few moments ago, when cut off by the operation of the ten-minute rule, the following: I did not intend to be understood as desiring to deprive the Indians of their land in the Indian Territory. On the contrary, from examination of their treaties with the United States, I believe that they have a perfect legal and equitable title to their lands; I believe that they should be maintained in the enjoyment and possession of their lands. But I do believe, Mr. President, that the position taken by some Senators that these tribes are independent nations is erroneous. I believe that these Indian tribes are as much under the jurisdiction of the United States as the inhabitants of any other Territory in the United States. Whenever the question has been before the Supreme Court they have so declared. Whenever Congress has exercised authority over those tribes—and it has done so in numerous instances—the Supreme Court of the United States have always maintained that being the political authority, the action of Congress must be sustained. In the Cherokee tobacco case, 11 Wallace, the question is squarely met. In that case the Supreme Court lay down the law as follows:

In the Cherokee Nation vs. Georgia, Chief-Justice Marshall, delivering the opinion of this court, said: "The Indian Territory is admitted to compose a part of the United States. In all our geographical treatises, histories, and laws it is so considered." In the United States vs. Rogers, Chief-Justice Taney, also speaking for the court, held this language: "It is our duty to expound and execute the law as we find it, and we think it too firmly and clearly established to admit of dispute that the Indian tribes residing within the territorial limits of the United States are subject to their authority, and where the country occupied by them is not within the limits of one of the States Congress may, by law, punish any offense committed there, no matter whether the offender be a white man or an Indian." Both these propositions are so well settled in our jurisprudence that it would be a waste of time to discuss them or to refer to further authorities in their support. There is a long and unbroken current of legislation and adjudications, in accordance with them, and we are aware of nothing in conflict with either. The subject, in its historical aspect, was fully examined in Johnson vs. McIntosh. In the eleventh section of the act of the 24th of June, 1812, it was provided "that it shall be lawful for any person or persons to whom letters testamentary or of administration shall have been or may hereafter be granted by the proper authority in any of the United States or the Territories thereof to maintain any suit," &c. In Mackey vs. Coke it was held that the Cherokee country was a territory of the United States, within the meaning of this act.—11 Wallace, 619.

I simply propose to assert the proposition in the remarks submitted awhile ago, without arguing it, that this Indian Territory is under the jurisdiction of the United States and of Congress as fully as any Territory within the United States; but I say at the same time that treaty obligations require the United States to maintain the title of these Indians to their lands. I concur with my colleague and with the Senator from Kentucky in that regard.

But with reference to another proposition they lay down, I cannot agree with them. I do not believe that public policy or treaty obligation requires the United States to maintain the Indian Territory in a condition of waste, in a condition in which it can add nothing to the wealth of the country, and especially in a condition where it must be a serious drawback to three or four States of the Union on account of its non-productiveness and the character of its population. I hold that the United States Government is compelled by no treaty obligation to do this, and, whenever public policy shall dictate, that the Government has a right to take such steps as while maintaining the absolute title of the Indians to their lands at the same time will throw open the Territory for general settlement. That is all I intended by the proposition asserted in my first remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.]

Mr. DORSEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SARGENT. Before the question is taken by yeas and nays I wish to say a few words. It may be a question of policy much insisted upon by the Senators whose States border the Indian Territory whether the original dedication of that Territory for Indian purposes shall be maintained or there shall be a new departure of policy; whether, as says one of the Senators from Texas, the railroads shall be allowed to go there and realize their land grants and open up communication between parts separated by that country or whether they shall be prohibited from doing so. It may be a question of policy, but there certainly can be no policy urged in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. DORSEY. Will the Senator allow me to state that I have not an amendment pending?

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that the pending amendment be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 772 and 773 it is proposed to strike out the words "Indian Territory" and insert "Territory of Idaho."

Mr. DORSEY. That is the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.]

Mr. SARGENT. Nevertheless it is the amendment in effect, as my friend knows, (although it may not be on the record,) of the Senator from Arkansas. I am speaking to the fact and not to the form. I say there is nothing in the way of policy to recommend this amendment. You may say that if the Government will not persist in its policy of settling Indians in the Indian Territory that it shall take care of those Indians. Very well; then take care of them at Fort Leavenworth where they now are. It may cost considerable money, but what of that in comparison with the interests of harmony in the Territories, the lives of the white settlers or the lives of these Indians and their families if they depend upon it. It has been suggested on this floor—and cannot be disputed—for it is a fact, that if these Indians return to Idaho Territory they will necessarily lose their lives and in the experiment of taking their lives perhaps the lives of white men will be lost also. But why send them back where they go to inevitable persecution? Is that the way to treat them? Is that a humane settlement of the question?

Mr. DORSEY. If the Senator is appealing to me——

Mr. SARGENT. No; I am not.

Mr. DORSEY. I presume that in the Territory of Idaho, from where these Indians came, there is country enough outside of the little reservation which they formerly occupied to provide them with proper homes, where they would slaughter nobody and would not be slaughtered themselves. It seems to me, if the Senator will allow me, that it is about the worst argument which could be urged here as a reason why the Indians should go to the Indian Territory because they are going to kill anybody.

Mr. SARGENT. There is not a foot of land in Idaho that the Senator can say will be open to the peaceful occupation of these Indians for two years to come.

Mr. DORSEY. Why?

Mr. SARGENT. For the same reason that there was none in the Black Hills, the most inaccessible point of the North American continent, where the Indians were peaceably living. Partly by the miscalculated action of the Government of the United States and partly by an irresistible tide of immigration, gold-seekers and other settlers rushed in and ousted them from their possessions. The result was a long and expensive Indian war. The result of it was great injustice to the Indians. The result of it was the writing of a chapter of our history which is shameful. So it is with regard to Idaho or any other Territory of the United States. There is only that little spot of land called the Indian Territory dedicated for Indian purposes where the white man cannot go. The Indians were rooted out of Kansas since the time that I have been in Congress by just this same immigration——

Mr. DORSEY. I should like to have the Senator state in what respect the Indian Territory is dedicated to the Indians any more than the Indian reservation in Idaho is dedicated to these Indians, on which he says the white people go.

Mr. SARGENT. The difference is just this, that in Idaho Territory settlers can go at will all over it, and approach the reservation with their settlements, and the white man, with such opportunity, gets to encroach upon the Indians there. There is a fertile valley, perhaps, which runs through a reservation, and the white man extends his stakes one after another until he gets in on the reservation and eventually crowds the Indians out, or the Indian, feeling the injustice, burns down the settler's house, and he shoots at the Indian, and the Indian shoots at him, and an Indian war occurs. But in the Indian Territory the reservation is inside a boundary that the white man has no legal right to cross. He violates the law if he goes across the line at all. It is not a mere tempting line of a reservation, but the boundary of a Territory. Therefore the Government can protect the Indians who go there, and there is nothing assailing the occupation by the Indians of the Indian Territory except the cupidity of certain railroad corporations and the influences which they can bring to bear on the minds of members of Congress.

Mr. DORSEY. I think the statement of the Senator from California is entirely gratuitous. I think the railroad corporations of the Indian Territory have no more to do with influencing members of Congress than the railroad corporations of the Pacific coast have to do with influencing the members of Congress from that region. I think it is entirely gratuitous.

Mr. SARGENT. When in argument this very day it has been urged upon this floor that this Indian Territory, occupied by the Indians, is in the way of railroad communication, I have a right to say that such suggestions come in the interest of railroad corporations.

Mr. DORSEY. The Senator has no right to say that the railroad corporations seem to exercise influence upon members of Congress in respect to this question. He has no right to say that, because it is not true.

Mr. SARGENT. I speak of facts that come to my observation. I say the railroad companies have for years been trying, in one form and in another, to get possession of this land. They came here originally and got grants of land in the Indian Territory and got a promise on the part of the United States to extinguish the title to these Indian lands, and when Congress extinguishes the title they will have the grants of land. The railroad companies since that time have tried by every possible device to effect the extinguishment of that title. They have set up all sorts of schemes for the government of the Territory. As I said yesterday, if some government should be organized among the Indians that would look favorably upon the proposition to let the white people in, it would be the method of enabling these railroad companies to get these tracts of lands. I am speaking of the question pending in Congress, which has been urged upon Congress, and naturally, reasonably, justly, I do not say unfairly or improperly, influencing the minds of Senators. That is a large portion of the pressure which accounts for this hostility to the settlement of the Indians in the Indian Territory. The more Indians that are settled there the more difficult it will be to extinguish their rights and move them elsewhere. It has been said in this debate that this Territory is sparsely settled, and that is urged as a reason why the whites should be allowed to go in there. Am I to close my eyes to the tendency of these things, and not refer to the great interest that lies behind all these movements in opposition to the present policy of the Government?

The Indians in the Indian Territory are peaceable. We sent the Modocs there; we sent the Kiowas and Comanches there. The Comanches were the red devils of the plains whose sway spread from the Sioux territory into Texas, but when they were put into the Indian Territory they became peaceable and quiet. They were guarded and cared for, and protected themselves from aggressions, and during the last five or six years there have been no aggressions from these wild tribes at all. The Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] says they are so law-abiding and have so much regard for law that when criminals from Texas escape into their borders the Indians deliver them up and that they deliver up the criminals which escape from the Indians to them.

Mr. DORSEY. The Senator from Texas did not say that at all. The Senator from Texas said nothing of the sort. He said that was true of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and the civilized tribes in the Indian Territory, but not of the Comanches. The Senator shows furthermore that he does not understand the history of these Indians at all when he states that the Comanches were removed to the Indian Territory. The Comanches have lived there from time immemorial, and they have not been removed from the plains.

Mr. SARGENT. I take back not one word that I have said, and I am not at all instructed by the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas. These Indian questions are not new to me. I simply reiterate, exactly knowing the basis of the remarks which I have made, and that is to say that these Kiowas and Comanches who roamed along through the whole country being put upon an express and limited reservation of the Indian Territory have been peaceable ever since. Before that time they were called the red devils of the plains and were the most dangerous and deadly enemies of the white settlers of the West.

Mr. DORSEY. They were not located there, but have always occupied that Territory.

Mr. SARGENT. A part of them had a sort of roaming title to lands covered by a piece of the Indian Territory, but the fact is that they were segregated on a reservation and protection given them and it has changed their character. What has changed the character of these very Indians who are called civilized tribes? Simply by being put in the Indian Territory and the white man being kept out with his whisky and the missionaries allowed to go among them, and the Government fostering schools among them. A larger proportionate number of their children are now attending schools than are children in the State of the Senator who interrupts me, and with most beneficial results; so that when the census of illiteracy shall be taken it will not be to the disadvantage of the civilized tribes, as they are called, of the Indian Territory.

Here is a piece of fertile land which is most earnestly coveted by others who are adverse in interest to the Indians. They want to get at the land. They do not like to have that barrier, as they call it, between the various States. There is no justice in their claim, because public faith is pledged that the Indians shall have the land. When the Indians were removed from Mississippi, and Alabama, and Georgia, and everywhere else, and placed far out beyond the then bounds of civilization, in the Indian Territory, it was marked out for them. The experiment has been a great success. The question pending here to-day is not whether three or four Indian tribes shall be put in the same condition with a right to better their lot in life, to have education for their children, to become decent members of the American States. That is not the mere question, but the question is whether the Indian experiment with all its civilization shall fall and go down before the cupidity, and I will say it again, of certain railroad corporations who want to seize upon this territory. I insist that the momentous question is, whether we are to pursue the humane and peaceful policy of the past or whether we are to abandon it, and abandoning it to root out the rights of the Cherokees and the Creeks as well.

Mr. DORSEY. I should like to ask the Senator from California a question. Is there any proposition here to send these Indians to the section of country where the railroad companies now claim that they have a title? I ask if it is not already occupied by these Indians, and if the question of railroad lands is not entirely independent and outside of that?

Mr. SARGENT. The whole question of the Indian Territory hangs together. If you can seize one part of it you can seize the rest. It is simply an entering-wedge——

Mr. DORSEY. Who is proposing to seize it? Is not the Senator from California proposing to take it for these Indians?

Mr. SARGENT. We propose to give them a home and to maintain them there.

Mr. DORSEY. What more right have you to do that than to seize upon it for the railroads?

Mr. SARGENT. Because there are seventeen million acres of unappropriated lands there under the treaties granted by the United States for this very purpose.

Mr. DORSEY. Yesterday the Senator from California said there was not an acre there that did not belong to the civilized tribes.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator is mistaken. I did not say a word of it.

Mr. DORSEY. Now the Senator says there are seventeen million acres there.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator misrepresents me. My remarks of yesterday can be referred to. That was the position of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SARGENT. On account of interruptions I ask a moment more; I said yesterday that every foot of the Indian Territory was dedicated for the purpose which I described yesterday, and to-day I referred again to it, and the Government of the United States have no right to dedicate a foot of it for any other purposes. I now say, on being informed thereof by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose letter has been read at the desk, that there are nearly seventeen million acres that are unappropriated for this purpose, and which can be used for this purpose, and that the experiment of putting the wild tribes in the Indian Territory has been a success, as in the instance of the Modocs, the desperadoes of the lava-beds, a large number of whose children are now, in proportion to the whole number, attending school, and they have settled down into peaceful pursuits. They have vindicated the fact that they possess not merely bravery but humanity and industry. I want the same system extended. The last hope of its being extended is by voting down this proposition, because it is a test that is now being forced upon us. The whole system has got to be abandoned unless the bill as reported is insisted upon. The Senator from Texas says that these Indians would be dangerous neighbors on the border line of Texas. On the contrary there are some seventy-five or eighty miles of intervening civilized tribes between these Indians and Texas. The trouble from Texas, as I say again, has not risen from the occupants of the Indian Territory. It has arisen from the Kickapoos, who came over from the borders of Mexico and who have been floating backward and forward between Texas and Mexico, and floating up around the edge of the Indian Territory, and sometimes perhaps other Indians like the Kickapoos make a short cut across the Indian Territory, but have no local habitation or place there.

Mr. MAXEY. Does the Senator know how far it is from the Fort Sill reservation to the Texas line? That is the territory I spoke of.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator can inform me.

Mr. MAXEY. Not exceeding forty or fifty miles.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well; that is a good belt of country.

Mr. MAXEY. That is close enough to endanger our people.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. President——

Mr. SARGENT. I will say to the Senator from Texas——

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. President, I should like to say a word.

Mr. SARGENT. I think I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has the floor, but is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. DORSEY. I object to the Senator from California proceeding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. SARGENT. Then I shall take my seat.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why?

Mr. SARGENT. Because I would not allow the Senator from Arkansas to interrupt me while I was answering a question of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who has the floor?

Mr. SARGENT. I had the floor for the purpose of speaking to the question when the Senator from Arkansas interposed an objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope no Senator on a question of this kind will object to the Senator from California continuing his remarks.

Mr. DORSEY. I asked the Senator from California the privilege of saying a word. He has been talking nearly twenty minutes. He declined to yield to me; therefore I object to his further proceeding with his remarks.

Mr. SARGENT. I am glad not to be indebted for the privilege of proceeding to the courtesy of the Senator from Arkansas, which I find so scant, although I have frequently yielded to him. I was endeavoring to reply to the Senator from Texas when the Senator from Arkansas insisted on at once asking a further question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that this bill be indefinitely postponed; and on that question I think the Senator from California can finish what he has to say.

Mr. SARGENT. I was saying, in reply to my friend from Texas, that there is a good belt of country between the Indians and the Texas border.

Mr. MAXEY. I hope from the remarks just made that the Senator from California will not suppose that I had any possible object in consuming his time.

Mr. SARGENT. Not at all.

Mr. MAXEY. I did so merely with a view of giving the fact.

Mr. SARGENT. Certainly; and I never object to reasonable interruptions. There are civilized tribes and a broad belt of territory—a sufficient cushion—between any blow that could be struck by this little, feeble band of Indians at the people of Texas. There are, I understand, only one hundred of this band who are warriors, and there are two or three hundred women and children. These poor beings are now living in their lodges upon the reservation at Leavenworth at very considerable expense to the Government, and they certainly cannot be a terror to the people of Texas.

Mr. MAXEY. But it would establish a precedent for the removal of other tribes.

Mr. SARGENT. No, it would not be a precedent. The precedent was set within a year or so in the very case of the Modocs, who were removed into that Territory, and who since that time have done themselves great credit and have done great credit to the experiment which the Government has entered upon. Now we propose to take these poor creatures, who were driven by hardships, by a violation of their treaties, as was eloquently stated by the Senator from Colorado, away from their homes, away from the place where they thought they had a foothold, and by our encroaching settlements, by the merciless system of our settlers, not merciless in design but in effect—they were driven away from Idaho with a price set on their heads, with indictments found against them in that Territory for murders committed under whatever provocation, visited with a threat that if they returned they should all be exterminated, and that the people would not tolerate them there, and there is no home there for them.

I ask why should we not do this for this poor, little, feeble band that we are under obligation to take care of, because they are the captives of our bow and spear? We have taken them in war. We have carried them down to Fort Leavenworth. They are in our hands to do with them what we will. Why should the great State of Texas say that these men, separated from their frontier by forty miles, shall not have leave to settle in that Territory and make their little farms there and raise their cattle and do as the Modocs have done, who were more murderous than they, less humane than they, for the Joseph band never were treacherous? I say, why shall they not have this opportunity? If I did not think that this was a test question involving the whole question of maintaining the integrity of the Indian Territory I would not speak so earnestly and so persistently in favor of the bill as reported from the committee. When we have it on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, with all the light we can have shed upon it in favor of the experiment, it certainly can do no harm.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from California allow me to ask him what he has to say in response to the observations of the Senator from Texas that in this Indian Territory the United States are not the exclusive proprietors of the land, and therefore that the sending of these Indians is an imposition upon those who have the control of the title?

Mr. SARGENT. The Indians having the original control of the title by treaties made subsequent to its acquisition, agreed with the United States that all lands west of the ninety-sixth meridian should be under the control of the Government of the United States for the purpose of settling friendly Indians upon them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is that provision?

Mr. SARGENT. It is in the treaty. It has been cited in the debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to look at it.

Mr. SARGENT. I think there are several treaties: one with the Creeks, one with the Cherokees, &c., but that is the provision of the treaty. It may be that the Government of the United States, under that provision would be required to pay for these lands a certain price. That is very likely. In the scale of mercy that would not weigh. It would be certainly cheaper to buy this land under the provision of the treaty and to settle these people upon it than to incur the blood and cost of another war. The dearest way to settle the Indian question is by exterminating Indians.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But this statute does not provide for buying it. What I want to get at is whether we are under any obligation.

Mr. SARGENT. Of course if the Government is under obligation to pay for these lands it should pay the price. It has a right to settle these Indians upon the land by virtue of these treaties, and can pay whenever it ascertains the amount due. I say again, I believe that this is a test question involving the whole matter. I really trust that the committee will be sustained upon it; but certainly if the committee are not to be sustained let us not send these men to Idaho, where we send them into the jaws of a certain death. Let them rather remain at Leavenworth and let the Government maintain them there and furnish them with rations, or let us send them anywhere but to the country which is so hostile to them.

Mr. TELLER. If I believed, as stated by the Senator from California, that this was a test question whether the Indian Territory should be set apart and occupied by Indian tribes, I would vote against the amendment which I have offered; but I do not believe that is the true view of this question. I shall vote for the amendment for the reason that I know it is contrary to the dictates of humanity to force these people upon that ground without their consent. As to the railroad companies, it is not possible that any railroad company can have any interest in that matter at all. It is not proposed to put any of these Indians on the lands that the railroad companies claim or in that vicinity. The proposition can only be sustained upon the theory that it is in pursuance of a principle which we have already established by the removal of the Modocs and by the removal of the Poncas, that we have a right to remove this tribe to that section of country.

I shall vote for the amendment because I believe that these people ought to be returned to their homes, and not because I have any objection to putting Indians into the Indian Territory who go there with their consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to postpone indefinitely being withdrawn, the question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, on which question the yeas and nays have been demanded.

Mr. DORSEY. I withdraw my call for the yeas and nays. I will reserve this amendment when we get into the Senate. I shall call for the yeas and nays on the amendment in the Senate, we being now in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the demand for the yeas and nays will be withdrawn and the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not agree to the amendment, for one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 722 and 723 it is proposed to strike out "Indian Territory" and insert "Territory of Idaho."

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish it understood that I object to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAXEY. I renew my amendment to strike out, commencing in line 767 to line 782, inclusive, the following words:

NEZ PERCÉS OF JOSEPH'S BAND.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the removal of the Nez Percé Indians of Joseph's band, now held as prisoners of war at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, to a suitable location in the Indian Territory, and for their settlement thereon, and for clothing, subsistence, and such other articles as may be required for their advancement in civilization, including the employment of such skilled labor as may be necessary to aid in teaching them civilized pursuits with a view to their future self-support, the sum of $20,000: Provided, That such amount of the above sum as may be necessary for said removal and for subsistence for remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, may be immediately available.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. MAXEY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the clause proposed to be stricken out, in line 772, before the word "suitable" by striking out "a" and inserting after the word "Territory" which ends in that line the words "as the United States have a right to use for such purpose consistently with existing treaties or arrangements with the tribes occupying the Indian Territory," so as to keep us on that part of the Territory that we are entitled to occupy. I presume the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs will have no objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. Not the slightest. It only makes clear and definite by legislation what is proposed to be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. ALLISON. There is no objection to that. That is a very good amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Texas, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer an amendment to the clause. After the word "available," in line 782, I move to insert:

And provided further, That the consent of such band be first obtained.

I desire to make their removal contingent on their consent.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit to the Senator from Colorado that while I do not think there would be any special objection to that amendment, these Indians are now prisoners of war and they are held under the military authority of the Government of the United States. I do not see exactly how their consent can be obtained.

Mr. BECK. They are under duress.

Mr. ALLISON. They are under restraint absolutely.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. And at much expense, too.

Mr. ALLISON. They might say, "We prefer to remain here at the Fort Leavenworth reservation and be fed by the military authorities."

Mr. TELLER. I would inquire of the Senator if the war is not over with these Indians?

Mr. ALLISON. We shall not be captious about that matter. I do not think that is a very important question to ask.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It might be important to the rights of these people who are to be extradited.

Mr. ALLISON. They are under the authority of the Government; they are fed by the Army, and are on our hands. I have no other desire than the Senator has. If he thinks the amendment suggested is important I shall not object to it.

Mr. TELLER. I do. I think it is important, to the credit of the United States if nothing else, that these Indians should not be put there unless they consent to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Suppose they want to go somewhere else; what then?

Mr. TELLER. I have not much doubt but what they will be compelled to consent, but we shall at least go through the form and have the credit of saying when somebody points his finger at us, as I trust he may, for this legislation, that they consented.

Mr. SARGENT. Suppose the Modocs had objected and said they wanted to go back to the lava-beds, would it have been to their interest to let them go back; or were we under any obligation, after capturing them, to put them back there? It seems to me it is putting an impossible condition. It is unquestionably for the interest of these Indians that they should be settled upon a pleasant tract of that fertile country and there given school facilities. We are their guardians and they are our wards, and we should exercise our authority for their good. They may have a prejudice against going to that place, and it would be unwise if they were allowed to exercise their option. My impression is that they are satisfied to go there; and I am fully convinced that it is to their interest to do so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The observations of the Senator from California have certainly great force in the way he puts them, as his observations always have; but this bill treats these persons as prisoners of war and not as the wards of the United States the Government being their guardians. If under existing law the United States are the guardians of this particular band of Indians or part of a band held at Fort Leavenworth, if we are their lawful guardians, of course it is perfectly right to provide in our discretion a proper place for them to be, and to stay, and to be educated, and to work, and to behave themselves. On that ground, of course, if the Senator is right in his premises, there is no answer to it so far as I see; for aught I know this is a good place; but taking the bill as it comes to us and as the committee have reported it, these Indians do not stand in the attitude of wards, or we in the attitude of guardians; they stand as prisoners in our hands by force of the exertion of the military authority of war.

Mr. SARGENT. That is an adventitious addition to the fact.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know, and I only take it as it is stated in the case. If the bill is to go as saying that these people are prisoners of war, and if it appears from the inquiry of the Senator from Colorado that the war in which they were made prisoners has terminated, then I respectfully submit to the Senator from Colorado that even as to Indians it is not altogether consistent with the principles of civilization to insist upon holding a prisoner of war as such after the war is over. That would hardly do. If the war with this band of Indians is over, then their restraint on this particular military reservation out of the country to which they properly belong, as I suppose the Fort Leavenworth reservation is, as a matter of course is entirely contrary to the principles of civil law, or of military law, or of international law, I am sure my friend will agree to that.

Mr. SARGENT. If the Senator will allow me to make one observation, I will state that our whole system of Indian reservation is contrary to the ordinary principles of law. We set aside in a certain manner a reservation and collect all the Indians upon it, and really do not ask their leave to go there; it is a necessity of the situation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I think the Senator states that, according to my recollection, a little too broadly. According to my recollection whatever the fact may be, the paper will show, that in all these instances the tribe of Indians has engaged to part with a portion of its land to the United States and to reserve another part and to live upon that.

Mr. SARGENT. That is true as to one class, but not as to the class to which this proposition relates.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be. Then as to that class, we compel them to stay upon the reservation that they have agreed to occupy in exactly the way that we compel other public factions, nations as we call them, to conform to their arrangements with the United States. There is not any court that we can do it in, and we do it therefore by moral and physical force, by persuasion and argument, if that will answer, and if it will not then by the ultima ratio regum. That is the way we do it. Therefore compelling an Indian to stay on a reservation that his tribe has agreed he shall stay upon, is the exertion of a correct power, a necessary power, and one that is not obnoxious to any principle of international justice. But the bill says that these people are prisoners of war. The Senator in charge of the bill states, if I understand him, that the war is over. As prisoners of war, it will not do to say that they can be sent to the Indian Territory or anywhere else unless they agree to it.

If they stand in the attitude of wards, then let the bill say so and provide that Congress in the exercise of its guardianship over these Indians thinks it fit to send them to this Territory. But whether wards or not, depends not on the fact that their color is red and that their hair is black and straight; it depends upon what they as a nation or band, having a separate autonomy, have agreed shall be done, as it seems to me. Therefore as a matter of justice and humanity the bill ought to be put upon some solid ground, as it strikes me.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the Senator from Vermont is in error in his statement of the principle of law applicable to this case. Where a war is over by a treaty of peace with an existing nation, it may be that all prisoners of that war are set at liberty. Where the only termination of a war consists in the capture of the entire hostile nation or band, without any treaty of peace or surrender, certainly it is no violation of the law of nations to take that captured band, transport them to a particular place in our country where they are to be clothed and provided for and found with homes, and there set them at liberty. It seems to me, therefore, that the right of the United States to treat and deal with these Indians as prisoners is perfect under the particular circumstances, and the principle which the Senator from Vermont states about the termination of a war is not at all applicable to such a termination of a war as this.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then my statement was correct as to the principle, but the application of it was wrong, which is a little different from the character that my honorable friend gave it when he opened that part of the discussion. That may be perfectly correct; but I take it it would be open to a little question. If the United States were to invade Canada, if that were possible, (of course Canada is so much stronger than we are that that is totally out of the question, and therefore the illustration will not offend anybody,) and capture the whole body of British subjects then and there present and being, it would hardly be said to be according to the modern law of nations a fit thing for the United States to do to carry all the Canadians and British subjects down to the Indian Territory and coop them up there forevermore at the pleasure of Congress. That would not do in a case of conquest of that kind where the opposing force is entirely overthrown. Then the duty of peace comes in, I respectfully submit, and as incident to that conquest you may levy exactions upon the people where they are; but to banish them to some distant part of the earth is, according to my observation and study of the modern law of nations, not a sound proposition. Of course, a thousand years ago, and perhaps much less than that, my honorable friend could find statements in the law-writers upon that subject, that you could put them all to death, that you could throw them into the sea, that you could do the very thing he suggests, of extraditing them to some distant country and leave them to either feed or starve, as the case might be, or keep them in perpetual subjection, slavery—because slavery does not necessarily imply that the slave is to work; slavery is a constant deprivation of liberty by the judgment of law, as we all understand. Therefore it appears to me that we could hardly stand upon the theory of sending this whole tribe, this nation, as you may call it, in the eye of the law, away from the country where we conquered them to a distant country and hold them in durance there; but I may be mistaken.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, I have about got the consent of my judgment to vote against striking out so much of the bill as provides for the removal of these Indians to the Indian Territory. First, I understand that the Indians are semi-civilized, they are not savage; secondly, that the Government has the right under treaties with the Indians in the Indian Territory to occupy certain parts of that Territory upon which these Indians may be placed, and that without expense to the United States; in the next place, that these Indians are willing to go there, and probably that the Indians who live in the Indian Territory are willing that they shall go there. These Indians are now prisoners of war. They are in the custody of the Government through its Army. They must be disposed of in some way. They are fed at a very large expense, and that is to continue until some disposition is made of them.

If these facts are true, and I understand from members of the committee that they are true, I do not see any better disposition that can be made of them than to send them to that place, and probably it would be doing them a great blessing. It brings them nearer to a complete civilization, and then it may save their lives, for we are told that if they go back to where they were captured they will certainly be killed there.

Upon these grounds, I shall vote against striking out the provisions in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "available" in line 782, at the end of the clause, it is proposed to insert:

And provided further, That the consent of such band be first obtained.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 16, noes 19; no quorum voting.

Mr. TELLER. I call for the yeas and nays. There is a quorum here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY,] to strike out the paragraph, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 27; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Osages," at the end of line 820 of section 1, to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may authorize the expenditure of a sum not exceeding $10,000 of the principal of said fund, to be used in the erection of houses, on application of any head of a family, such application being approved by the Indian council of the Osage Nation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call the attention of my honorable friend from Iowa to the fact that the committee put this in the form of a proviso to the appropriation. I suggest to him that probably it would be construed the same to merely strike out the word "provided" and make a period and say "and." It is not in the nature of a proviso to the appropriation at all; it is a direct grant of so much money.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, this modification of the amendment will be made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and continued till he reached the following paragraph in the appropriations for the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi:

For interest on $800,000, at 5 per cent., per second article of treaty of October 11, 1842, $40,000: Provided, That the sum of $1,500 of this amount shall be used for the pay of a physician and for purchase of medicine, and the further sum of $1,000 for the support of a school and farmer for the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi at the agency in Iowa; in all $51,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether the proviso just read is consistent with the treaty?

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is entirely consistent with the treaty. I understand it to be the policy of the Indian Bureau to remove at the earliest practicable moment the Sacs and Foxes that are now in Iowa to the Indian Territory, where the others are, with their consent, of course; not without.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but I wish for one to keep our promise, and not by sheer force of power to break treaties. My inquiry was directed to the existing condition of things appearing in this proviso, that the sum of $1,500 to be paid under the treaty shall be used for the pay of a physician and for the purchase of medicine, and another sum of $1,000 for a school. If the treaty requires us to pay over this money for the use of the Indians according to their discretion, it is not right to exercise our discretion to direct the uses to which it shall be applied, however good the uses may be. I presume from the fact that it is in the bill and from what the Senator has said, that the treaty authorizes the exercise of such a discretion. If it does not, I submit, not with great confidence but I submit, it would be well enough to follow the treaty.

Mr. INGALLS. I understand that the treaty between the United States and these Indians expressly requires that they shall abide in the Indian Territory, and that no member of the tribe shall be entitled to any annuity or assistance unless they are so located and dwelling; but that in violation of the provisions of this treaty a certain proportion of these Indians have remained in the State of Iowa, where they now are located, and that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in violation of treaty stipulation, has divided the funds that belong to these Indians and paid a certain proportion to those remaining in Iowa and the balance to those in the Indian Territory. I am very clear in my convictions that this provision of the bill is in violation of the treaty and of the law under which these Indians are located in the Indian Territory. I do not believe that we have any right to appropriate any portion of the money that is due to the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi to that portion of the tribe which remains at the present time in Iowa. I am convinced that the Department ought to require the consolidation of these scattered bands of Sacs and Foxes in the Indian Territory, and that they should there receive their annuities and compensation as stipulated in the treaty.

I would add that there is a certain proportion of these Indians in a sort of wandering and nomadic condition in the State of Kansas at this time. It is the desire of the inhabitants of that State, and particularly of that portion where these Indians are at this time roaming and wandering, that they should be assigned to their proper location in the Indian Territory.

I hope that the Senator having charge of the bill will assent to an amendment to this clause providing that none of this money shall be paid to these Indians except in accordance with the provision of the treaty made with them.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to such an amendment, of course, if that is the treaty. I cannot lay my hand on the treaty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Here it is.

Mr. ALLISON. Has the Senator the treaty of 1842?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes. It is article 2. I do not see that article 2 provides for making any discount or reservation out of this interest, or for applying it to special uses. The treaty appears from a hasty reading to require the money to be paid over to the Indians; but it is only a hasty perusal of the article that I have made.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. While my colleague is looking over the treaty I merely desire to say that these Indians have been for a long time in our State. For some years past, I do not known how many years, they have been receiving a portion of the annuity going to the tribe. Whether it was done by act of Congress or by the direction of the Interior Department, I do not know; but for several years last past payments have been made to them and an agent has been acting for them in Iowa. Of course if it is in violation of the treaty it ought not to be continued. These people own land in Iowa to farm, and they are doing reasonably well there. If their condition would be improved by having them removed from the State they should be removed. I do not know but that they have been receiving for some years past a portion of this money.

Mr. ALLISON. They have been receiving it for a great number of years. I have no objection to an amendment that is suggested to me by the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT,] to add, in line 972, after "pr vided that" the words "with the consent of said Indians."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will do. The other point to which allusion has been made does not arise under this provision. It is an appropriation under the treaty for the whole tribe, and if the tribe has been divided up into separate factions or bands, of course it belongs to the Executive Department justly to ascertain in what manner the money ought to be paid. I should not think there would be much difficulty about that.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert "with the consent of said Indians;" so as to read:

Provided, That, with the consent of said Indians, the sum of $1,500 of this amount shall be used for the pay of a physician and for purchase of medicine.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is entirely right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill to the end of line 1023 of section 1.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa whether the words in parenthesis in lines 1018 and 1019 are in the treaty with the Seneca Indians? This provides for a certain expenditure for their wants and for improvements in agriculture as their chiefs may designate, and in parenthesis is inserted "(with the consent of their agent)"; which means with the consent of the United States. If that is not in the treaty, of course it makes an entire difference. The fact of its being in parenthesis led me to make the inquiry. Had it not been in parenthesis I should take it to be as per the treaty.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt it is in the treaty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We will look it up. Go ahead.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from California is looking at that treaty.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I take it there will be no objection to passing this informally and going on with the reading of the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I find in the treaty the words "with the consent of their agent," though not in brackets as they are in the bill.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska," in line 1152 of section 1, after the word "Interior," to strike out "at $10 per head," and in line 1153, after the word "persons," to strike out the word "roaming;" so as to read:

For ninth of thirty installments, to purchase such articles as may be considered proper by the Secretary of the Interior, for twenty-one thousand persons, $210,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "treaty," in line 1157 of section 1, to strike out "pay of additional employés at the several agencies for the Sioux in Nebraska and Dakota, and for industrial school at the Santee Sioux agency, fifty-five thousand," and insert "ten thousand four hundred;" so as to read:

For pay of physician, five teachers, one carpenter, one miller, one engineer, one farmer, and one blacksmith, per thirteenth article of same treaty, $10,400.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained. As it stands in the text in the print I have, the appropriation is $55,000, and the change is to $10,400.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator has the old print. The House provision gathered together three or four different estimates, and the Committee on Appropriations separated those items so as to make specific appropriations for specific purposes, as provided in the treaty. The House lumped them together. In reference to these particular appropriations, we have reduced the amount some $16,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the enormous diminution just here arises from the fact that it is separated into items in other places, as I understand?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; the committee strike out all after the word "treaty," in line 1157, and insert the words printed in italics down to line 1166. All that ought to be read as one amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out after the word "treaty," in line 1157, being the words:

Pay of additional employés at the several agencies for the Sioux in Nebraska and Dakota, and for an industrial school at the Santee Sioux agency, $55,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Ten thousand four hundred dollars.

For pay of additional employés at the several agencies for the Sioux in Nebraska and Dakota, $25,000.

For industrial schools at the Santee Sioux and Crow Creek agencies, $3,000 each, $6,000.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear the amendment from line 1161 to 1166 explained. There seems to be a very great addition to the number of employés at these agencies.

Mr. ALLISON. There are a great number of employés at these several agencies in Dakota. The Secretary of the Interior estimated $47,000 for this purpose. The committee appropriated $25,000 last year, and thought it best to confine the appropriation this year to the same amount.

Mr. INGALLS. What are these employés?

Mr. ALLISON. The various employés of the agencies.

Mr. INGALLS. Not millers or farmers, because those are provided for in the original text from line 1155 to 1157.

Mr. ALLISON. They are employés engaged in furnishing the supplies authorized by the treaty to be paid to these Sioux.

Mr. INGALLS. I think before we are called upon to vote this additional sum of $25,000 there ought to be some clearer explanation than has yet been made of the necessity for it.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Chair will pass that for a moment, I will send for the expenditures of last year.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Iowa will allow me to suggest that this is not an addition but really a reduction of the whole. The Senate committee separate several of these items to conform to the bill of last year and to what they believe the law is. They were lumped by the House.

Mr. INGALLS. It may not be additional, but the amendment says it is additional.

For pay of additional employés at the several agencies for the Sioux in Nebraska and Dakota, $25,000.

The Senator from West Virginia says that is not additional.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Senator will cast his eye on the paragraph above he will see that the House made the total $55,000.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from West Virginia misapprehends what the Senator from Kansas desires. He desires to know specifically how this money was expended last year; whether these employés were engaged in cutting hay or distributing provisions, or what particular service they were doing in these agencies. I have sent for the book which shows the expenditure, in order that he may see how the money was expended last year, and I presume it is to be expended the same way this year.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This is for the several agencies. The employés are for taking care of the goods and merchandise that go there and for distributing them and doing general work about the reservations.

Mr. BECK. I may not throw any light on this matter, but I know what I have learned in committee. The House inserted a provision in these words:

For pay of physician, five teachers, one carpenter, one miller, one engineer, one farmer, and one blacksmith, per thirteenth article of same treaty, pay of additional employés at the several agencies for the Sioux in Nebraska and Dakota, and for industrial school at the Santee Sioux agency, $55,000.

We strike out all after the word "treaty," striking out "pay of additional employés at the several agencies for the Sioux in Nebraska and Dakota, and for industrial school at the Santee Sioux agency, $55,000," and making provision only in this clause for the physician, teachers, carpenter, miller, engineer, farmer, and blacksmith under the treaty, $10,400, and then, being unwilling to make provision for an industrial school which we did not believe was necessary there after making the other provisions, but believing that additional employés were necessary, we put in $25,000 for that, and then put in at the Santee Sioux and Crow Creek agencies for industrial schools, $3,000, reducing the whole appropriation of the House from $55,000 in one item to $41,000 in three items. That was the idea we had about it.

Mr. SARGENT. A reduction of $14,000.

Mr. BECK. A reduction of $14,000.

Mr. SARGENT. Furthermore, the items were mixed up in the House bill in such a way that the whole amount might be used for a particular object, whereas we thought it ought to be distributed in the proportion we have named among the various objects, and for that reason we separated them.

Mr. BECK. That was the idea we had.

Mr. SARGENT. We aimed at accuracy and also at saving the amount of $14,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1172 of section 1, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and eighty;" in line 1176, after the word "Red Cloud," to strike out "to a location on or near White River, in the vicinity of the mouth of Corn Creek, Dakota;" so as to read:

For subsistence of the Sioux, and for purposes of their civilization, as per agreement ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877, and other acts,

$1,125,000: Provided, That of the foregoing amount a sum not exceeding $180,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, may be used in the removal of the bands of Sioux Indians under the chieftainship of Red Cloud.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1179, after the word "Spotted Tail," to strike out "to the vicinity of the mouth of the south fork of the White River, Dakota" and insert:

To such convenient points within the Sioux reservation as the Secretary of the Interior, by direction of the President, may be able to select after conference with said Indians.

So as to read:

And of the bands under the chieftainship of Spotted Tail to such convenient points within the Sioux reservation as the Secretary of the Interior, by direction of the President, may be able to select after conference with said Indians.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to hear that explained. According to this agreement, as I read it hastily, it does not appear very plain to my mind that we have a right to take this subsistence money to be expended in compelling the Indians to locate on a particular part of the reservation, even if we have the authority to compel them to locate upon a particular part of the reservation at all without their consent, which this bill does not provide for. It is at the mere will of the President.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a very difficult question at best. We have agreed by these treaties to subsist these Sioux. There is no specific sum required, but we are to provide them subsistence until they become self-supporting. Under this treaty these Sioux agreed to go near the Missouri River. That is the treaty of stipulation practically.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ah, let us see about that. Article 3 says:

The said Indians also agree that they will hereafter receive all annuities provided by the said treaty of 1868, and all subsistence and supplies which may be provided for them under the present or any future act of Congress, at such points and places on the said reservation and in the vicinity of the Missouri River as the President of the United States shall designate.

That is merely an agreement that they will receive the delivery of what we are to give them, at a particular place, which is quite a different proposition from what this bill contains that these Indians as a body shall be removed and set down to stay at any particular place.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator can embody language that will more certainly express the idea conveyed by that provision of the treaty, the committee I think would be glad to accept it. All there is intended here is that these people shall have such location for the receipt of their supplies, &c., as the Secretary of the Interior, by the direction of the President, may be able to select after conference with the Indians. Of course that does not mean in contravention of the treaty stipulation. It means in pursuance of the treaty stipulation that they shall select a particular spot, whether it be at the mouth of this White River or at the mouth of some other creek, because there is a latitude allowed in the treaty which may be provided for by an agreement between these Indians and the President.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is clear enough, but here comes the will of the sovereign power by law which the President is bound to execute, because a law may violate a treaty—he cannot stand on the ground that it is not constitutional—which provides that $180,000 of this money that we have agreed to expend for their subsistence shall be expended for the removal of the bands of Sioux Indians under the chieftainship of Red Cloud and under the chieftainship of Spotted Tail to such convenient points in that vast territory called the reservation as the President of the United States chooses to select of his own will. It is true it says he shall confer. The sheriff who carries a prisoner to jail confers with him before he does it, and shows his warrant to take him. I take it that laws generally ought to be made to mean what they say. It is more convenient to interpret statutes that mean what they say than it is to interpret those that mean what they do not say or say what they do not mean; at least it is in most countries.

Mr. ALLISON. Now what the Senator desires, I suppose, is that we shall keep within that provision of the treaty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the proposition, that we shall stand by our engagements.

Mr. ALLISON. Then we can insert that it shall not be in contravention of the treaty provisions; but it means that now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If any Senator thinks the meaning of it now is not what I have stated, then the English language does not mean in the political or executive eye what it means in the dictionary, because it provides for the absolute removal and location of these Indians at particular places. That is what it says.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a location for subsistence purposes and for the purposes of the treaty, because it is not expected that these Indians will remain at a particular point.

Mr. SARGENT. The difficulty endeavored by the House bill to be solved, and which the Committee on Appropriations addressed themselves to, arose, as I understand, under these circumstances: the Sioux by their treaty in effect said that they would receive their supplies on the part of their reservation near the Missouri River. On the banks of the Missouri River and for twenty, thirty, or forty miles away from it is probably the best land which they can occupy, provided they are to be a pastoral people or do any farming; but they never have been accustomed to this mode of life and it comes hard to them. They are a very large and powerful nation of Indians, amounting to scores of thousands. They, however, were compelled to go to the Missouri River under this treaty and have been discontented ever since, and out of that circumstance arose the Red Cloud war and the Sitting Bull war. Sitting Bull rebelled and has taken refuge in Canada after a series of events that are fresh in the minds of Senators.

I understand that the chiefs of these Indians during the last summer were here in Washington and represented to the Secretary of the Interior and to the President the hardship that they considered they were compelled to undergo by being located near the Missouri River, and the President promised them—you may say he had no right to promise them, but they went back with a promise from the President that they should have a right to go to the points which are mentioned in the House bill. Those points named in the House bill, that is to say, in the vicinity of the south fork of the White River and at the mouth of Corn Creek in Dakota, are so far away from the Missouri River that transportation becomes extremely expensive. The Senate Committee on Appropriations, while unwilling to go back on this promise made by the President and to thereby imply to the Indians that the Great Father had not authority to make any such promise or had made an improvident one, used a little more general language leaving it for a matter of agreement between the United States authorities and the Indians how near the Missouri River they would be willing to go so that if possible they should cheerfully assent to it, that we might be able to subsist them at less expense, and that they might be on land which they could cultivate and use for pastoral purposes instead of taking them to the barren hills where they might find a few buffalo but where they would not make any progress in the arts of life.

Mr. PADDOCK. The mistake my friend from California makes in his statement is this: they did not want to go to the Missouri River because it was a barren and inhospitable country, a waste, a place where they cannot engage in pastoral pursuits. They were living in the country of their choice, one of the most fertile districts in all that section of country; from this they were compelled to go in a most inclement season to the Missouri River.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well; it only strengthens my argument if that is so. I am obliged to the Senator for his correction. My information, however, coming from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, differs from that; but if that is so, it makes my point stronger.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator will allow me one more word, they never understood from the requirement of the treaty that they should go for their provisions as nearly as practicable to the Missouri River, that they were to go there to live, to locate, to settle, to have their permanent abode. Their understanding was simply that they should go as nearly as practicable to meet the supplies, but that they should remain in the fruitful district where they were and had been for a long time established.

Mr. SARGENT. Article 3 of the treaty is:

The said Indians also agree that they will hereafter receive all annuities provided by the said treaty of 1868, and all subsistence and supplies which may be provided for them under the present or any future act of Congress, at such points and places on the said reservation and in the vicinity of the Missouri River as the President of the United States shall designate.

I agree with my friend that that does not absolutely require them to live on the banks of the Missouri River. They at any rate are very much dissatisfied with the requirement to locate them on the banks of the Missouri River, but they are willing to go to the places which are mentioned in the House bill. That makes about one hundred miles of transportation over a difficult country; and our object is, if possible, to cut down the great cost of transportation which will be caused by that, while answering the reasonable requests of the Indians. Therefore we have not required the Executive to put them, as the House bill does, at the particular places named in that promise, but we purpose to leave a latitude of discretion to the President in the removal whether they shall go to these places or to some others where the cost of transportation to the General Government will be less. The provision of the Senate committee's amendment is in the interest of economy, while at the same time we desire to have this done with the consent of the Indians and consistent with the alleged promise made to them by the President.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend in line 1183 by striking out the words "after conference" and inserting the words "with the consent of," as this is clearly a case of location.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I will not call for a division on that; I only desire to say a word. The Senator from Vermont perhaps did not hear article 3 of the last treaty of 1877 read.

The said Indians also agree that they will hereafter receive all annuities provided by the said treaty of 1868, and all subsistence and supplies which may be provided for them under the present or any future act of Congress, at such points and places on the said reservation and in the vicinity of the Missouri River as the President of the United States shall designate.

The Senator may not be aware of the fact that they have selected two points which require over one hundred miles of wagon hauling, and we thought it was putting the United States to an enormous expense and wasting a very large portion of the supplies in that hauling, and we thought perhaps the President who had made the promise ought to take the responsibility, if they were located at these very expensive points, the most expensive perhaps on the reservation, of doing it himself, especially as the treaty gave him authority to do it. The difficulty is to get their consent. I do not know so well about that. I will not object to it; but there are so many men interested in having long hauling and making it expensive and making the Indians dissatisfied, that whenever those interpreters and others get the Indians to understand that they have to agree to it, they will make them select such a place that those fellows will make the most money out of the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is perfectly true probably to the extent the Senator has stated; but there are other considerations. The treaty as I understand it, because it is a treaty although it is made by law, leaves these Indians at liberty to locate, to live, to have their villages, wherever in that reservation they choose. Now, this provision undertakes, as it stands or did stand before it was amended, to confer upon the President of the United States the power, after talking with them about it, to compel them to have their villages where he thought fit. If I understand justice and fair play and the meaning of agreements, that is directly in the face of what we have undertaken to do. Suppose it to be true, as my friend from Kentucky says and very likely correctly, that people engaged in Government contracts for transportation, &c., wish to have these Indians at the greatest possible distance from the steamboats, and that they can delude the Indians, in spite of the exertions of the President, into thinking that that was the best place to stay, it would be vastly cheaper if the Indians wanted to stay there for us to submit to that enormous expense of transportation than it would to force them to some other place against their will and give them a just ground of resisting the whole thing and saying "we will go to war." Then the Senator from Nebraska has said that these places near the river are totally unfit for Indian habitations, for the purposes that were designed, namely for agricultural pursuits, in order that they might make progress in civilization. So it appears to me if we are to treat these people as human beings at all, it is worth our while, when we are proposing to do something that we have agreed we will not do, to endeavor to get their consent to it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont; it is substantially what the committee supposed they had reported with reference to this matter. Of course it never has been the intention of the committee or the President to compel these Indians to settle in a particular spot on this reservation, and there is no such thing contemplated in this amendment or in this paragraph of the appropriation bill. But I cannot allow the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Nebraska to say that the reason why these Indians object to the Missouri River is because there are not arable lands there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not say that, because I know nothing about it. I said the Senator from Nebraska said so.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I refer to the Senator from Nebraska, as quoted by the Senator from Vermont. The truth is that these Indians desire to go to a point where it is impossible for them to sustain themselves by agricultural pursuits. We are compelled either to teach them pastoral or agricultural pursuits or to maintain them at the expense of the Government of the United States. Every interest requires that we shall do the best we can in that direction. The Sioux reservation at best is a reservation that is not very well adapted to the support and sustenance of these Indians.

Now, what the committee desire, and what I am sure we all desire, is that the best possible thing shall be done in making a location for these Indians, because this will be a central point around which they will radiate, either for grazing purposes or agricultural purposes. We wish to make the best possible location for their interests, with their assent after consultation, so that at some time or other we can get rid of making these enormous appropriations for their subsistence.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We all agree to the correctness of that. The chairman has stated it with entire propriety.

Mr. PADDOCK. I supposed it was a matter of universal knowledge on the part of everybody who knows anything of the Upper Missouri River country, north and west of Fort Randall, that there was no arable land worth mentioning in all that vast region of country. It is a series of sand ranges and hills and barren plains.

Mr. ALLISON. But my friend will remember that we do not propose to have these Indians above Fort Randall. The proposition is to put them on the Missouri River far below Fort Randall.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is not the place that was chosen for them by any manner of means. I speak of the Red Cloud branch of the Sioux. They are away above Fort Randall. They judge of the character of that country to which they were compelled to go last year to receive their rations by what they saw of it there at that particular locality, and from their personal knowledge of a country over which they have roamed for many years; and they insist upon it that there is no place anywhere in all that Missouri River region of country where they can find a suitable habitation. When my friend says that the section to which they propose now to go is a sterile country, he certainly states that of which I am sure he cannot personally know, and the sources of his information cannot be good, because, as I understand it, the section which they have chosen and which they prefer, and to which the Secretary of the Interior thinks they should be permitted to go, is the valley of the White Clay Creek, north of the Nebraska line some twenty or thirty miles, and it is one of the best grazing sections of all that region of country. It is a well-watered and well-timbered district. It is a country in which these Indians have lived for years and years, and which they consider to be their home, and to that country they should be permitted to return. It is in the interest of peace and good order and economy that their wishes in this regard should be fully acceded to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1186 of section 1, to strike out the words "expense of survey, subdividing, and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "civilization," in line 1189 of section 1, to insert:

Provided further, That of the foregoing amount the further sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be applied to the survey of such portions of said Sioux reservation as may be required for agricultural purposes, said surveys to be made under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the Senator having the bill in charge will explain the necessity of surveying any portion of the Sioux reservation.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that there is any necessity for surveying any portion of the Sioux reservation. I only know that under the provision as it came to us from the House $200,000 might be expended for that purpose, because the whole of this sum might be devoted to surveying this reservation. Therefore the committee struck out in line 1186 "expense of survey, subdividing, and;" but inasmuch as the treaty provides that these Indians shall have a right to take one hundred and sixty acres of land each and make improvements and erections thereon, the committee thought it wise to supply a sum, to be used of course in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding $20,000 for the purpose of surveys. I think myself it is of very doubtful propriety to survey any considerable portion of the Sioux reservation; and if the Senator from Kansas thinks $20,000 is too much, I trust he will move to reduce the sum. I think, however, that there being seven distinct agencies on this Sioux reservation, and all of them more or less agricultural, and all of them having some farming land attached to the agency, it is wise to allow perhaps this sum to be used in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior for this purpose.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill if there is not somewhere in the treaty—I have not examined the treaty latterly—a provision looking to an ultimate extension of the homestead principle?

Mr. ALLISON. There is a provision in the treaty which requires the Government of the United States to set apart, at the request of any head of a family, one hundred and sixty contiguous acres of land. So, of course, if any head of a family should require this, it would be the duty of the Government to set apart the land in accordance with the treaty; but that cannot be done unless the land-survey system of the United States is extended into and upon the reservation.

Mr. PADDOCK. Is this appropriation recommended by the Indian Office? Do they contemplate any surveys?

Mr. ALLISON. The Indian Office, as I understand, recommended an indefinite sum out of this $200,000 for the purpose. In other words, as this bill came from the House the whole sum of $200,000 could have been used for the purpose of surveying the Sioux reservation.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is, it might be used within the discretion of the Department.

Mr. ALLISON. It might be used in the discretion of the Department. The Committee on Appropriations supposed that a smaller sum would be sufficient to provide for these surveys, and therefore we limited the amount to $20,000. Of course the Indian Bureau desires some fund set apart.

Mr. WINDOM. And also provided, if the Senator from Iowa will allow me, that it should be done under the direction of the General Land Office, so that it would be connected with the general surveys of the country and would not have to be surveyed again at some future time.

Mr. TELLER. I move to strike out the word "twenty" and insert "ten." I think $10,000 is enough.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator that he make it $15,000.

Mr. TELLER. I will make it "fifteen." Fifteen thousand dollars is certainly sufficient.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest that inasmuch as the Senator from Iowa admits that this is an amendment of very doubtful propriety——

Mr. ALLISON. I said I thought the survey of the Sioux reservation was a matter of very doubtful utility, and I think so.

Mr. PADDOCK. Whether the Senator said so or not, it certainly cannot be true that it is not well at all events to survey the valleys of that part of the reservation in which they propose to fix their abode, where they propose to have their villages.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from Nebraska is through I will continue my remarks.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator from Kansas had not commenced his remarks when I rose.

Mr. INGALLS. I was proceeding to say that inasmuch as the Senator from Iowa had admitted that this was an amendment of very doubtful propriety, I hoped he would not insist upon it. It must be apparent to every Senator who is called upon to vote for it that when you have not even got the Indians upon the reservation, when this very section proceeds upon the theory that they are to be removed at a subsequent period, and by the expenditure of a very large sum of money, this amendment providing for the survey of a portion of the reservation is certainly grotesque in its absurdity. In the first place, the exterior lines of this reservation will have to be established. In the next place, there is no evidence whatever that any single Indian has expressed any desire to have a homestead taken under the treaty within the limits of this reservation. And to appropriate the sum of $20,000 for this purpose appears to me to be absolutely without any reason whatever. I hope, therefore, that instead of asking for an appropriation of $20,000, the Senator from Iowa will consent to have this amendment stricken out. I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator if he proposes to keep the bill as it came from the House?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly not. Nobody claims that there is any necessity for a survey in this reservation. There is not any considerable number of Indians, not even one so far as we are advised, who desires to cultivate any portion of this land; in fact they are not on the land contemplated by the amendment; and to ask an appropriation of $20,000 looks to me very much like trying to get up something to give a job to some man who wants to run a few lines for the purpose of a survey. I hope the Senate will disagree to the amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. The very fact of putting the Indians upon a new reservation implies the necessity of some surveys. A part of this amendment which is just as liable to criticism is that which includes the "purchase of stock-cattle, agricultural implements, wagons, &c., plowing lands to be located upon, and erection of necessary agency and school buildings."

What do we want to plow lands for, if there is not an Indian who has expressed a wish to engage in agriculture? Why not strike that out? Why furnish them any agricultural implements? Why do a thing for the next fiscal year toward enabling them to engage in agriculture at all? The treaty provides that at the request of the head of a family one hundred and sixty acres shall be set off for him, and here it is provided that it shall be plowed. Whose land is to be plowed? One of the greatest curses of the tribal system is that land is held in common; that if an Indian raises a crop of barley on a few acres all the rest of the Indians feed their ponies on it. It is one thing in the way of their civilization; they have to be taught that there is a difference between meum and tuum. They have to be taught that they can own that which they raise with their own hands and that nobody else has a right to interfere with it, and that they must keep off another man's potato-patch or another man's crop of barley or wheat. We propose to plow their land, not to plow lands held in common, but to plow lands that are assigned to heads of families, segregated for them. In order to make that segregation, of course a survey must take place. The amount of $20,000 does not go very far in surveying; and when a man is on hand doing the surveys, whoever he may be—I do not know who he may be and I do not care—or a party of men are in the field, you had better survey to the extent that is necessary rather than send out a few one year and send out a few more the next year.

Furthermore, I suppose no one doubts that this land some time or other the Indians will be away from; it will be a part of the public domain, and it will be sold to actual settlers or taken up as homesteads. That is the history of all the land of the country, and it will be in reference to this ten years from now, twenty-five years from now, or seventy-five years from now. This amendment wisely provides that we shall establish the meridian lines, that the surveys shall be in accordance with the general system of the country, so that it will not be in irregular patches but will be on the rectangular system of surveys by which the land can be hereafter described and sold without further survey to settlers or given to them as homesteads.

These were the reasons that influenced the committee to concur with the request of the Commissioner, giving him a limited amount of money for this purpose, and we imposed upon the House bill which made the whole appropriation, some $200,000, available for that purpose. We say "no, you shall not expend more than $20,000 for that use," and we think that is necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting after the word "offices," in line 1195, the words "and in conformity with the public land surveys of the United States."

The object is to prevent isolated and detached portions of this land being taken up in the center or any other portions of the reservation and surveyed at a great expense, which will ultimately become useless whenever these lands are thrown into market for occupation under the homestead and pre-emption laws. I propose that if these surveys are to be made, they shall be so made from the meridian lines established by the public-land system. I hope there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly, none whatever. The clear and plain meaning of the provision as it now stands is just exactly what the Senator from Kansas proposes, and therefore I hope his amendment will be adopted, so that there may be no question about it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think the amendment already provides for it; but I have no objection.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I think the sum that is named here is rather too large; and these Indians are impoverished; they are greatly in need of subsistence and of supplies. It seems to me unjust to abstract from their scanty appropriation the sum of $20,000 for a survey that they do not want. Now if this bill passes this amount will be withheld from the appropriations for the corn, and flour, and beef, and pork, and supplies they need for their subsistence. I hope the amount will be diminished and that this paltry pittance which has been awarded to them already of $180,000 will not be diminished by the sum of $20,000 for this mere survey.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to ask the Senator if he can discover anything in the provision authorizing the survey involving an absolute requirement on the part of the Secretary of the Interior that the money shall be absolutely withheld and expended for the survey. It says "so much thereof as may be necessary," and no more, within his discretion.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not understand the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. PADDOCK. I supposed the Senator understood me.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not understand the question of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. PADDOCK. I wanted to know if the Senator from Kansas thought it would be incumbent on the Secretary of the Interior to withhold the money for the purpose mentioned and expend the whole sum because in his discretion he is authorized to use so much of it as it may be useful to expend in the manner indicated.

Mr. INGALLS. This will be charged up under the heads of appropriation, $20,000 for surveys, and the appropriation made for these Indians will be diminished by that amount. There is no use disguising that proposition. This is so much money withheld from their subsistence under the terms of the bill, and they do not need it.

Mr. PADDOCK. So much thereof as may be necessary, and no more.

Mr. INGALLS. It will be withheld from their appropriation. Congress by this bill authorizes the appropriation of $20,000 for surveys, and when the account under the present appropriations is opened that amount will be charged up to surveys on the books of the Department. I can see no use for it, and I hope that the amount will be diminished. I move to strike out "twenty" and insert "five," so as to make the amount $5,000. I am very sure it will be sufficient to meet the demands of these Indians for surveys.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator has studied the bill so well that I should suppose his amendment ought to carry great force. He says the little pittance of $180,000 is the amount allowed these Indians, and the $20,000 is to be taken from it.

Mr. INGALLS. In the proviso.

Mr. SARGENT. That is not the pittance allowed to the Indians. The little pittance allowed to them is $1,125,000 for beef, pork, &c., and the proviso does not refer to beef or pork or anything of the kind. I trust my friend will now withdraw his amendment, as he sees that he is only about $900,000 out of the way in estimating "the pittance," a very small amount of course!

Mr. ALLISON. I move to reduce the amount to $16,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment to an amendment already pending. The Senator from Kansas has moved to reduce the amount to $5,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend his amendment by inserting "sixteen" instead of "five;" so as to make the amount $16,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question on the motion of the Senator from Iowa, to strike out "twenty" and insert "sixteen."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Was my amendment at the close of the clause?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been inserted. The question now recurs on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, in line 1202 of section 1, to strike out "thirty-one thousand eight" and insert "eighteen thousand two;" so as to read:

For residences for employés at seven Sioux agencies, as required by article 7 of above agreement, pay of a matron at the Santee agency, and for pay of second blacksmith, and furnishing iron, steel, and other material, per eighth article of the same treaty, $21,800; in all, $1,518,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 1280 of section 1.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1278 I move to strike out "Southern" and insert "several;" and then change "agency" to "agencies;" so as to read:

For pay of employés at the several Ute agencies, $5,000; in all $78,020.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out from line 1399 to line 1411, inclusive, of section 1, in the following words:

That the unexpended balance, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds appropriated by the act of March 3, 1877, for the Indian service at the Fort Peck agency, Montana, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, be, and the same hereby is, reappropriated, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the care and support of the Indians at said agency during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, in aiding them in agricultural and stock-raising pursuits, in the erection of a bridge across Poplar River, and in any other respect to promote their welfare with a view to their civilization.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1427 of section 1, at the end of the clause making appropriations for collecting and subsisting Apaches and other Indians of Arizona and New Mexico, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That $5,000 of the above sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used to pay the expenses of removing the bands of Utes and Apaches now located near Abiquiu and Cimarron, New Mexico, to their respective reservations, the Utes to the reservation of that tribe in Colorado and the Apaches to the reservation at Fort Stanton in New Mexico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1436 of section 1, after the word "Kiowas," to insert "Comanches;" so as to read;

For subsistence and civilization of the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, and Wichitas who have been collected upon the reservations set apart for their use and occupation, $240,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "general incidental expenses of the Indian service," in line 1505 of section 1, to strike out "fourteen thousand two hundred" and insert "sixteen thousand;" so as to read:

Incidental expenses of Indian service in Dakota: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service and pay of employés, $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1533 of section 1, before "Pueblo," to strike out "Abiquiu;" so as to read:

Incidental expenses of Indian service in New Mexico: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, support and civilization of Indians at Pueblo and Mescalero agencies and pay of employés at same agencies, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "miscellaneous," at the end of line 1551 of section 1, to insert "to be available immediately."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Line 1547 should be transferred to the bottom of page 63 instead of at the top of the page as it is now by a misprint.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That transposition will be made.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out from lines 1567 to 1571 of section 1 the following words:

For the services, at not exceeding fifty cents per day (rations included) each, of Indian police, in maintaining order and prohibiting illegal traffic in liquor on the several Indian reservations, and for the purposes of civilization of the Indians, $60,000.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

For the services of not exceeding four hundred privates at $5 per month each, and not exceeding fifty officers at $8 per month each, of Indian police, to be employed in maintaining order and prohibiting illegal traffic in liquor on the several Indian reservations, $30,000: Provided, That Indians employed at agencies in any capacity shall not be construed as part of agency employés named in section 5 of the act making appropriations for the Indian service for the fiscal year 1876, approved March 3, 1875.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3, in the following words:

That whenever, in the judgment of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, it is found practicable to employ Indians in farming or other civilized avocations in which they can contribute by their own labor to their maintenance, he may use such portions of their respective subsistence funds herein appropriated as can be judiciously spared to pay for the services of such Indians as may be induced to labor for their own advancement: Provided, That Indians so employed shall not be construed as part of the agency employés.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the several appropriations herein made for teachers, millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons, and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulations, may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of the various Indian tribes, within the discretion of the President, and with the consent of said tribes expressed in the usual manner; and that he cause report to be made to Congress, at its next session thereafter, of his action under this provision.

Mr. SARGENT. To make that a little clearer, on line 13, at the commencement of the line, I move to insert the words "for the several Indian tribes," and then to strike out the words "the various Indians" and insert the word "said," and then, after the word "tribes," to insert the word "respectively;" so as to read:

And for various articles provided for by treaty stipulation, for the several Indian tribes, may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of said tribes respectively.

Mr. HOAR. If this provision be sound legislative policy, what is the use of our day's work? I do not see why it would not be convenient every Congress simply to provide that a certain sum of money might be expended for the different Indian tribes as the President and the tribes should agree, because that is what it all comes to.

Mr. SARGENT. I admit that that would be the effect if it were applied to the whole bill, but this simply applies to "teachers, millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons, and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulation." It is true it has a very broad meaning, and there is a question whether many of the articles which are provided by treaties which are very old are really for the benefit of the Indians. Some of them seem at this day to be nearly ridiculous; some of them are for the payment of so many pounds of silver; some are for so much gilling-twine.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope nobody objects to the silver. [Laughter.]

Mr. SARGENT. We object to it because a certain amount of silver paid out to a particular Indian, especially if he is a roaming Indian, is of very little use to him. It is very soon drunk up or thrown away; whereas if, with the consent of the tribe, as herein provided for, instead of furnishing these various articles, the gilling-twine and the various kinds of clothing described, perhaps not any more adapted to their use than sending warming-pans to the West Indies, the money spent for them could be used for real, substantial benefits to them, it would be advantageous. We propose to do it with their consent. It is the only correction we can apply to some improvident provisions of the old treaties.

This is not a novel provision; it has been in the law heretofore. By taking a moment or two I could find it in the statutes, and the amendment I have proposed to it now makes it a little more binding as to the consent of the Indians, and that the money shall be used for the particular tribes with which the particular treaties were made. For instance, in the act of 1873 there is this proviso in the Indian appropriation bill:

That the several appropriations herein made for teachers, millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons, and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulation, may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of the various Indian tribes—

That does not say as carefully as we now endeavor to say that it shall be for the particular tribe with which the treaty was made, but they might take what was due to one tribe and apply it to another, though I believe it was not so construed—

within the discretion of the President, and with the consent of said tribes expressed in the usual manner; and that he cause report to be made to Congress, at its next session thereafter, of his action under this provision

That we understand to have been a very useful provision; but it was limited simply to that appropriation bill. The House comes forward now and puts in its sections 3 and 4, which have not the particular guards the old provision required; and in studying up the subject, finding these various provisions, we took the best one that we thought covered the whole case, and now amend it so as to make it as safe as possible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the report of the President under the act of 1873?

Mr. SARGENT. There was a report made of his proceedings. I have it not now in my mind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would be of great interest now to see exactly how the working of that law came out practically.

Mr. SARGENT. It did not go much into practice. There was very little done under this provision. I think there will be more now done than there was then.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The particular Indian in that case preferred the teacher, miller, blacksmith, &c.

Mr. SARGENT. Or his gilling-twine for his nets or his red flannel or his shoes where he was accustomed to go barefoot, and so forth. At any rate there was but little done under it. Now, many of the Indian tribes to whom that applied have advanced considerably in civilization. They themselves want more schools. They are more engaged in agriculture. They would prefer feed-cattle now probably to many articles which have been provided for them. This is in case of applications on their part, they being informed that their money can be spent for these beneficial objects, to allow it to be done. We think there can be no harm in it, and we have tried to guard it as well as we can; and it is an alternative proposition to that made by the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to test the sense of the Senate on this business, which is rather ticklish ground, I move to amend the amendment by striking out of lines 10 and 11 the words "for teachers, blacksmiths, carpenters, physicians, and other persons."

Mr. SARGENT. And leave the word "engineer?"

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. SARGENT. Do you want to leave that in the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; if I omitted to read it it was an accident; and the word "and" in line 12; so as to read:

That the several appropriations herein made for various articles provided for by treaty stipulation may be diverted to other uses, &c.

That would leave the twine business, &c., and various specific things that they are to have to be subject to this diversion by their consent; but why a treaty provision saying that the Indians should have a teacher, which is the foundation of all civilization, should be turned over to tobacco——

Mr. SARGENT. Why not strike out the word "teachers" only?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am coming to the rest of it. Why we should say that the appropriation for a teacher, which we are to provide for them, which as I have said is the foundation of all the civilization that we hope for them, to say nothing of ourselves, and turn it over to tobacco as it might be, (which is also a very civilizing thing, as my friend from Kentucky will agree, I am sure,) I do not see. Next you come to a miller. Wherever there is any use in the appropriation at all—and there ought to be with every tribe, because it is much better that they should have a mill with some white man to teach them how to run it and use it and to grind in a civilized way their corn and wheat or their barley or their oats for their cattle—I do not see why you should say that it is decent to dicker that away. When you come to your blacksmith, the same may be said; and then as to the engineer, which I suppose does not mean a topographical engineer——

Mr. ALLISON. An engineer to take charge of a steam-engine.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, an engineer to take charge of a steam-mill, I suppose, and a carpenter, and a physician—why you are to abolish the physician in the discretion of anybody, I do not see.

Mr. ALLISON. A number of those treaties provide for blacksmiths, millers, physicians, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And for first and second miller, a second carpenter, a third blacksmith, &c.

Mr. ALLISON. In many cases they are not required; but we furnish them because we have engaged to do so by treaty stipulation.

Mr. INGALLS. If they do not want them why continue them?

Mr. SARGENT. If they do not want them we propose to give their value in something else.

Mr. BECK. If the Senator will allow me I will call attention to a case that the Senator from Vermont will see the force of in a minute. On page 30 the Nez Percé Indians are provided for. A good many of them have been scattered lately. This may not exactly fit, but he will see what we mean. We have a treaty with the Nez Percé Indians. On the top of page 31 we provide:

> For nineteenth of twenty installments, for the employment of one superintendent of teaching and two teachers, per same article and treaty, $2,700.
> For nineteenth of twenty installments, for the employment of one superintendent of farming, two farmers, two millers, two blacksmiths, one tinner, one gunsmith, one carpenter, and one wagon and plow maker, per same article and treaty, $5,000.

These are all treaty stipulations. It may not be the case with that tribe but it is so with many of them, they have none of these things to do but they will be very glad to have that many more blankets, that many more cattle, that many more other things. They can secure them under the construction of this same clause in the act of 1873. Unless this is done, the Department goes on and employs two blacksmiths, two millers, and all these men, and pays them a salary of between $1,200 and $1,800 a year, and they may never do a day's work. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs told me so this morning. I inquired of him particularly. He said they were compelled to employ them; that was the treaty, and they employed them and paid them, and they took that money and there is not one of them that does a day's work in many of these tribes because there is no work of that sort to do. It was regarded therefore as being better to allow the tribes, where they do not have need for those things, to agree that the President may direct the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior to use the balance of this money for their benefit in other ways. The United States does not want to keep any of the money it has agreed to give them, but it wants to apply all the money called for by treaty stipulations so that they get it all, and put it in the most available form. We ask them to give their assent to the change, and it is only when that assent is had that this allows it to be done. I know the Senator from Vermont would not want to have two or three blacksmiths, two or three millers, and three or four school-teachers paid where there are no blacksmith shops and no mills, and where the children will not go to school. There are some tribes where you could not catch the children with a lasso, some where there are no children to educate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If you can find a tribe where there are no children, that would be a pretty strong objection.

Mr. BECK. There are several cases of that kind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where there are no children?

Mr. BECK. I can think of one where there are but five or six, and there are sometimes two teachers for them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there is any tribe where there are only five or six children, those five or six ought to have an opportunity to go to school if they wish to have it. You might just as well say that there is no use in having a church—I will not say in Kentucky but I will say in Vermont—where there are no Christians to go to it; and provision never ought to be made for building a church for the reason that nobody there desires that particular species of civilization. That I take it would hardly do.

But when you come to that part of the proposition which relates to specific articles that the changed circumstances do not require and the presence of which would do no good, there is force in it. To say that you are to authorize the dispensing with teachers, artisans, farmers, and so forth, who if they are properly selected will continually attempt to educate the Indian up to being a farmer or a blacksmith or something, to get his ideas in the rut of civilization to a degree, although he may not have a shop, I do not agree to, because it is a means of civilization: and you never can expect an Indian to be fond either of a teacher or a blacksmith or a farmer until you have a good man who follows some one of these avocations in the tribe, as it appears to me. Therefore although in particular cases the people who are sent there find nothing to do, if the President selects them properly they will be missionaries of civilization, and in a little while they will find something to do. At any rate that is the philosophy of it. Of course if these people are mere bummers selected by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or by some agent, mere sores on the body-politic of the Indian tribes, that is a different thing; but we must trust to the Executive Department to execute this law properly. The treaties do not require that we shall appropriate so much money, but that we shall furnish the Indians with teachers, blacksmiths, farmers, and so on.

Mr. THURMAN. I want to say one word. I have thought for some years that it was time for what are properly called the "lapsed provisions" of these treaties to be dropped out of consideration, for us to cease to make appropriations for them. Why, sir, we have a treaty with a tribe of Indians which binds us to furnish a blacksmith shop at Chicago, and we have another that requires us to keep some kind of a shop, I believe a blacksmith shop, at Cleveland, in Ohio. We have appropriated, since I have been in the Senate, for a saw-mill at Chicago, not for a saw-mill located there, but something in lieu of that saw-mill.

I was surprised to hear my friend from Kentucky say that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs appoints millers where there are no mills. If he does so he violates his duty. He has no right to do any such thing, and it is none of his business to do any such thing. And so with the others. There is no propriety whatsoever in expending the money and appointing a set of men simply to lounge about and do nothing. That is not the intention of Congress at all. I do not know how far these matters have been corrected in this bill because I have been employed elsewhere while the bill has been under consideration. I do not think this proposition of the committee is to appropriate for those things which have actually lapsed, and allow the money to be diverted for some other purpose. If that is the purpose of it I think it is wrong.

Mr. ALLISON. It is only in cases where the treaty requires an appropriation for a blacksmith or a miller and where he is not required. There we simply authorize the Secretary of the Interior or the President of the United States to use that fund for another purpose with the Indians' consent.

Mr. THURMAN. Now would my good friend from Iowa make an appropriation for a miller, and engineer, and the like, for Sitting Bull's tribe? I expect there is some such provision in the treaty we have with the Nez Percés.

Mr. ALLISON. We have in this very bill provided for a miller, a blacksmith, &c., for the Nez Percés; that is for the Nez Percés who are on their reservation. It may be that they have no mill there, but the treaty requires that we shall appropriate for a miller each year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I should like to have the Senator point out any clause in that treaty which requires an appropriation for a miller as distinguished from a clause in that treaty which requires us to furnish a man as a miller at a particular place, and then what the Senator from Ohio has said comes in. If there is no use for the man there, then the duty to furnish him does not exist.

Mr. ALLISON. I can agree to that if we wish to make a nice construction of a treaty whereby if we do not choose to build a mill although we have agreed to do it, then we can say "there is no mill there; therefore we will not appropriate for a miller." Of course we can by this Robin Hood barn principle refuse to make any appropriation. The proposition here is to reasonably and substantially carry out the provisions of existing treaties with these Indians.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then why do you not build a mill in the case you have supposed?

Mr. ALLISON. We do not build a mill perhaps because we may have built it, and it has been burned down, and in these days of economical appropriations it will not be possible to procure appropriations to build a mill at any particular agency.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Nobody can tell that till he tries.

Mr. ALLISON. That is very true.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The position I think is hardly a consistent one. It is said that here is a duty under a treaty by a nice construction to provide a miller. That my friend says is a nice construction as distinguished from providing money for a miller. I do not think it is a nice construction. I think it is substantially the true one. Then his answer is, "Here we have agreed by treaty to provide a mill and miller; we have not built the mill, but we still feel bound by the treaty to provide the miller." That will hardly stand fire. If we have agreed to provide a mill and a miller and do not think it fit to provide the mill, I think we shall not break the treaty much more by omitting to provide the miller.

Mr. ALLISON. Suppose a mill is provided and built as required by treaty and is burned down?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the duty is to build it up again.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; but pending the erection of that mill, why cannot the fund appropriated for the miller be used for a particular year in the re-erection of that mill? Of course we can refuse to make these appropriations. I do not say that we ought to make them in every instance; but I do say that a substantial compliance with these treaties requires that we shall, in substance at least, furnish them the means which we have agreed to furnish them.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to suggest, with all the deference in the world, that his remedy as pointed out seems to me to be very illy adjusted to the disease of which he speaks. If a tribe for whom we have agreed to hire a miller which tribe has no mill, or a teacher which tribe has no school, that might constitute a reason why we should still give the tribe the benefit of the money which a teacher or a miller would cost and allow it to be appropriated for some other purpose. But it seems to me in that part of the bill in which the appropriation is made for the miller, there the authority to divert the appropriation should be contained, so that the bill would show upon its face where the specific application is required and where it is not. Here is a bill which appropriates, I suppose, six or seven millions of money.

Mr. SARGENT. Scarcely more than half of it.

Mr. ALLISON. About four and a half millions.

Mr. HOWE. I asked some Senator on the Appropriation Committee——

Mr. SARGENT. This is the smallest Indian bill for years.

Mr. HOWE. Then it is three millions or more?

Mr. ALLISON. Four and a half millions.

Mr. HOWE. No matter, every dollar of it is appropriated to pay some person or to buy some thing; and here is a clause which, if I do not misunderstand it, tells the Commissioner that he need not buy a thing for which an appropriation is made or hire a man for which an appropriation is made if the President and the tribes will agree to do something else with the money.

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Senator think that is a new provision?

Mr. HOWE. I do not know at all how old it is, but it is old enough to die, I think.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not.

Mr. HOWE. If the Senator differs with me why do you go through this long bill every year? Why do you not appropriate a gross sum and tell the President to spend it as he pleases?

Mr. SARGENT. Because the treaties require it.

Mr. HOWE. But you abrogate the treaties, or you authorize the President and the tribes to abrogate the treaties. You justify the appropriation because the treaty requires the appropriation; but you tell the President that if he and the tribe are agreed to something else, something else entirely different from the treaty may be done with the appropriation. It seems to me when you come to the appropriation for the Nez Percés, if they are in that predicament, without schools, without mills, without sick persons, and therefore do not need millers, or teachers, or physicians, the Commissioner knows that, and there you should have said it, for it seems to me it would have been better to say at the foot of those appropriations, "if in this case and for this tribe the President and the tribe agree to a better disposition of the money," for that reason, which you know exists, "a different appropriation may be made." But, because there may be that difficulty with the appropriations for a single tribe, to throw every appropriation into an uncertainty it seems to me is too radical a remedy for a very simple ailment.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to suggest to the committee whether this whole difficulty might not be remedied by a provision something of this kind: I suppose the whole amount of the appropriation for specific matters specified in the bill, which have become obsolete for the reasons stated by the Senator from California, will not exceed a few thousand dollars probably. That is, the changes which they propose to permit the President or the Indian Office to make with the consent of these tribes will not be very large. Now, suppose the bill should provide that wherever any appropriation specified here has become unnecessary the President and the Indians concerned shall have the right to dispense with it, and then appropriate a sum not exceeding $5,000 or $10,000 for such substitution for those appropriations so discontinued as they should agree upon. The difficulty with this bill seems to me to be as a matter of principle. We have been hearing always of the corruptions of the Indian administration of this country. We have been hearing that corrupt men imposed on the Indian Office on the one side and on the Indians on the other, in spite of every legislative precaution. We have been building up with great care and labor various administrative and legislative systems of Indian management. We have built up a system of schools; we provide large sums for them. We provide by treaty where the Indian funds or the appropriations of the Government shall be expended. Now, we come in and add at the end of the Indian bill a clause that whenever the President of the United States (which of course means practically the Commissioner of Indian Affairs) and any tribe of Indians shall agree the whole thing may be swept away, and any object not specified in the bill may be the object of this legislative appropriation to the amount which this bill provides. It seems to me that a provision of the kind suggested would accomplish everything desired by the committee, and would be free from this objection. If this be an old policy it is time it was stopped, for it is a most extraordinary policy in our legislation.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I am rather surprised that Senators should criticise the amendment made by the Committee on Appropriations in view of the sections which they propose to amend. The sections which came from the House contain the most remarkable provisions conferring general authority upon the President and Commissioner of Indian Affairs that I have ever seen in an Indian bill—no, the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, not the President at all, as my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] suggests. I should like to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to this provision. Section 3 says:

That whenever, in the judgment of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, it is found practicable to employ Indians in farming or other civilized avocations in which they can contribute by their own labor to their maintenance, he may use such portions of their respective subsistence funds herein appropriated—

And that amounts to two or three million, I do not know how much—as can be judiciously spared to pay for the services of such Indians as may be induced to labor for their own advancement.

This places the whole sum appropriated for the subsistence, and in the case of the Sioux Indians alone it is a million and a quarter, in the discretion, not of the President, not of the Secretary of the Interior, but of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who may divert it all to any purpose he pleases.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course that is totally inadmissible, and I hope the Senator did not understand me—and I am sure he should not have understood all of the others who have spoken on that point—as preferring the House proposition to that of the Senate committee.

Mr. WINDOM. I know that. The fourth section is equally broad. It says:

That in case of an emergency requiring immediate action—

And the Secretary of the Interior is to be the judge of that emergency—and calling for an expenditure of funds for which no appropriation has been provided, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to use for the purpose such funds herein provided, &c.

Now, in order to get rid of these broad provisions, the Committee on Appropriations adopted the amendment which is proposed. It is no new amendment. It has been in the statutes for one or two years. It requires everything that is done by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the President, and the Secretary of the Interior, to be reported to Congress, so that everybody may know precisely what has been done. There has never been the slightest complaint growing out of the action of the Secretary and the President under the former provision, which is exactly almost in the words of this, and I do not see the cause for alarm in this case.

The Senator from Wisconsin says that by the consent of the tribes and the action of the President, we may divert the money which has been provided for by the treaties and change the treaties. Suppose we do, we the Senate and the House give consent in advance so far as this single appropriation is concerned, so that you have all the powers that concur in making a treaty—you have the President, the Indians, the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives, all agreeing that this diversion may be made. It does not cover the whole ground of the appropriation. It is only for certain items which have been already explained, for millers, for blacksmiths, &c.; and if it shall be ascertained that this money can be used more advantageously for the Indians, all the treaty-making powers of the Government agree that it shall be done. The Senate agrees in advance; the President directs it; and he can only do it with the consent of the Indians; and when it is done, it must all be reported, every item of their action, to Congress so that it can be reviewed and revised hereafter, and we may ascertain whether it has been improperly done or not.

It does seem to me that the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations is conservative; it is careful; it takes the place of the broad provisions which I have read that are very objectionable. It enables us to utilize the funds for the best interest of the Indians. It has been tried and no fault ever found with it. No corruption has ever been charged against the acts of the Government under this provision in any other bill. Then why should we hesitate to readopt it again? If the Senate want to vote it out, if they say we shall not comply with the treaties, say so, and the committee have not the slightest objection. If they say we shall comply with the treaties in a way that does the Indians no good, let them vote down this proposition; but if we desire to comply with the treaties substantially and at the same time use the money effectually for the benefit of the Indian, the committee can find no safer, more judicious, or conservative proposition than they have embodied in this amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I move the following amendment in lieu of that proposed by the committee——

Mr. SARGENT. It is obvious that the Senate is not prepared to finish the bill to-night, and I move an executive session.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have my amendment read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read for information. The Chair will state, however, that the first question will be on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California to the amendment of the committee, and then on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

Mr. SARGENT. We have had a re-enforcement. It is very obvious that many Senators are here now who have not been here while the bill generally has been under consideration, and who desire to discuss the matter; and that will necessitate the repeating of explanations which have been made at great length to-day. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the amendment be read.

Mr. SARGENT. I withdraw my motion for that purpose, so that we may study the amendment in the RECORD to-morrow, where it will go, having it read.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment of Mr. HOAR, as follows:

That whenever any of the foregoing appropriations shall, in the judgment of the President, be unnecessary, he may, with the consent of the tribe interested, expressed in the usual manner, dispense with the expenditure therein provided; and a sum not exceeding $10,000 is hereby appropriated, which may be expended for such other uses for the benefit of such tribes respectively as the President, with such consent, shall approve.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I wish to give notice of an amendment to this bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I withdraw my motion for that purpose.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I give notice that I shall offer at the proper time an amendment to this bill, which I move to have printed.

The motion to print was agreed to.

TAX ON DISTRICT CHURCH PROPERTY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to offer a resolution calling on the commissioners of the District of Columbia for certain information about taxes. I presume it will be agreed to by unanimous consent. If not it can go over. My resolution is:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be and they are hereby directed to report to the Senate, what property known as church property in the District of Columbia, taxed under the act of June 20, 1874, or any other act of Congress, is in default in respect of such taxes—giving, as far as possible, the names of the corporations or persons in whom the title to such property rests, and also whether the steps provided by law have been taken to enforce the collection of said taxes, and if not, why not.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask an order for the recommittal of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 151) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to the Society of the Sons of St. George, established at Philadelphia, the sum of $1,440.25 in gold, being the amount paid by said society upon a colossal statue of St. George and the Dragon, reported by the Committee on Finance adversely. It is by the consent of the chairman who reported it adversely that I ask for its recommittal to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution was recommitted to the Committee on Finance.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1215) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Erwin;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1216) for the improvement of the sanitary condition of Washington, and for deepening the river channel; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GORDON. I wish to remark in reference to this bill that it differs from the bill originally introduced in this, that it asks that the work of reclamation begin at the Long Bridge instead of below it, and it is thought by competent engineers that the whole of it can be done under this programme for a million and a half of dollars instead of about eight millions, and that the Government can have all the money returned to it by a sale of the land reclaimed. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MATTHEWS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1217) to amend section 1920 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. WHYTE and Mr. MITCHELL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 4104) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHYTE and Mr. JONES, of Florida, submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 4236) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHYTE submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-roads in the several States therein named; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from California yields to me for a moment to make an announcement which I feel it my duty to do, so that Senators may take notice. The bankrupt-repeal bill is the unfinished business. I agreed when the Senate took that bill up that it should be laid aside informally for these two appropriation bills, the one that has passed and the one which is now under consideration. I am told there is another appropriation bill that is ready for the action of the Senate; but I wish to say that when this appropriation bill now pending shall be disposed of I shall feel it my duty to insist on disposing of the repeal of the bankrupt-act bill. It will take, I imagine, not over half an hour or at most an hour to dispose of it, and then the post-office appropriation bill can be proceeded with. We shall lose no time, then, by disposing of the unfinished business, the repeal of the bankrupt law, and we shall gain no time by taking up the post-office appropriation bill and still further postponing the bankrupt-repeal bill. I therefore wish to say, so that every Senator who takes any interest in it may be in his place, that as soon as the pending appropriation bill is disposed of to-morrow I shall insist on the unfinished business, the repeal of the bankrupt law.

Mr. WINDOM. I only want to say, in the absence of the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. DORSEY,] who has charge of the post-office appropriation bill, that the Committee on Appropriations will insist on that bill when this is concluded.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SARGENT. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 8, 1878.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. S. DOMER, D. D., St. Paul's English Lutheran church, Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives to print extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Education for the year 1876, for the use of said Commissioner.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 3974) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1879, with sundry amendments; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COLE. I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House——

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the morning hour; but prior to that the Chair desires to announce the appointment of a committee.

APPOINTMENT OF A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following as the Committee on the Census: Mr. COX, of New York; Mr. MILLS, of Texas; Mr. STENGER, of Pennsylvania; Mr. LIGON, of Alabama; Mr. SMITH, of Georgia; Mr. CARLISLE, of Kentucky; Mr. HATCHER, of Missouri; Mr. BALLOU, of Rhode Island; Mr. JORGENSEN, of Virginia; Mr. RYAN, of Kansas; and Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon.

ELECTION CONTEST—O'CONNOR VS. CAIN.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to present resolutions in regard to the seating of several members of Congress. I will state that these are unanimous reports from the Committee of Elections. I offer resolutions first in the case from the second district of South Carolina.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That M. P. O'Connor is not entitled to a seat in this House as a member of the Forty-fifth Congress from the second district of South Carolina.

Resolved, That Hon. Richard H. Cain is entitled to retain the seat he now occupies as Representative from the second district of South Carolina in the Forty-fifth Congress.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTION CONTEST—LYNCH VS. CHALMERS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I now report the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That John R. Lynch is not entitled to a seat in this House as a member of the Forty-fifth Congress from the sixth district of Mississippi.

Resolved, That Hon. James R. Chalmers, the sitting member, was duly elected and is entitled to the seat occupied by him in this House as the Representative from the sixth district of Mississippi in the Forty-fifth Congress.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTION CONTEST—M'DOWELL VS. WILLIAMS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I also report from the Committee of Elections the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That Samuel W. McDowell is not entitled to a seat in this House as a member of the Forty-fifth Congress from the State of Oregon.

Resolved, That Hon. Richard Williams is entitled to retain the seat he now occupies as Representative from the State of Oregon in the Forty-fifth Congress.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at sixteen minutes after eleven o'clock, and the House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No 3547) to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers.

Mr. REAGAN. Before I proceed to the consideration of the other points in the bill I desire to say that there has been some objection made to the bill on account of what are supposed to be superfluous verbiage and unnecessary technicalities. The first bill introduced was not obnoxious to this objection; but the bill elaborated from that bill was prepared by a gentleman of great attainments and of great knowledge upon this subject, and the object was to cover all the technical difficulties.

While the committee at first was not satisfied with the bill, and thought that there was too much verbiage and too much technicality, a careful analysis developed the fact that we could not materially amend the bill unless we entirely recast it and retained the substance, and so we agreed to report the bill in the form in which it is now pending.

Mr. Speaker, the bill now presented by the Committee on Commerce "to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers" for the consideration of the House is one of much more than ordinary importance. It touches the interests of the whole country in every department of its business. It has a direct bearing on the cost of transportation of the twenty-five or thirty billions of dollars' worth of the internal commerce of the United States. It is designed to control the powers for evil of the seventy-five thousand miles of railroad in this country, carrying as they did in 1876 not less than eighteen billions of dollars' worth of this internal commerce, without abridging any of their necessary and legitimate rights or privileges. While leaving them in the full enjoyment of all their rights and privileges it is the aim of this bill to control and restrain and regulate their power to discriminate unjustly between shippers by charging different rates of freight to different persons for similar service, and by preventing them from allowing rebates and drawbacks in all cases, and by prohibiting them from doing injustice to individuals and communities by charging more for freight for a shorter than for a longer distance on the same line of transportation, and also by controlling some of the more odious powers of monopoly which pertain to the nature of railroad corporations.

A reference to some of the characteristics of our country, its products and commodities, may aid in giving an insight into our wonderful internal commerce. Our manufacturing establishments are for the most part in the northeastern States. It is estimated in the last number of the North American Review that our production of manufactures annually exceeds $3,000,000,000 in value. This vast product is largely dependent on railroad transportation for its markets along the South Atlantic seaboard, in the great valleys of the Mississippi and its mighty tributaries, around the Gulf of Mexico, on the great plains west of the Mississippi, and among the Rocky Mountains, and in the States and Territories on the Pacific slope.

The States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Missouri embrace the great grain and meat and provision producing portion of the country, from which the Eastern, Middle, and Southern States are largely supplied, mostly by railroad transportation. In addition to which we sent to the sea, to be exported to other countries, in 1876, $117,806,476 of breadstuffs, including 70,860,983 bushels of Indian corn, 40,325,611 bushels of wheat, and 3,343,665 barrels of flour. And during the same year we sent to the sea, mostly by railroad, for export to foreign countries, meats and provisions valued at $114,991,749, including 460,057,146 pounds of bacon and hams, 88,365,143 pounds of beef, 21,527,242 pounds of butter, 107,364,666 pounds of cheese, 234,741,233 pounds of lard, and 69,671,894 pounds of pork.

Of cotton produced in the Southern States and of manufactures of cotton we exported to foreign countries in the year 1877, in addition to the amount consumed in the United States, to the value of $181,954,349, including 3,394,724 pounds of sea-island cotton, 1,441,974,406 pounds of other cotton, most of which, with all the cotton consumed by our own manufactories, found its way to the sea and to the manufactories by railroad transportation.

And our total of foreign exports, which was for the year 1877 $602,475,220, found their way to the sea for the most part by means of railroads; and the imports of that year, $451,323,126, were carried to the interior of the country by the same means.

As illustrative of the question of what part of our vast internal commerce is carried by the railroads, I may mention that it is shown by the report on the internal commerce of the United States for 1876 that of the 197,766,052 bushels of grain which reached the ports of New York, Portland, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore that year from the West nearly 95 per cent. of it was carried over the railroads. Of course the proportion in favor of railroads is not so great in our whole trade. But it is estimated that of the twenty-five or thirty billion dollars' worth of our internal commerce over eigtheen billions of it is transported by rail.

It is necessary to contemplate the amount of our internal commerce and the proportion of it carried by railroads in order to realize the importance of legislation which would relieve it of unnecessary expense and burdens. And in this connection it is necessary that we should understand the character, uses, and powers of railroad corporations. They are necessarily monopolies to a large extent, and in all cases where they are not checked by competition or by legal restrictions, and it has been wisely said that with them competition is not probable where combination is possible. Our every-day experience and observation teach us the truth of this. Between centers of trade there may be competition, but along the greater part of the line of most railroads there is none, and there they must be controlled by law if they are to be controlled at all.

The objects which it is hoped to attain by the passage of this bill are few and easily understood:

First. It provides that freight rates and facilities shall be made equal to all shippers. We know this is not so now in very many cases.

Second. To this end it is provided that rebates and drawbacks shall not be allowed in any case.

Third. It is provided that the gross amount of charges shall not be greater for a shorter than for a longer distance on the same line of transportation.

Fourth. It provides against combinations by individuals or corporations to defeat the objects of the bill.

Fifth. It requires schedules of the rates of freight and charges to be posted up, so that all shippers may know the rates they are required to pay.

Sixth. Where rates are fixed for local commerce within a State the State rates are required to be posted up, and the transportation companies are forbidden to charge more per ton per mile for interstate freights than they charge for State freights. This requirement to post up the schedules of the State rates of freight is a necessary means to enforce equality in freight rates, and is in no way intended to regulate or control those State rates or the commerce of a State.

Seventh. Provisions are also made in the bill for its efficient enforcement in the courts.

Eighth. It is declared to be unlawful to do anything prohibited by the bill or to refuse to do anything required to be done by it; and persons violating the act would be liable to any party injured thereby in an amount equal to three times the damage sustained, to be recovered in any circuit or district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the case; and shall for each offense forfeit and pay a penalty of not less than $1,000, to be recovered by the United States, by action in any circuit or district court having jurisdiction, one-half of such penalty, when collected, to be paid to the informer; and such suits may be of either equitable or legal jurisdiction. In equity suits discovery and affirmative relief may be obtained, and preliminary or final injunctions may be granted, upon proper application, restraining, forbidding, and prohibiting the commission or continuance of any acts, matters, or things within the terms or purview of the act, without allegation or proof of damage to any plaintiff or complainant. This is done on the principle that the courts may, in a proper case made, require that to be done which the law commands and prohibit that which the law forbids.

Ninth. It is also provided that the provisions of the bill shall not apply to quantities of merchandise less than a car-load when carried by railroad, or less than a ton when carried by other means of conveyance, except that the rates shall be equal to all for like service; that the Government freights may be carried for lower rates than are accorded to the general public, and that the provisions of the bill shall not embrace the transportation of articles which may be carried free, or at lower than schedule rates, for charitable purposes, or to or from public fairs or expositions for purposes of exhibition.

I present as some of the evidences to show the popular demand for the passage of a law on this subject the following resolutions which were communicated by the governor of Pennsylvania to the Senators and Representatives of that State in Congress and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Harrisburgh, February 15, 1878.

Resolved, (if the senate concur.) That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives be requested to vote for the passage of an act to provide for equity in the rates of freight upon certain property carried totally or partially by railroad in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States and Territories, and to prevent violent and injurious fluctuation and unjust discrimination in such commerce, and for other purposes.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to present a copy of the foregoing reso-

The following are the resolutions and action of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania:

PITTSBURGH, November 26, 1877.

DEAR SIR: At the regular board-meeting of the directors of the Chamber of Commerce held this day the committee on transportation and railroads made the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

Your committee respectfully present with a favorable recommendation House bill No. 674, "to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discrimination by common carriers," presented in Congress October 29, by Mr. REAGAN, and ask the passage of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Pittsburgh considers House bill No. 674, "to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers," presented by Mr. REAGAN, (a copy of which was sent to the chamber for consideration by Mr. ERRETT,) a step in the right direction, and respectfully ask our Representatives in Congress to support it and urge its passage.

Your committee would also recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Pittsburgh are due, and are hereby tendered, to Hon. JOHN H. REAGAN, for his efforts to correct the unjust discrimination by railroads, whereby our manufacturing and commercial interests are so disastrously affected.

J. K. MOORHEAD,
President.
N. GRATTAN MURPHY,
Superintendent Chamber of Commerce.

Hon. THOMAS M. BAYNE,
Washington, D. C.

The following is the petition of the members of the Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, the names omitted:

To the honorable the members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned merchants and citizens of the city of Milwaukee respectfully petition your honorable bodies to appoint a joint committee for the purpose of investigating the workings of the interstate railroad system of the United States. The interests of the producers and merchants of the United States are systematically disregarded; the rates charged are, in many instances, out of all proportion; favoritism to individual shippers, by which one person, firm, or place is built up at the expense of another, largely prevails, and there is a general lack of uniformity and system which ought to govern the administration of all great public trusts of this nature. Your petitioners therefore pray that early action be taken to investigate the whole subject in its various bearings, and report at the next session of Congress, or sooner if practicable.

The following are the proceedings of the Board of Trade of the city of New York, which I read in full on account of their valuable suggestions, adding that it may become necessary to have such a board of commissioners as is recommended. But that should, if proper, be the subject of a separate bill. I also notice that this board of trade seems to have fallen into the same error with reference to the pending bill that members of this House fell into, that the bill provides for pro rata rates of freight. This doubtless arose from a misunderstanding of the fourth section of the bill. It contains no such provision:

At the monthly meeting of the directors of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, held April 10, the following report and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

To the directors of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation:

The committee on railroad transportation respectfully report upon bill No. 3347 for the regulation of interstate commerce, introduced in the House of Representatives by Hon. JOHN H. REAGAN, that in most of its provisions the bill seems wise and practicable. Especially is this true of those sections which provide a tariff of rates which shall be uniform to all shippers, and prohibits special contracts in every form; also the publication of such tariff, so that the public generally may be familiar with the rates. Your committee believe that common carriers have no right to discriminate in favor of one person or firm at the expense of another, for it is manifest that such a power wielded on a large scale tends to crush out enterprise on the part of the smaller class of merchants; in short, to make the rich richer and the poor poorer. In examining this subject a different principle is involved from that which regulates the business of individuals or private manufacturing corporations. Transportation companies are semi-public in their nature; many of them are granted the right of eminent domain, which to private corporations is not granted, and as they are in fact improved public highways they must be governed by the principle of the "king's highway," which is that all classes have equal rights thereon. While it may not be practicable in the transportation of freight to apply the same rules which govern the management of our postal system, namely, that a single letter shall be carried as cheaply as a hundred or a thousand, it is both practicable and necessary that a quantity line shall be drawn, beyond which no shipper shall receive a lower rate. Mr. Albert Fink, a railway expert, who possesses in an eminent degree the confidence of both railroad managers and the mercantile public, has suggested that this line should be drawn at the quantity of one car-load, and has given his reasons for this as follows:

"I do not think that a common carrier has the legal right to enter into special contract with manufacturing establishments to carry freight at less rate than for the public generally, for the purpose of encouraging the erection of such establishments on the line of its road. It is not the province of railroad companies to make themselves partners in private enterprises. Even if they had the legal right, it is questionable whether it would be good policy for them to do so. Nor do I think it right that common carriers should make special contracts on account of the quantity shipped, except when quantity forms an element in the cost of the transportation service, and this is only the case when the quantities are less than car-loads. It does not cost more to carry ten car-loads of freight between two stations, A and B, for one shipper than it costs to carry one car-load for each of ten shippers. The railroad company derives as much benefit from ten small manufacturing establishments as from one large one of the capacity of ten smaller ones. If the railroad company grants to the larger establishments lower rates of transportation, it would unjustly discriminate against parties with limited means, and be of no benefit to the railroad company. A common carrier should strictly adhere to the rule to charge the same rate for transportation for the same articles between the same points, only discriminating on account of quantity as far as it influences the cost of transportation. He should not make any arbitrary distinctions merely depending upon his will."

Your committee, however, are of the opinion that the very large class of shippers who send less than one car-load at a time are entitled to much more equitable treatment than they have in the past received. This part of the commercial public, in numbers probably exceeding by tenfold those who are able to ship quantities of one car-load and upward, are entitled to have their rights considered and the difference between a car-load rate and a smaller quantity so defined that they shall not pay more than the difference which it costs to transport a smaller quantity. How great and unreasonable a difference is now made between different classes of shippers is shown from the following figures:

The winter schedule rate from New York to Syracuse is 50 cents per 100 pounds for first-class goods, 40 cents for second-class, 34 cents for third-class, and 23 cents for fourth-class (the summer rate being 47 cents, 40 cents, 34 cents, and 23 cents,) and these rates the great mass of people have to pay; but a few favored wholesale dealers in Syracuse are given contracts by which all classes of goods are carried for 12 cents per hundred pounds, as against the 50, 40, 34, and 23, which the public generally have to pay; and the same is true of all the other jobbing centers of the State. The same principle also holds good in the treatment which the great mass of the people of the State of Illinois, and indeed all other Western States, are forced to submit to. The reduced rates of the pooled lines to Chicago are now 75 cents per hundred for first-class, 60 cents for second-class, 50 cents for third-class, and 40 cents for fourth-class, (lately $1, 80, 60, and 45,) while favored parties have been given contracts running through the year at 25 cents per hundred on all classes.

Careful examination of this subject by competent men will enable this difference to be fairly defined, and in this connection your committee would call attention to the great necessity which exists for constant and careful examination and supervision of our complex and defective transportation system. A very important bill has been agreed upon by the committee on railroads of the house of representatives naming three competent commissioners to adjust the terms of the interchange of traffic between the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific Railroads. The persons named in the bill, Messrs. Adams, Fink and Cooley, are of the highest character, but your committee would respectfully suggest that the third ought to be an experienced merchant, in order that the great commercial interest may be fairly represented. The principal defect in the Reagan bill is that it does not provide such a board of commissioners to supervise the workings of the interstate railroad system of the United States. Your committee believe such a board to be an absolute necessity, and also that auxiliary State boards should be provided in every State to superintend the workings of the railroads exclusively within the limits of such States. In no other way, in the opinion of your committee, can the administration of our highways be adjusted with proper regard for all interests, and your committee would respectfully recommend to this board the following resolution:

Resolved, That the bill for the regulation of interstate commerce introduced by Hon. JOHN H. REAGAN, and which is now pending in the House of Representatives, in most of its provisions meets with the hearty approval of this board; but we are of the opinion that in order to make it effective a board of competent commissioners should be provided to supervise its workings. Further, that the "pro rata" feature of said bill, though equitable in principle, is so difficult to put into practical operation that it may safely be omitted for the present.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

The New York Chamber of Commerce advised the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh to obtain signatures to a petition to Congress as follows:

The undersigned merchants and citizens respectfully petition your honorable bodies to appoint a joint committee for the purpose of investigating the workings of the interstate railway system of the United States. The interests of the producers and merchants of the United States are systematically disregarded; the rates charged are, in many instances, out of all proportion; favoritism to individual shippers, by which one person, firm, or place is built up at the expense of another, largely prevails, and there is a general lack of uniformity and system which ought to govern the administration of all great public trusts of this nature. Your petitioners, therefore, pray that early action be taken to investigate the whole subject in its various bearings, and report at the next session of Congress or sooner, if practicable.

I also read the following extract from an article in the Railroad Gazette of March 8, 1878, a paper not at all unfriendly to railroads:

The chief object of this bill seems to be to secure all shippers in their common-law right against discriminations by common carriers; to make it impossible for one man, firm, or corporation to get rates which may not be had by every other shipper. So far as this purpose is concerned it is entirely commendable, and any means which will succeed in carrying it out effectively will, in many respects, be an advantage to the railroads as well as to the public. The railroad wars of late years have to a great extent owed their severity and persistence to the practice of making time contracts, by which the companies have assumed to give certain parties extremely low rates for months to come, even after rates to the general public had been advanced. What a terrible discrimination against the non-contracting shippers may be made in this way need not be explained; but the demer-alizing effect on rates is a natural and inevitable consequence which the railroads have suffered from terribly. If it were once settled that there could be no "private terms" for railroad transportation; if the rates contracted for to one shipper for a given period by that act became rates open to the general public for the whole of that period, we would see, if not an end to the cutting of rates, at least a very conservative conduct with regard to them.

I lay down these principles in support of this bill:

1. That railroads receive their franchises from the public for the public good as well as for the profit of the stockholders.

2. That monopolies and perpetuities are contrary to the genius of a free people, and cannot be allowed or maintained in this country.

3. That the political authority of this country cannot, either in the States or Congress, create a power, whether corporate or otherwise, superior to the power and authority of the people themselves; one which may oppress and wrong them without lawful remedy and control; for all power is inherent in the people and all just and legal government is designed to promote the public welfare.

4. That railroad corporations are in an important sense public corporations, and are always recognized as quasi-public corporations.

This is so:

5. Because they are created by the public political authority to promote the public good.

6. Because, for the purposes of their being, they are clothed with the right of eminent domain. And this cannot be conferred under our constitutional form of government on private persons or for private uses. Private property can only be taken for public uses and upon just compensation.

7. Railroad companies and others engaged in the general transportation of merchandise are carriers for hire.

8. They are engaged in a public employment affecting the public interest.

9. Hence they are subject to regulation and control by the political authority.

To these undeniable principles as they exist under our Constitution and at common law, and as they are recognized by Federal and State statutes, is added the clause of the Constitution which gives Congress authority "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." And this power to regulate commerce among the several States was vested in Congress in order to secure equality and freedom in commercial intercourse against discriminating State legislation. Without this power in Congress to regulate commerce among the several States it would be in the power of any State to discriminate against and embarrass and emburden the commerce of other States passing through it, or to wholly interdict the passage of the commerce of other States through its territory. And such a condition of things would lead, as it did during colonial times and during the existence of the confederation, to hostile and discriminating legislation of State against State, and would not fail to retard the growth and injure the prosperity of the country, and to inflict almost incalculable evils on the people.

Another very grave question must be determined. No one pretends that the States can regulate interstate commerce. If, then, Congress cannot or will not do this, the twenty-five billion dollars' worth of our internal commerce, or so much of it at least as is interstate commerce, is to be left to the mercy of the common carriers. And as to much the greater part of this the seventy-five thousand miles of railroad in the country, by the power of monopoly and at the dictate of greed and avarice, may impose any terms and make any discriminations for and against individuals and communities they see proper. Either this or wholesome regulation by Congress for the protection of the people against such wrongs is the alternative before us. And none of us can escape the responsibility of taking one side or the other of this question.

And why shall we not regulate this interstate commerce by railroads? We have regulated commerce on the rivers, the bays, the lakes of the country, and on the oceans, all along through the existence of the Government. Steamboats and ships are as much private property and are as fully owned under the authority of the States as railroads are. What is it that constitutes the sacredness of a railroad and puts it above political control and out of the reach of law? Will some one tell us? We regulate interstate commerce on the public waters of the United States carried by vessels, and these waters are free alike to all vessels. There is no monopoly of them. In the early years of the Government we had no railroads; now the railroads carry two-thirds or three-fourths of all the commerce of the country. Each of them has a monopoly of the carrying business on its road.

Unless restrained by law each of them may charge unjust and extortionate rates of freight; may charge one person twice as much as another for equal service; may allow drawbacks to some persons and refuse them to others; may charge high rates of freight to some communities and low rates of freight to others; may thus injure or break up some persons and some communities while they benefit or enrich others; and railroad officials may combine with citizens or with other corporations or may form rings which will enable them to control particular branches of trade for their own profit and to the injury of other citizens or corporations or communities. And all these things they do now. And yet we are told there is something about them too sacred to be touched by law in the interest of the people from whose patronage they draw all their revenues; that the claims of justice and of common honesty are to be silent under the majesty of their power.

It is also said in opposition to this bill that by passing it we assail and deny the rights of the States; that we abridge their sovereignty. If this were so I should regard it as a fatal objection to the bill. But we cannot determine a question like this by general declaration. We have right to inquire how it would violate the rights or abridge the sovereignty of any State. What particular right or power which now belongs to the States would be taken from them by this bill? We do not by it give power to interfere in any way with State commerce. The States may exercise every right and would remain in possession of every power after this bill should become a law which they now have. It simply proposes to do through Congress what the States cannot do, whether this bill shall be passed or not. While this bill proposes to correct great and manifest abuses by preventing unjust discriminations between shippers and by securing equality of terms to them, it imposes no unjust or even inconvenient burdens on common carriers. It does not attempt to fix freight rates, but only to require equality and fairness in them.

Another objection which has been made to this bill is that the greater portion of the railroads were chartered by the States, and that because of this the Federal Government cannot regulate the commerce which passes over them without an interference with State institutions, which it is insisted cannot be permitted. If this objection is well taken then a State may by its action in creating a corporation annul and render nugatory the provision of the Federal Constitution which authorizes Congress to regulate commerce among the States. Surely such an absurdity cannot be successfully insisted on to defeat a great necessary and beneficent act of legislation. The constitutional power of Congress over this subject is complete and exclusive, as shown by numerous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States all along through the history of the Federal Government.

It is proper also that I should say that there is not a provision in this bill which is not in accordance with and sustained by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. And I will refer briefly to some of the cases.

On the subject of the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, Mr. Chief-Justice Marshall said, in the case of Ogden vs. Gibbons, page 189 of the report, that—

> The subject to be regulated is commerce; and our Constitution being, as was aptly said at the bar, one of enumeration and not of definition, to ascertain the extent of the power it becomes necessary to settle the meaning of the word. The counsel for the appellee would limit it to traffic, to buying and selling or the interchange of commodities, and do not admit that it comprehends navigation. They would restrict a general term, applicable to many objects, to one of its significations. Commerce undoubtedly is traffic, but it is something more: it is intercourse. It describes the commercial intercourse between nations and parts of nations, in all its branches, and is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse.

In what is known as the license cases, 5 Howard, 504, 599, Mr. Justice Catron, in speaking of the powers of Congress in this respect, says:

> The power given to Congress is unrestricted, and broad as the subjects to which it relates; it extends to all lawful commerce with foreign nations, and, in the same terms, to all lawful commerce among the States; and "among" means between two only, as well as among more than two; if it was otherwise, then an intermediate State might interdict and obstruct the transportation of imports over it to a third State, and thereby impair the general power.

In the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, page 227 of the report, Mr. Justice Johnson, speaking both of the extent and exclusiveness of the power, says that "the power to regulate commerce here meant to be granted was that power to regulate commerce which previously existed in the States;" that is before the adoption of the Constitution; and he says that the power "must be exclusive; and hence the grant of this power carries with it the whole subject, leaving nothing for the States to act upon."

And Chief-Justice Marshall, in the same case, page 196, says:

> We are now arrived at the inquiry, what is this power? It is the power to regulate; that is, to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed. This power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution.

In the case of Brown vs. Maryland, 12 Wheaton, 419, 446, Chief-Justice Marshall says:

> What, then, is the just extent of a power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States?
> This question was considered in the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wheat. Rep., 1, in which it was declared to be complete in itself, and to acknowledge no limitations other than are prescribed by the Constitution. The power is coextensive with the subject on which it acts, and cannot be stopped at the external boundary of a State, but must enter its interior.

In the case of the city of New York vs. Miln, 11 Peters, 102, 157, Mr. Justice Story says:

> It has been argued that the power of Congress to regulate commerce is not exclusive, but concurrent with that of the States. If this were a new question in this court, wholly untouched by doctrine or decision, I should not hesitate to go into a full examination of all the grounds upon which concurrent authority is attempted to be maintained. But in point of fact the whole argument on this very question, as presented by the learned counsel on the present occasion, was presented by the learned counsel who argued the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wheaton R., 1; and it was then deliberately examined and deemed inadmissible by the court. Mr. Chief-Justice Marshall, with his accustomed accuracy and fullness of illustration, reviewed at that time the whole grounds of the controversy; and from that time to the present the question has been considered (as far as I know) to be at rest. The power given to Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the States, has been deemed exclusive, from the nature and objects of the power and the necessary implications growing out of its exercise. Full power to regulate a particular subject implies the whole power and leaves no residuum; and a grant of the whole to one is incompatible with a grant to another of a part.

In the case of Grover vs. Slaughter, 15 Peters, 449, 511, Mr. Justice Baldwin says:

That the power of Congress "to regulate commerce among the several States" is exclusive of any interference by the States, has been, in my opinion, conclusively settled by the solemn opinions of this court in Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wheat., 186, 222, and in Brown vs. Maryland, 12 Wheat., 438, 446. If these decisions are not to be taken as the established construction of this clause of the Constitution, I know of none which are not yet open to doubt; nor can there be any adjudications of this court which must be considered as authoritative upon any question, if these are not to be so on this.

In the case of Corfield vs. Coryell, 4 Washington Cir. C. R., 344, 378, as early as 1823, Mr. Justice Washington says:

Commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, can mean nothing more than intercourse with those nations, and among those States, for the purposes of trade, be the object of the trade what it may; and this intercourse must include all the means by which it can be carried on, whether by the free navigation of the waters of the several States, or by a passage overland through the States, where such passage becomes necessary to the commercial intercourse between the States. It is this intercourse which Congress is invested with the power of regulating, and with which no State has a right to interfere.

Again, in the great case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wheaton, 1, 229, Chief-Justice Marshall in 1824 says:

Commerce, in its amplest signification, means an exchange of goods; but in the advancement of society labor, transportation, intelligence, care, and various mediums of exchange, become commodities, and enter into commerce; the subject, the vehicle, the agent, and their various operations, become the objects of commercial regulation. Ship-building, the carrying trade, and propagation of seamen, are such vital agents of commercial prosperity that the nation which could not legislate over these subjects would not possess power to regulate commerce.

That such was the understanding of the framers of the Constitution is conspicuous from provisions contained in that instrument.

These cases, and very many others which might be cited, show conclusively that Congress has power, and the sole and exclusive power, to pass laws providing for equality in rates of freight to be paid by different owners of property, to be carried by railroads or other common carriers, in commerce between different States or with foreign nations; and to provide that such different owners shall have equal advantages and facilities as to the carriage of such property. And this is what it is proposed to do by this bill.

I desire also, in connection with the foregoing cases, to show from authority the power of Congress to enact the part of the fourth section of this bill, beginning at the seventh line of the section; that is, that Congress, while it has no power to regulate the internal trade of a State, has the power to regulate commerce between the different States or with foreign nations with reference to trade carried on in a single State; that Congress has power, for instance, to provide that freight charges on interstate commerce shall be no greater than charges for similar services performed as to property carried wholly within one State.

In the case of Welton vs. The State of Missouri, 1 Otto, 275, 280, the question arose as to the right of the State of Missouri to impose a license tax upon persons selling property not the produce of that State, when no such license was required from persons selling similar property the produce of the State. Mr. Justice Field, in pronouncing the opinion of the court, holding that to impose such a tax was in conflict with the power vested in Congress to regulate commerce, &c., says:

Commerce is a term of the largest import. It comprehends intercourse for the purpose of trade in any and all its forms, including the transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities between the citizens of our country and the citizens or subjects of other countries, and between the citizens of different States. The power to regulate it embraces all the instruments by which such commerce may be conducted. So far as some of these instruments are concerned, and some subjects which are local in their operation, it has been held that the States may provide regulations until Congress acts with reference to them; but where the subject to which the power applies is national in its character, or of such a nature as to admit of uniformity of regulation, the power is exclusive of all State authority.

It will not be denied that that portion of commerce with foreign countries and between the States which consists in transportation and exchange of commodities is of national importance, and admits and requires uniformity of regulation. The very object of investing this power in the General Government was to insure this uniformity against discriminating State legislation.

In the case of the State freight tax, 15 Wallace, 232, 275, the Supreme Court of the United States held as follows:

The transportation of freight or of the subjects of commerce is a constituent part of commerce itself. A tax upon freight transported from State to State is a regulation of commerce among the States.

Whenever subjects, in regard to which a power to regulate commerce is asserted, are in their nature national, or admit of one uniform system or plan of regulation, they are exclusively within the regulating control of Congress.

Transportation of passengers or merchandise through a State, or from one State to another, is of this nature.

Hence a statute of a State imposing a tax upon freight taken up within the State and carried out of it, or taken up without the State and brought within it, is repugnant to that provision of the Constitution of the United States which ordains that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.

The questions arose in respect to the power to thus tax railroad companies as well as other parties, and the decision is applicable, therefore, to the question of the means of transport as well as to the question of general power. Mr. Justice Strong, in pronouncing the opinion of the court, says:

Beyond all question the transportation of freight, or of the subjects of commerce for the purpose of exchange or sale, is a constituent of commerce itself. This has never been doubted, and probably the transportation of articles of trade from one State to another was the prominent idea in the minds of the framers of the Constitution, when to Congress was committed the power to regulate commerce among the several States. A power to prevent embarrassing restrictions by any State was the thing desired. The power was given by the same words and in the same clause by which was conferred power to regulate commerce with foreign nations. It would be absurd to suppose that the transmission of the subjects of trade from the State to the buyer, or from the place of production to the market was not contemplated, for without that there could be no consummated trade, either with foreign nations or among States. In his work on the Constitution, Judge Story asserts that the sense in which the word "commerce" is used in that instrument includes not only traffic, but intercourse and navigation. And in the Passenger case it was said, "Commerce consists in selling the superfluity, in purchasing articles of necessity, as well productions as manufactures, in buying from one nation and selling to another, or in transporting the merchandise from the seller to the buyer, to gain the freight." Nor does it make any difference whether this interchange of commodities is by land or water. In either case the bringing of the goods from the seller to the buyer is commerce. Among the States it must have been principally by land when the Constitution was adopted.

And see Erie Railway Company vs. Pennsylvania, 15 Wallace, 232, holding the same doctrine, and reversing the cases of The Commonwealth vs. The Erie Railway Company, and other cases, 62 Pa., 280.

In the Granger cases (Munn vs. Illinois, 4 Otto, 113; Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad vs. Iowa, 4 Otto, 155; Peik vs. Chicago, &c., Railroad Company, 4 Otto, 164; Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railroad Company vs. Ackley, 4 Otto, 179; Winona and Saint Peter Railway Company vs. Blake, 4 Otto, 180) the nature and exclusiveness of the power of Congress to legislate as to rates of freight in interstate commerce is especially recognized and virtually established. The fundamental doctrine of the cases proceeds upon the idea that when the means by which freight or charges are earned are public in their nature it is within the power of the Legislature having control over the subject to regulate and fix the rates of such freight and charges. Some of the subjects in those cases were under the legislative power of a single State. As it is above most clearly established, interstate commerce, its means, the property carried in it, and all things relating to it, are, in all the aspects here considered, under the supreme and exclusive power of Congress. If rates of freight and charges can be fixed by State Legislatures with respect to subjects under their power, a fortiori can they be regulated and made equal, by the supreme and exclusive power of Congress, as to subjects in this respect within its exclusive control. Indeed, this is directly recognized in the cases last referred to, and (as will be seen below) it is put beyond doubt that, should Congress act in regulation of rates of freight, &c., in interstate commerce, it would unquestionably have power to do so, and its power would be supreme and exclusive.

These cases settle these points, among others:

1. That "railroad companies are carriers for hire," that "they are engaged in a public employment affecting the public interest," and that, "unless protected by their charters, they are subject to legislative control as to their rates of fare and freight."

2. That where warehouses or railroads are used in an employment affecting public interests as to business "carried on exclusively within a State, she may, as a matter of domestic concern, prescribe regulations for them," notwithstanding such property is "used as an instrument by those engaged in interstate, as well as in State, commerce; and, until Congress acts in reference to their interstate relations such regulations can be enforced, even though they may indirectly operate upon commerce beyond her immediate jurisdiction." But "the court does not hold that a case may not arise in which it may be found that a State has, under the form of regulating her own affairs, encroached upon the exclusive domain of Congress in respect to interstate commerce."

And, as has been said, the cases recognize the whole subject as one properly of legislative regulation, and so far as relates to interstate commerce, as under the supreme and exclusive power of Congress, whenever Congress shall choose to exercise its undoubted power.

And see Sherlock vs. Alling, 3 Otto, 99.

II. Nor is there any doubt as to the power of Congress to exercise this power over railroads and the interstate commerce of which they form a means, whether the property be wholly or partly carried by one railroad.

1. This must appear from the cases last cited and under the general principles above referred to. But it directly and more conclusively, if possible, appears from the authorities about to be cited.

2. The power extends to railroads and the property carried upon them in interstate commerce, whether the property be carried in more than one State by one railroad or only in one State by one railroad if the part of the carriage be a part of one continuous interstate carriage.

That the power extends to one, and any such means of carriage, part of a continuous line of carriage, is expressly recognized in the Granger cases above referred to.

See especially Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad vs. Iowa, 4 Otto., 155.

This is expressly held (to cite it again) in the case of The State Freight-tax, 15 Wallace, 282, 273. There the attempt, as the court held, was to tax the freight—the interstate business, in substance—and the law provided for such taxation where the property was carried by different but continuous lines. The continuity of the carriage, the substance of the carriage as being in interstate commerce, and the act of the carrier as being wholly or part of such interstate carriage were held by the court (see page 273 of the report) to be the substantial features which took the subject from without and placed it beyond State action, placed it under the supreme and exclusive power of Congress.

In the Daniel Ball, 10 Wallace, 557, the question arose as to the character of the Grand River, in Michigan, and whether a steamboat employed solely on that river was, in certain aspects, under the control of Congress. The case involved the precise question as to the character of a carriage performed within one State, and by one means, but part of a continuous interstate carriage. The court held as follows:

"The steamer in this case being employed in transporting goods on Grand River, within the State of Michigan, destined for other States, and goods brought from without the limits of Michigan and destined to places within that State, was engaged in commerce between the States, and however limited that commerce was, so far as it went subject to the legislation of Congress. She was employed as an instrument of that commerce; for whenever a commodity has begun to move as an article of trade from one State to another, commerce in that commodity between the States has commenced. The fact that several different and independent agencies are employed in transporting the commodity, some acting entirely within one State and some acting through two or more States, does not affect the character of the transaction. To the extent to which each agency acts in that transportation, it is subject to the regulation of Congress."

And see the Montello, 11 Wallace, 411; The General Cass, 1 Brown's Ad. R. 334.

That the power extends to railroads is beyond question under express decision.

In Railroad Company vs. Richmond, 19 Wallace, 584, the question was as to the effect of two certain acts of Congress, one authorizing railroad companies to receive compensation for certain property carried from one State to another, to connect with other roads so as to form continuous lines, &c., and one to maintain a bridge over the Mississippi, and lay tracks over such bridge, and for the more perfect connection of such roads by means of the bridge. The question was as to the effect of these laws upon a private contract between a railroad company and an individual. The acts were regarded as valid under the power of Congress to regulate commerce.

Mr. Justice Field, in delivering the opinion of the court, says:

"These acts were passed under the power vested in Congress to regulate commerce among the several States, and were designed to remove trammels upon transportation between different States, which had previously existed, and to prevent the creation of such trammels in future, and to facilitate railway transportation by authorizing the construction of bridges over the navigable waters of the Mississippi. But they were intended to reach trammels interposed by State enactments or by existing laws of Congress. * * * The power to regulate commerce among the several States was vested in Congress in order to secure equality and freedom in commercial intercourse against discriminating State legislation."

The more direct and perhaps stronger case, for it will be observed of course that the case last cited, as well as others before cited, relates to the power of Congress over railroads, is the case of The Clinton Bridge, 10 Wallace, 454. The case arose in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Iowa. Gray vs. The Clinton Bridge, 1 Woolworth, 150; S. C., 16 Am. L. Reg., 149.

The questions were with respect to an act of Congress of February 17, 1867, as to a bridge erected by a railroad company across the Mississippi River, at Clinton, in the State of Iowa. In commenting upon the act Mr. Justice Miller, of the Supreme Court of the United States, in deciding the case, says:

"The second of these objections involves consideration of the commercial clause, as it is appropriately called, of the Constitution.

"If the determination of the circumstances under which a bridge may be built over a navigable stream or the prescribing general rules on that subject is a regulation of commerce, either with foreign nations or among the States, then it falls within the powers conferred on Congress by that clause.

"It would be sufficient in this court to say that we are concluded on this question by the decision of the Supreme Court in that branch of the Wheeling Bridge case, already referred to, in 18 Howard, which expressly holds that the power to declare such a bridge a lawful structure is included within the clause of the Constitution above cited. That case was, however, decided by a court equally divided, and its authority has been much questioned.

"I think, however, that the proposition is well founded in principle. The power to regulate commerce is one of the most useful of all those confided to the Federal Government, and its exercise has done as much to create and to foster that community of interest which constitutes the strongest bond of nationality as the exercise of any other power belonging to the General Government. The want of this power was one of the strongest necessities which led to the formation of the Constitution. The clause has always received at the hands of the courts and of Congress a construction tending liberally to promote its beneficent object.

"The power to regulate commerce is a power to regulate the instruments of commerce. In the case of Cooley vs. The Board of Wardens, 12 Howard, 316, the court says that 'the power to regulate navigation is the power to prescribe rules in conformity with which navigation must be carried on. It extends to the persons who conduct it, as well as to the instruments used.' Navigation is here spoken of as one of the subjects of legislation included within the power to regulate commerce. In this view of the subject, Congress has passed statutes regulating steamboats, their construction, equipment, officers and crew, prescribing qualifications of pilots and engineers, limiting the number of passengers they may carry, and laying down the signals they shall use in passing each other, and, in short, has prescribed a minute code for building and navigating those vessels. The right to do this depends wholly upon the power vested in Congress to regulate commerce, and has never been disputed.

"Navigation, however, is only one of the elements of commerce. It is an element of commerce, because it affords the means of transporting passengers and merchandise, the interchange of which is commerce itself. Any other mode of effecting this would be as much an element of commerce as navigation. When this transportation or interchange of commodities is carried on by land, it is commerce as well as when carried on by water; and the power of Congress to regulate it is as ample in one case as in the other. The 'commerce among States' spoken of in the Constitution must at the time that instrument was adopted have been mainly of this character, for the steamboat, which has created our great internal commerce on the rivers, was then unknown.

"Another means of transportation, equal in importance to the steamboat, has also come into existence since the Constitution was adopted, a means by which merchandise is transported across states and kingdoms in the same vehicle in which it started. The railroad now shares with the steamboat the monopoly of the carrying trade. The one has with great benefit been subjected to the control of salutary congressional legislation, because it is an instrument of commerce. Is there any reason why the other should not? However this question may be answered in regard to that commerce which is conducted wholly within the limits of a State, and is therefore neither foreign commerce nor commerce among the States, it seems to me that when these roads become parts of great highways of our Union, transporting a commerce which embraces many States, and destined, as some of these roads are, to become the channels through which the nations of Europe and Asia shall interchange their commodities, there can be no reason to doubt that to regulate them is to regulate commerce, both with foreign nations and among the States; and that to refuse to do this is a refusal to discharge one of the most important duties of the Federal Government. As already intimated, the shackles with which the different States fettered commerce in their selfish efforts to benefit themselves at the expense of their confederates was one of the main causes which led to the formation of our present Constitution. The wonderful growth of that commerce since it has been placed exclusively under the control of the Federal Government has justified the wisdom of our fathers. But are we to remit the most valuable part of that commerce again to the control of the States, and to all the consequent vexations and burdens which the States may impose through whose territories it must be carried on? And must all this be permitted because the carrying is done by a method not thought of when the Constitution was framed?

"For myself, I must say that I have no doubt of the right of Congress to prescribe all needful and proper regulations for the conduct of this immense traffic over any railroad which has voluntarily become part of one of those lines of interstate communication, or to authorize the creation of such roads, when the purposes of interstate transportation of persons and property justify or require it."

Upon the appeal of this case to the Supreme Court of the United States, the decision of the circuit court was affirmed. (The Clinton bridge, 10 Wall., 454, 462.) And Mr. Justice Nelson, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court, says:

"The act of Congress in the case of the Wheeling bridge, whose language it is sought to distinguish from that used in the present one, was more explicit but not more comprehensive. In the Wheeling bridge case the court had rendered a decree directing the obstruction to be removed by elevating the bridge, or, if not, by abatement. No doubt the existence of this decree, which was in the process of execution, led to the very specific terms of the act. But with all its particularity, it is not more comprehensive or decisive in legalizing the bridges than the one before us.

"The questions whether or not it was competent for Congress to interfere and legalize the bridge under the power to regulate commerce, and whether or not the act put an end to the pending suit, were questions examined and settled in the affirmative in the case already referred to. The reasons for the conclusions arrived at will be there found, and need not be repeated."

In the very late case of The Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad Company vs. Husen, (Chicago Legal News, February 2, 1878,) the subject has been again under consideration in the Supreme Court of the United States. The question was as to the power of a State to pass a law prohibiting the driving of cattle into the State of Missouri in certain months of the year, and it arose in the particular case with respect to the applicability of the statute to railroads. Mr. Justice Strong, in pronouncing the opinion of the court, says:

"It is a plain regulation of interstate commerce; a regulation extending to prohibition. Whatever may be the power of a State over commerce that is completely internal, it can no more prohibit or regulate that which is interstate, than it can that which is with foreign nations. Power over one is given by the Constitution of the United States to Congress in the same words in which it is given over the other, and is necessarily exclusive. That the transportation of property from one State to another is a branch of interstate commerce is undeniable. * * * The Missouri statute is a plain interference with such transportation. * * * But even the right of steamboat-owners and railroad companies to transport such property through the State is loaded by the law with onerous liabilities because of their agency in the transportation. * * * Transportation is essential to commerce, or rather it is commerce itself; and every obstacle to it, or burden laid upon it, by legislative authority, is regulation."

And the court holds that the statute is a "plain intrusion upon the exclusive domain of Congress," but, of course, recognises as unquestionable the power of Congress, its exclusive and supreme power to pass such laws—all laws which are "regulations," under the broad definition it gives the word—a definition broad enough to include the whole subject in its every detail—relating to railroads and all means of transportation used in interstate or foreign commerce.

And see Hall vs. De Cuir (Chicago Legal News, February 2, 1878) for another very late decision of the Supreme Court of the United States bearing on the whole subject. And see cases cited above.

It therefore must be regarded as decided beyond possibility of doubt that Congress has power to regulate interstate commerce, when carried on wholly or partly by one railroad or more, or by one railroad with any other method of carriage, and to regulate it by providing for equality of freights, and in other charges—that as to this subject its power is as supreme and exclusive as it is as to many other subjects over which its powers are supreme and exclusive, which it would serve no practical purpose, and would require much space, here fully to enumerate.

The power of Congress being thus established—it being established that such power is exclusive, supreme, not only in its scope, but in the conclusiveness with which Congress can determine as to the propriety, the expediency of any regulation within its power to adopt, and that it is within the power of Congress to regulate rates of freight and other charges in the carrying on of interstate or foreign commerce, it must follow, as a matter of necessary consequence, that it can provide that such rates and charges shall be no greater than rates per mile, or than other charges for similar services, performed at substantially the same time within one State. Congress would not thereby interfere with or regulate the purely internal trade of a State—something concededly, and as a matter of course, not within its power. It would thereby only regulate the interstate commerce, for instance—regulate it and provide for it—with reference to the trade of a single State and without touching the latter.

The general powers of Congress so conclusively established, to be as extensive as the whole subject, and therefore necessarily including its every detail, it must follow that its power to so regulate interstate or foreign commerce with reference to the trade of a single State cannot be doubted. And that power thus established, it of necessity follows that Congress may require the publication of such schedules (of course without exercising any power over the rates of carriage, &c., in the purely internal trade of one State) that such laws as it may pass within its power can be enforced. It is, of course, but a virtual repetition of the very language of the Constitution to say that Congress has power to pass all laws necessary to enable it to carry out its specified powers. (Constitution United States, art. 1, sec. 8.)

Congress has power to pass such penal laws and to provide for such judicial action or proceedings in the Federal courts as to compel obedience to the powers it constitutionally exercises, and to afford remedy to those injured by the infraction of laws so passed. This is beyond question, nor would authority be cited to sustain it were it not that in United States vs. Coombs, 12 Petera, 72, 78, Mr. Justice Story, in delivering the opinion of the court, employs language which not only determines the precise point in view but covers the whole subject:

"The power to regulate commerce includes the power to regulate navigation as connected with the commerce with foreign nations and among the States. It was so held and decided by this court, after the most deliberate consideration, in the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden (9 Wheat., 189, 198.) It does not stop at the mere boundary-line of a State; nor is it confined to acts done on the water, or in the necessary course of the navigation thereof. It extends to such acts, done on land, which interfere with, obstruct, or prevent the due exercise of the power to regulate commerce and navigation with foreign nations and among the States. Any offense which thus interferes with, obstructs, or prevents such commerce and navigation, though done on land, may be punished by Congress, under its general authority to make all laws necessary and proper to execute their delegated constitutional powers."

In conclusion, it remains but to say, as can be said with that strength which belongs to propositions based upon constitutional power, in reason, in principle, and under the reiterated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, (for it will be observed that almost every authority above cited is the direct decision of that court,) that it is established with such certainty that to attempt its question would be but the puerility of cavil that Congress has supreme and exclusive power—a power broad as the subject, and therefore necessarily over all its details—to pass all laws which in its wisdom it may see fit to pass providing for equality of rates of freight upon property carried wholly or partly by railroad in interstate or foreign commerce, and to provide for equality in charges for services performed in or about such commerce; to provide such punishment, such remedies, for infractions of such laws as it may see fit to provide; and for such action and proceedings in the Federal courts as may secure obedience to its power, and that justice may be done to the parties engaged in the commerce thus sought to be regulated.

In conclusion I have to say that the interests to be affected by this bill are very important and all-pervading; that the power of Congress to pass it cannot be successfully questioned; that the public opinion of the country, as well as the public welfare, requires that it should be passed; that both public opinion and the best interests of the country appeal to Congress to perform the great public duty of passing such a law as will protect the interests of the people as proposed by this bill, and at the same time impose no unnecessary burdens and place no embarrassing restrictions on the railroad and other transportation companies.

A law providing for the legal enforcement of the provisions of this bill would save many millions of money annually to the people, while nothing could more demoralize and debauch the merchants and shippers of the country than for them to feel that they are constantly subject to the arbitrary caprices and will and interests of the railroad and other transportation companies for the terms upon which they may carry on their business. And surely the time has at last come when such vast interests should be taken from the domain of arbitrary power and the exactions of monopolies and placed under the protection of just and wholesome legal regulations.

This bill is unlike any bill upon this subject ever before presented to Congress. It is unlike the bill of 1873 in this: it will be found upon examination that this bill defines what is interstate commerce; it leaves nothing to be guessed at. It then prescribes the necessary regulations of that commerce, and so prescribes them as to protect the interests of the people without injuring the rights of transportation companies.

I have heard points presented in conversation which will doubtless be presented during the consideration of this bill, and it may perhaps be well for me to call attention to one or two of them. I have been told that that part of this bill which provides that a greater sum shall not be paid for a shorter than for a longer distance of transportation on the same line of carriage will prevent competition and act injuriously to the great trade centers. In reference to that point I desire to say that the argument must result from a failure to comprehend the character of the bill itself; otherwise such a presumption would not be made.

We do not propose to regulate the rates of freight. We do not say that rates of freight shall be high or shall be low. We only require them to be equal as to all shippers, and that a greater amount shall not be charged for a shorter than for a longer distance on the same line of transportation. The companies will have open to them the same fields of competition by raising or lowering the rates of freight that they have to-day.

It may be true that as between trade centers it may operate a change, and it is the object and one of the great objects of the bill to produce a change. To-day, or at least very recently, flour could be transported from Saint Louis or Chicago through the city of Pittsburgh to the city of Philadelphia cheaper than it could be transported from Pittsburgh to the city of Philadelphia. To do that the companies must transport through freight below the rates which will remunerate them and the local freight must pay for the difference. And this provision of the bill will do much to prevent disastrous railroad wars.

Mr. EDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. EDEN. Is not that owing to the fact that Chicago and Saint Louis have the benefit of the competition of the lakes and of the Mississippi River?

Mr. REAGAN. That may be partly true, but it cannot be true in the winter when the lakes are frozen up; it may be true in the summer. It is so between Boston and Philadelphia, and in other places. The little town in which I live, in the State of Texas, is one through which a vast amount of produce from Saint Louis goes into Texas. We there pay $90 a car-load for ordinary freight from Saint Louis. Yet the same freight will be carried by the same companies through our town two hundred miles beyond, to the city of Galveston, for only $60 a car-load. And it will be carried from Saint Louis to Galveston and returned to our town for precisely the same rate that it will be transported from Saint Louis to our place.

I state this for the purpose of giving examples illustrative of the practice by these transportation companies everywhere all over the Union.

Mr. MAYHAM. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. MAYHAM. Take the Erie Railway of the State of New York, and the New York Central Railroad, chartered under the laws of the State of New York. Does this bill provide, or rather does it by its terms prohibit those companies, chartered under State laws, from regulating the amount of freight that they shall charge from any given point to another given point on the lines of those roads?

Mr. REAGAN. It does not prevent them from charging any rate of freight they see proper, provided they charge equal freights to all shippers.

Mr. MAYHAM. Suppose that a shipper from Lockport to New York is charged a greater or less rate than a shipment from Buffalo to New York?

Mr. REAGAN. Under this bill they are forbidden to do that.

Mr. MAYHAM. Then I would ask——

Mr. REAGAN. Does the gentleman speak of rates of freight between two places within a State?

Mr. MAYHAM. Yes.

Mr. REAGAN. This bill does not touch that subject at all; we expressly avoid it. We do not pretend to regulate rates of freight in a State, because we know we have not the right to do it. We only attempt to regulate the charges upon interstate commerce, commerce from one State to another or to a Territory, or to a foreign country, or from a foreign country to this country.

Mr. MAYHAM. Suppose you start from Cleveland and follow the Lake Shore road to Dunkirk, where you reach the State of New York and where there are two diverging lines, does not this bill compel the companies in the State of New York to charge as much for freight carried from Dunkirk as they would for the freight brought from the West?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know the localities to which the gentleman refers, and therefore I cannot answer his question. But I will say to the gentleman that we do not in any way regulate the rates of freight in a State; we do not touch that subject in any possible way. In no way do we prescribe the rates of freight on interstate commerce; we only provide that the rates on interstate commerce shall be equal as between different shippers, and that a greater amount shall not be charged on such commerce for a shorter distance than for a longer distance on the same road. Then, we have one regulation which affects the rates of freight and which will be found in section 4 of the bill.

Mr. MAYHAM. One other question.

Mr. REAGAN. First let me refer to this point, because several gentlemen have asked the question whether the fourth section of the bill did not affect State freights. I say to them that if they will look at the bill they will find that it does not affect them. What the bill does is to require that a schedule of State freight rates shall be posted up, and that the charges upon interstate commerce shall not be at a greater rate per ton per mile than the State rates are.

That case is precisely within the decisions of the Supreme Court, in which it says that such a discrimination cannot lawfully be made. Hence, in framing this bill we follow specifically the decisions of the Supreme Court on this point.

Mr. MAYHAM. But is there a possibility under this bill of regulating the amount that may be charged in any State over a railroad organized and chartered in that State?

Mr. REAGAN. We do not concede that a State, by creating a corporation, can violate and overthrow the Constitution of the United States. We insist that the Constitution is the paramount law of the land, and that no State can violate the Constitution; that no corporation can be permitted to trample down the rights of the people without a legal remedy.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Will the gentleman from Texas permit me to ask him a question which I think will be in the line of his argument, but before doing so let me read a letter I yesterday received from an intelligent gentleman in East Saint Louis:

The trunk lines from here have effected a combination under which they have pooled their earnings in live-stock transportation on a basis of certain percentages to each road, and under this arrangement certain individuals (some five or six) have guaranteed to them a drawback of $15 per car not only on all stock shipped by them but on every car shipped by them out of Saint Louis to any terminal point east. The consequence is that the "eveners," as they are called, can form a ring any day in the market and regulate prices to suit themselves and no one outside of the favored ring can successfully compete with them in the purchase of stock. When those who are not in the favor of the roads come into the markets east they are liable to be slaughtered by the agents of the ring, as they have from $1 to $2 per head in cattle in their favor that if they desire they can sacrifice in order to break down any one who may dare to compete with them. The producer or feeder of cattle has no alternative when he seeks this market but to sell at whatever the ring may elect to pay on the day he may chance to be here. If cattle are plenty prices are depressed; if scarce, prices are put up to encourage liberal shipments by the farmers. The same system obtains at Chicago, and a few men are permitted by the co-operation of railroads to make fortunes out of the farmers, and against which they (the farmers) have no adequate remedy.

In my humble opinion this matter is of sufficient importance to claim your serious consideration as well as that of all other representatives of western interests, and I think I may with propriety say that it would be a very popular measure for every man who is the owner or producer of cattle and who is directly interested in the destruction of a monopoly that is so plainly detrimental to their interests.

I now ask the gentleman if the bill is to meet and cure such evils? They should be remedied at once as they are oppressive to the growers and feeders of cattle and are only in the interest of railroad rings, "eveners," and car combinations, and they should be broken up.

Mr. REAGAN. This bill will reach those evils specifically. One of its objects is to defeat that very abuse which was called to our attention by the oil interest during the Forty-fourth Congress, one of the largest interests in the country, which was smothered out, choked to death—which died in the hands of its legitimate owners through the efforts of a monopoly of that very kind combining with the railroads.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. WOOD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MONROE. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for a little while. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Texas wants only a few minutes. This is a question of general interest, and I hope there will be no objection. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. PAGE. I ask the gentleman from Texas whether he will not move to make this bill a special order, and take it out of the morning hour.

Mr. REAGAN. I will do so after the next morning hour. I desire to get it out of the way of other committees. I will consult with the friends of the measure and make that motion after the next morning hour.

TARIFF BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

The question being put,

The SPEAKER said: In the opinion of the Chair a majority have voted in the affirmative.

Several members called for a division.

Mr. CONGER. Pending that motion I move that the Committee of the Whole be instructed when they reach the tariff bill to report the same back to the House with an amendment striking out the enacting clause.

The SPEAKER. A vote has been taken on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, but a further vote was asked by division.

Mr. CONGER. But before the question was put, I sought the attention of the Chair three times very loudly.

Mr. ALDRICH. A division has been called on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. I demand that my motion shall be put

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order to make that motion.

Mr. CONGER. Now, I ask the Chair whether I have not the right pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole to make this motion; and, if I have, I demand that it shall be put.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that such motion is unusual.

Mr. CONGER. I ask whether I have not the right to make the motion.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman point out where he gets the right?

Mr. CONGER. Well, sir, if I may be allowed to say so, the Chair, I think, has admitted the right to make such a motion while the motion to go into Committee of the Whole is pending. It has been the universal practice in the House, while a motion to go into Committee of the Whole was pending, to allow a motion——

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman is too late even if he had the right to make the motion; but he has no right except the right of assumption.

Mr. CONGER. I addressed the Chair loudly before the question was put.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Michigan point out where he derives the right, under the rule, to make this motion?

Mr. CONGER. I submit that it is in order to move to instruct the committee at any time. I certainly have the right to make a motion to instruct the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAYLER. I undertake to say that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan is one which was never made in the House before. The proposition to strike out the enacting clause of the bill is one which can only be made in the committee. If the committee chose to make that report to the House, then it is the duty of the House to act on that report, but it cannot be done in the manner suggested by the gentleman from Michigan. More than that, the bill is not before the House for amendment. It is in the committee for general discussion. The gentleman cannot have the floor for that purpose in committee or out of committee until the House has closed the general discussion on the bill.

Mr. CONGER. If the Chair pleases, the House may at any time instruct the committee. The only question is as to the time. The Chair yesterday agreed with me that pending a motion to go into committee to consider the subject the House may instruct the committee.

The SPEAKER. As to the time of debate. If the gentleman quotes an individual conversation he ought to quote it correctly.

Mr. CONGER. I only refer to that incidentally. Now, pending that motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I move the committee be instructed to strike out the enacting clause, which will bring the whole subject before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The motion of instruction would be if the bill was before the House. The bill is not before the House. On the contrary, the bill is in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, passed there long ago, and is now under general discussion.

Mr. CONGER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from further consideration of the bill. That motion is in order.

Mr. WOOD. I call the gentleman to order. He is clearly out of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. On that motion I refer the Chair to Rule 104, which provides that the House may at any time, by a vote of a majority of the members present, provide for the discharge of the Committee of the Whole House, and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of any bill referred to it, after acting without debate on all amendments pending and that may be offered.

Mr. CONGER. There is no doubt about that.

The SPEAKER. There has been no action as yet on the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the point I desire to make.

Mr. CONGER. The bill has been discussed in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I move that committee be discharged from further consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not entertain the motion, because Rule 104——

Mr. CONGER. Then I move that all further debate on the bill be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman from Michigan has not the floor for that purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to make a suggestion. After having had a speech on this side of the House I do not think it fair and just when a response on the other side is about to be made we should try to cut off debate.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman has voted that way all the while.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain the motion to limit debate, as that is in order under the rules, if he states he rose for such purpose.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Ohio is not opposed to going into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. He has voted for it every time.

Mr. O'NEILL. One speech has been made for the bill and one speech has been made against it. I do not suppose any member on this floor wants to strike at the opportunity of his fellow-members to make speeches. That is not it, Mr. Speaker; but there is a principle involved, and that is to relieve the country from the disquiet which exists every day this bill is before Congress. [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. WOOD. I desire to say one word. I desire to know whether the majority which——

Mr. O'NEILL. Those are the only speeches I wish to make against it, to settle the matter one way or the other at once.

Mr. WOOD. Will this House cut off all debate before the committee has been heard on the subject?

Mr. O'NEILL. The whole subject is threadbare and worn out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania should observe order.

Mr. O'NEILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOOD. The Committee of Ways and Means, composed of eleven members, have not yet had an opportunity to be heard on this subject; and, until every member of that committee who desires to speak for or against the bill has been heard, I shall resist any motion to limit debate.

Mr. O'NEILL. Does the gentleman mean to limit the debate to the members of the committee?

Mr. WOOD. I am not to be dictated to by you or any other member.

Mr. O'NEILL. The gentleman and his committee are not the House of Representatives, as he will soon see.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not recognized to interrupt.

Mr. O'NEILL. I know it, Mr. Speaker. [Great laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] made a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Chair submitted the question to the House, and there was a viva voce vote. The Chair decided that in his opinion a majority had voted in the affirmative, whereupon some member rose in his place, or I may say several members, and demanded a division. Subsequently thereto the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] came down from his seat to the front and stated he had endeavored several times to have the attention of the Chair, so that he might make a motion to instruct the committee. The Chair thinks that is a correct statement of the course of the proceedings.

Mr. CONGER. With this addition, that I did address the Chair loudly enough to be heard——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the gentleman's word for it.

Mr. CONGER. Before there was any decision or any vote I addressed the Chair three times distinctly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that a motion to instruct the committee is not in order. It is not provided for under the rule, and the gentleman from Michigan himself is unable to point to any rule which provides for so instructing the committee. The bill is now in Committee of the Whole, and went there long ago. The conjunction is not kept up.

Mr. CONGER. I will not appeal from the decision of the Chair. But I now move that all debate upon the bill be limited to ten minutes. And I call the attention of the Chair to page 199 of the Manual, where it is stated:

> The proposition to close debate may be made at any time, taking precedence, even of a motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan maintain that he made a motion to limit debate prior to the division on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole being demanded? The Chair has taken the gentleman's word that he made a motion to instruct the committee and the Chair has ruled that motion out of order.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Chair hear me a moment?

The SPEAKER. Yes; for as many moments as the gentleman desires.

Mr. CONGER. I desire only a moment. Had the Chair recognized me at the time and had he ruled then upon my motion to instruct the committee as he has now ruled, then I would have had the right to follow it up with this motion.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Michigan will assert now that he intended, if the motion to instruct was ruled out of order, as the Chair thinks it properly has been, to follow that up with a motion to limit general debate to ten minutes, the Chair will waive all intervening controversy, and will recognize the gentleman to make that motion.

Mr. CONGER. I assert I had three motions in the order in which I desired to submit them to the House, and this was one of them.

The SPEAKER. Upon the statement the gentleman has just made the Chair will submit his motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to make the time two hours.

Mr. CONGER. I accept that amendment.

Mr. WOOD. If I am in order I move to amend by making the time one week. Until all the members of the committee are heard upon this question I shall resist any motion to limit debate.

Mr. BURCHARD. I am informed that the arrangement is that to-day the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] shall speak, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] intending to address the committee to-morrow. I hope there will be no motion that will cut off the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ROBBINS. I desire to say one word.

Mr. GARFIELD. My understanding was that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] should first have the floor and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.]

Mr. ROBBINS. I desire to say that I have never addressed this House for one hour. I have not been absent from one of its sessions nor missed a single vote. I think it would be ungracious to deny me this privilege.

Mr. WOOD. I withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is to limit the debate to two hours.

Mr. BURCHARD. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

The question was on ordering the main question.

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the previous question cut off the power of amendment from the bill?

The SPEAKER. Not from the bill, but from the motion.

The main question was ordered.

Mr. MILLS. I rise to a parliamentary question. I ask whether the previous question operates on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] has withdrawn his amendment. It operates on the motion to limit the debate to two hours.

Mr. WILSON. Would it be competent now to move to limit debate to two days?

The SPEAKER. It would not. The main question has been ordered.

Mr. CONGER. If it would be competent for me to do so I would accept an amendment making the time four hours.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent.

Several members objected.

Mr. WOOD. I object to any limitation.

Mr. FORT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion limiting debate to two hours is voted down, will it not be in order to amend the original motion by making it four hours?

Mr. CONGER. That is pending now.

The SPEAKER. It is not. Unanimous consent was not given.

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to a point of order. When the gentleman from Michigan made his motion for two hours the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] moved to amend by making it four hours

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio did not make that motion. That may have been uttered in a colloquy between gentlemen. The original motion of the gentleman from Michigan was not as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It was for ten minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then there was a proposition to make the time two hours, which the gentleman from Michigan accepted. Pending that a motion was made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to make the time four hours.

The SPEAKER. Not till after the gentleman from Illinois had demanded the previous question.

Mr. THOMPSON. It was before that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks otherwise.

Mr. THOMPSON. I know it was not otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated a moment ago that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan was to limit the debate to two hours, while his motion was to limit it to ten minutes. The RECORD will show whether the gentleman's memory is correct or not.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. As I understand, the main question has been ordered on limiting the debate to two hours. Let us vote on that.

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 107, nays 132, not voting 52; as follows:

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I desire to announce that I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. SCALES. I desire to state that upon this question I am paired with Mr. ROBINSON, of Indiana.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to say that I am paired with Mr. HALE. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to say that upon all questions touching the tariff I am paired with my colleague, Mr. POUND, who is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am paired with Mr. POWERS, of Maine. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. SOUTHARD. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. RICE, is paired with my other colleague, Mr. KEIFER.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I desire to say that I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BISBEE. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. COLE. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. MORGAN, is paired with Mr. JAMES upon the tariff question.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Upon this question I am paired with Mr. CLYMER, of Pennsylvania. If he were present, I should vote "no" and he would vote "ay."

Mr. CAMP. I wish to announce that my colleague, Mr. BAKER, is paired upon this question with my colleague, Mr. QUINN. If he were present, my colleague, Mr. BAKER, would vote "ay."

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire to state that Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire, is paired with Mr. BAGLEY, of New York. If Mr. JONES were present, he would vote "no" and Mr. BAGLEY would vote "ay."

Mr. WILLIAMS, of New York. I desire to state that I am paired upon this question with Mr. MONEY, of Mississippi. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. HUBBELL. I am paired with Mr. BLISS, of New York. If he were present, I should vote "ay" and he would vote "no."

Mr. BURDICK. I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MANNING. I am informed that, if present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. STONE, of Michigan. My colleague, Mr. ELLSWORTH, is absent by reason of sickness, and I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. WILLITS, is paired with Mr. POTTER. If Mr. WILLITS were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. PAGE. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. LUTTRELL, is paired with Mr. DENISON, of Vermont.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. WOOD. I demand the previous question upon my motion.

Mr. BUTLER. Before that question is put, I ask the gentleman from New York if we cannot make some arrangement as to the limit of debate; say to three hours, or four hours, or five hours?

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman from Massachusetts is an old member of the House, and he must know that on a bill of this character, so important, where so many gentlemen desire to be heard, at this early stage of the discussion and when but two speeches have been made, it is impossible to fix a time when debate shall be closed. I would say, however, that at the earliest practicable moment I propose to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill, and to ask the House to consider the question whether they will act upon the bill at this session or not. But until the debate has proceeded to such a condition that gentlemen on the other side of the House are better informed upon the subject than they seem to be now, I shall not consent to any limit to debate.

Mr. BUTLER. That will never be.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask leave to say a few words upon this subject.

The SPEAKER. Debate is hardly in order.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask unanimous consent to say a few words. This question is one of vital importance to the country and to the people. It touches the sources of revenue and the various industries of the country.

Mr. WOOD. I hope the gentleman will confine himself to the point of closing debate.

Mr. KELLEY. I will confine myself to that question. The bill deserves discussion and has received the consideration of very many gentlemen on this floor. It is fitting that those who were charged by the House with the consideration of so grave and far-reaching a question should have an opportunity of stating the reasons that have influenced them and of presenting their views to the House. I have voted against my colleagues and against my party friends——

Mr. CONGER. I object to the gentleman excusing himself here.

Mr. KELLEY. I have nothing to excuse myself for. I could not be driven into playing the part of a blackguard and perpetrating a gross indecency upon the Committee of Ways and Means by my colleagues on that committee or any other gentlemen on this floor. [Applause.] Having abstained from pursuing that course needs neither excuse nor defense.

The SPEAKER. This debate is hardly in order.

Mr. O'NEILL. If this debate goes on I propose to say a word.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon seconding the previous question.

Mr. O'NEILL. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] to permit me to say a few words.

Mr. WOOD. I cannot yield now.

Mr. O'NEILL. I simply wish to ask the gentleman whether, in view of what has been said, he will at the proper time give an opportunity to a member opposed to this bill to move to strike out the enacting clause? [Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. WOOD. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The previous question was then seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion of Mr. WOOD was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SAYLER in the chair.

REVISION OF THE TARIFF.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole, and resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to impose duties upon foreign imports, to promote trade and commerce, to reduce taxation, and for other purposes, upon which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TUCKER addressed the committee. [His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, a wise and just system of revenue must fulfill two conditions and have two grand aims. First, it must raise that amount of money which is necessary for the purposes of the Government. And secondly, it must do so by imposing the lightest possible taxes upon the people. To neglect the first is improvidence; to neglect the latter is extortion; to accomplish both is the perfection of statesmanship.

The first inquiry, Mr. Chairman, in the investigation of this subject is how much revenue do we need? To answer that, we must look into the purposes for which revenue is needed. One of these is to sustain the public credit and meet the obligations of the public debt. The debt of the United States is a great burden upon the American people; but it is a burden which must be manfully and honestly borne and discharged in a manner worthy of a great and honorable nationality. If there be, as I trust there are not, any of our statesmen or public men who are in favor of its repudiation, I must declare that my sympathies are not with them.

The State and section from which I come, it is true, were on the other side in the great conflict out of which most of this debt arose, and the Government contracted it in providing means to overthrow the cause for which I and my constituents fought. But that conflict is now over, and we are all again citizens of a common country and under a common Government, and I recognize the fact that the obligations of this common Government are binding upon us every one. I take great pride and pleasure in assuring this House and the country that the South in coming back to resume her place in the Union has brought with her that high sense of honor which was always one of her characteristics, and that the faith and credit and good name of the United States will never suffer by any dereliction on her part.

Those who fear southern influence in the public councils can rest easy on that point. The people of the whole country I believe mean to pay the debt honestly. Our creditors must be content to take their pay in the money "nominated in the bond," and not in a dearer medium; but nevertheless the debt must be paid honestly according to the terms of the contract; and those who seek to break the public promises by repudiation, and those who seek to give them a strained construction in favor of grasping bondholders, are equally to be resisted.

I make these preliminary observations concerning the inviolability of the public faith that no one may misunderstand the spirit in which gentlemen from my section of the country approach the discussion of questions pertaining to the public debt and the revenue. But the onus of paying the principal of the public debt or any large portion thereof ought not to fall upon the present generation. The losses and the sacrifices which the people of all the States have had to suffer by reason of the unfortunate conflict out of which the debt mainly arose have borne so heavily on the industrial and pecuniary resources of the whole Republic that time ought to be allowed for general recuperation before we are called upon to shoulder the load of paying off the debt itself. We are growing rapidly in numbers and in development.

In the life-time of those even who will remember the great sectional war our country will be magnificent and unexampled in wealth and be the home of a hundred millions of prosperous and happy citizens. A burden which would crush us now will be but a trifle then. We have been paying off the debt too fast. On the 1st of July, 1866, the outstanding principal of the debt was, in round numbers, $2,773,000,000, according to the Treasury reports. On the 1st of this present month of May, 1878, it was reduced to $2,203,000,000, without deducting the cash in the Treasury, so that in less than twelve years we have paid off $570,000,000 of the principal of the debt, or more than one-fifth of the whole of it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think this is unwise financiering. The world has faith in our solvency. The money-lenders of the world are willing to take our bonds at a low rate of interest as a good investment. Our bonds which have a long time to run bring more in the market than those which fall due to-morrow. Our material interests and industries, on the contrary, are languishing and paralyzed for the want of available capital and ready cash with which to carry on business. Wherein is the wisdom of taxing the people and drawing from them their limited supply of money in order to pay a debt that our creditors do not want us to pay, but which they prefer to hold as an investment on long time? What we need to do, Mr. Chairman, is to fund the debt at a low rate of interest and pay that interest punctually, giving the world assurance of our purpose in good faith to discharge our obligations; and then we may choose our own time for paying the principal of the debt.

We have now paid $240,000,000 more of it than was required by the law creating the sinking fund. I submit that as the first logical and obvious step toward lightening the people's burdens we should suspend the operation of that law for some years, as recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means, and cease at present to tax the people for the maintenance of the sinking fund. We only need revenue, then, for two things, to wit, for the ordinary expenses of the Government and for paying interest on the public debt. How much do we need for these purposes? In the last annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury he estimates that $140,000,000 is enough to meet the expenses of the Government for the next year, (apart from interest and the sinking fund,) and that the aggregate of the appropriations can be brought within the limit of these figures "without crippling any branch of the public service."

He says, also, that next year he will require but $93,000,000 to pay the interest on the public debt. Add the $93,000,000 to the $140,000,000 and you have $233,000,000 as the amount of revenue that is really needed for the next fiscal year, and with interest diminishing by funding the debt at lower rates and the expenses of the Government curtailed if we will by retrenchment in all Departments, we have no reason to anticipate higher estimates for many years to come. There is room, therefore, for a reduction in the revenues and in taxation; and this latter, after all, ought to be a prime object in all modifications of the laws on the subject of revenue. What boots it if we change our revenue legislation unless we ameliorate the burdens of the people?

How much are the receipts of the Government at present? During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, the receipts from customs duties were $130,956,000; from internal revenue, $118,630,000; from miscellaneous sources, about $20,000,000; making in all $269,000,000, in round numbers. And yet the last was not a prosperous year. The hard times and exorbitant tariff duties have caused imports to fall off steadily since 1872. In that year the customs duties amounted to $216,000,000. In 1877 they were only $130,956,000, as I have already stated. So that in six years they decreased more than $85,000,000. This, by the way, is an overwhelming argument against the existing tariff. The receipts from internal revenue, it is true, have somewhat increased, but not nearly so much as they would have done if business had been more prosperous and the internal taxes less onerous, so as not to oppress the great agricultural interests from which they are, by a most unwise policy, principally derived. But even with all disadvantages the receipts for the last fiscal year were $36,000,000 more than are needed for the next year, apart from the sinking fund.

From the Treasury reports and other sources of information we have assurance of the fact that even under the existing ill-adjusted system of revenue, the receipts of the Treasury have now about touched their minimum. The revival of business may be so gradual as scarcely to be perceived, but it is none the less sure and encouraging. Both our imports and exports are increasing.

The Secretary of the Treasury in his latest statement of the condition of the Treasury gives the imports for the twelve months ending March 31, 1877, as $423,000,000, and for the twelve months ending March 31, 1878, as $465,000,000, an increase of $42,000,000, or about 10 per cent. in one year. He gives the exports for the same periods as $597,000,000 and $665,000,000, respectively, an increase of $68,000,000, or over 11 per cent. His report of receipts from customs for the quarter ending September 30, 1877, is nearly $37,000,000, largely over one-fourth of the amount received from this source during the last year. His estimates for the other three quarters of the current fiscal year are lower in ratio than for the first quarter, but the total comes up to within a trifle of the figures of last year. His estimates of receipts from internal revenue and miscellaneous sources likewise fall but little below those of last year. Certainly the Secretary is not disposed to make overestimates just now, for he opposes our measures of revenue reform and would naturally discourage them by unfavorable figures. It is fair to presume that the revenues of the current year will be at least as large as he conjectures.

This remark is corroborated by what he gives as the estimates for the next year. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, he estimates the receipts from customs at $133,000,000; from internal revenue, at $120,000,000; and from other sources, at $16,000,000; making a total of $269,000,000, which is equal to the receipts of the last fiscal year; and I have shown that to be $36,000,000 above what we need to carry on the Government and pay interest.

The proposition may therefore be stated with emphasis, repeated, reiterated, that we are now secure of an annual revenue of thirty-six millions beyond the real needs of the Government. This revenue has touched its lowest figures in the aggregate even under present laws and will likely grow to a greater excess. The corollary to all this is that it is our bounden duty to reduce taxes.

But Mr. Chairman, if it is our duty to reduce existing taxes because the revenue they produce is not needed, how much more is it our duty to take off taxes which do not produce revenue to the Treasury, which were never designed for that purpose, but the sole object and effect of which are to wring money from the people and give it to certain favored classes and interests—to take it from the poor and give it to the rich—to take it from the laborer and give it to the capitalist and the monopolist. Let doctrinaires disguise it how they will, this is what a so-called protective tariff really means.

It is not my purpose to indulge in hard words while speaking on this point, for I know that no good cause is advanced by violence of temper or language on the part of its advocates. Nevertheless it is difficult to restrain one's indignation and to maintain becoming moderation in discussing the great wrong to which I now allude; and I am not sure but that the just wrath of oppressed multitudes ought to find voice in this forum in such blasting and withering terms of denunciation of this system of legalized robbery as would compel its apologists to hide their faces for shame.

Under the existing tariff about one-half of all the dutiable articles, on most of which high duties are laid, yield almost no revenue at all. For instance, saws of all kinds did not furnish a revenue of more than $220 last year, and yet the duty on them ranged from 20 to 50 per cent. Cut-nails and spikes, at a duty of more than 46 per cent., only furnished $29.06 revenue. Cut-tacks, brads, and sprigs, at a duty of 34½ to 44½ per cent., paid in a revenue of $27.40. Cast-butts and hinges, at a duty of 24½ per cent., paid the enormous amount of $4.16. One class of cotton jeans, denims, drillings, &c., paid $63.38; another paid $17.25; another paid $229; another $361; another $84; another $146, while the duty on all these ranged from 33 to 109 per cent. I might go on and fill pages with examples equally striking. Eight or nine hundred articles only pay a revenue of about one-third of a million dollars. How is this? Simply that these articles are virtually prohibited from importation by the high duties imposed. What is the purpose of it? Solely to exclude such articles from coming into our markets to compete with home productions having similar uses. What is the effect? Why, plainly it gives the manufacturers of these home products exclusive control of our markets and enables them to exact from every buyer and consumer in the United States a proportionally higher price for the same. A heavy contribution is thus levied upon the entire class of consumers, and these constitute an overwhelming majority of the people, and yet hardly a dollar of this sum finds its way into the Treasury, but nearly all of it goes into the pockets of those who are growing rich by preying upon their fellow-citizens.

The same principle holds true in a greater or less degree with regard to every article and commodity on which a protective duty is laid. In many cases the duty, while not absolutely prohibitory, is so high as to check importation and reduce the revenue far below what it otherwise would be. For instance, the revenue received on iron and steel and the manufactures thereof in 1872 was $21,922,127, but has been regularly falling off, until in 1877 it was only $3,765,846. We have become exporters of this product ourselves, and yet the iron men are clamorous for the continuance of the present high duties, which not only keep up prices to American consumers but will soon destroy the last vestige of revenue from this source.

The wrong which is done to the consuming classes of the people by protective duties on imports will startle any man who looks into the subject and finds how small an amount of revenue from many important articles goes into the Treasury and how large an amount is added to the prices which the people must pay for these articles by reason of the duties on them.

Statistics are dry things and I do not wish to encumber my remarks with too many of them. Nor is this necessary to enforce the point which I am now presenting. A single illustration will suffice. Ex uno disce omnes. Let us examine the statistics upon the subject embraced in the first schedule of the tariff law, the schedule relating to cotton manufactures. I take this schedule because it stands first and will serve my purpose well enough.

The value of all imports of cotton manufactures last year, according to the report of the Bureau of Statistics, was $18,923,654. The total revenue derived from the duties thereon was $6,554,826. I wish, just here, to call attention incidentally to the fact that the revenue from this source in 1872 was $12,306,215, showing that there has been a falling off in this particular, under the present high rates of duty, of nearly one-half, another proof of the unwisdom of the present tariff. The average duty imposed on the various items in this cotton schedule is over 53 per cent. ad valorem, and on many of the items the duty is practically prohibitory.

On those classes of cotton manufactures which yield any considerable revenue to the Government the average rate of duty is about 35 per cent., as is proven by dividing the total of receipts by the total of importations.

By the census of 1870 the value of the cotton manufactures produced in this country for the preceding year amounted to $177,489,739. Notwithstanding all the talk of hard times the quantity produced is much larger now. To show how much the increase has been, I refer to a table found on page 255 of a valuable work, which I hold in my hand, by William B. Dana, entitled Cotton from Seed to Loom, just issued from the press, and another table found on page 268 of the same work. It is there shown that the quantity of cotton used by American manufacturers in 1869 in making the product given in the census report of 1870 was 922,359 bales; that the quantity annually used since has been regularly increasing until it amounted in 1877 to 1,435,418 bales; which is 513,059 bales, or more than 55 per cent. of raw cotton now annually used by American manufacturers above what they used in 1870. It is true that the price of raw cotton has fallen in just about the same proportion that the quantity used has increased, and the fact deserves notice that our cotton manufacturers actually pay no more money for raw material now than they did in 1870, though they use so much more of it, and make and sell a much larger quantity of manufactures.

For the purpose of my argument I will therefore concede that the aggregate value of our home cotton manufactures stands at the same figures as in 1870, that is $177,489,739. Out of this we exported last year an amount valued at $10,180,984. (See page 257 of Dana's work aforesaid.) All the remainder of our manufactured cottons is bought and consumed by our own people. The New York Financial Chronicle of a recent date says:

> The past year * * * our spinners * * * have manufactured goods in increased quantities and sold them all.

Excluding the quantity exported, they have sold to our own people products to the value of $167,308,755. Besides this we imported cottons to the value of $18,923,654, as I have before stated. Add these two amounts together and you have $186,232,409, which represents the total value of manufactures of cotton consumed by the American people last year.

It is a problem which has been much discussed, and never solved with perfect accuracy, as to how much the price of any article is increased by the customs duty levied upon similar articles imported. Certain transcendental theorists, some of whom may yet be left in the land and even in this House, maintain that by laying high protective duties on commodities you actually lower their price. The only worthy reply to such a proposition is the conundrum, (not original with myself,) "How high must the duty be laid on an article to enable us to buy it for nothing?"

One thing is plain: protection is a fallacy if it does not protect. How does it protect? The only way by which it can protect the home producer or manufacturer is by enabling him to demand and secure an increased price for his product. What percentage of increased price is he thus enabled to exact? I answer, very nearly the same as that of the customs duty imposed on similar articles by the tariff. For it is manifest that the importer who pays the duty on any commodity will add that much to the price of what he imports and sells in this country. The fact that any article is imported and sold here at all is sufficient proof that the home manufacturer of the same article does not exclude the importer from our market by underselling him. Therefore, the price of the home product is regulated by that of the foreign import.

But some allowance must certainly be made for competition. The imported article and the home product compete with one another in the market, and the effect of that undoubtedly is to cut down the price of both a little. But the importation of cottons is only $18,000,000, and the home product sold in this country is $167,000,000. Therefore the effect of the competition of the foreign importations brought here in cutting down the price of the home product can be but a small percentage, as I think every fair-minded man will admit.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman pardon me a question or two?

Mr. ROBBINS. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY. Is it not true as a general proposition that he who is compelled to seek a market must take the market rate, while he whose products are sought may fix his own price?

Mr. ROBBINS. He who has anything to sell can sell it higher by preventing everybody else from going to the market to sell like things.

Mr. KELLEY. That is not an answer to my question; it is rather an evasion. The question was a simple and direct one.

Mr. ROBBINS. Put it again.

Mr. KELLEY. Does not he who is compelled to carry his goods to a market have to accept the market price?

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. And may not he whose goods are sought by purchasers fix his own price? There is a great deal in that question, Mr. ROBBINS.

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes, I have no doubt there is; and I have no doubt we shall hear it elaborately discussed by the gentleman to-morrow morning, and I shall listen to him with great pleasure, as I always do. But that question is an abstraction which I have not time to go into.

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, no; it is not an abstraction.

Mr. ROBBINS. It is entirely out of the current of my present argument. I might and probably would answer both questions in the affirmative; but I say non sequitur as to what the gentleman might consider the logical sequence, because with all his wisdom I have often thought that he entertained many vagaries on this subject and he lives in a land which grows rich by making other States contribute to its wealth. It is very easy to see things the way that our interest points. It appears to me that as the foreign importer comes here with cotton manufactures and sells them, the home producer gets as high a price as the importer; but the importer when he brings his articles here, being required to pay 35 per cent. duty, must add this to the prime cost before he offers the goods in the market. This 35 per cent. becomes a part of the price which the consumer here must pay, and besides this the importer sells at a profit in this country, otherwise eighteen million dollars' worth of foreign products would not come here.

The home producers of course do not undersell the importer or they would exclude him; so the home producers get as high a price as the importer; and that, allowing for the competition of which I spoke, is about 30 per cent. more than what we would have to pay if we could buy in the world's free marts. Robert J. Walker, in discussing this question in 1846, said that while it was not easy to tell exactly the percentage it was quite sure that, upon an average, two-thirds of the duty was added to the price of imported articles sold in this country.

This being true generally with regard to the whole range of articles, it is fair to say with regard to the class of which I am now speaking, of which the importation does not bear a proportion of much more than one-ninth to the home product, that the competition is not sufficient to reduce the 35 per cent. below 30. I state, therefore, the proposition that every man who buys cotton manufactures in this country pays 30 per cent. more than he would have to pay if there were no protective tariff—no check on foreign competition in the market. How much is sold? One hundred and sixty-seven million three hundred and eight thousand seven hundred and fifty-five dollars' worth of home products and eighteen million nine hundred and twenty-three thousand six hundred and fifty-four dollars' worth of importations, making one hundred and eighty-six million two hundred and thirty-two thousand four hundred and nine dollars' worth sold in this country and consumed by our people; 30 per cent. of this is the amount paid in the shape of increased prices by the purchaser and consumer. How much is 30 per cent. of $186,232,409? Fifty-five million eight hundred and sixty-nine thousand seven hundred and twenty-two dollars. This is the sum which the American people are taxed annually on cotton manufactures. How much of this goes into the Treasury? Here are the figures from Secretary Sherman's report: $6,554,826. The remainder, $49,314,896, is a bounty paid by the masses of the consumers to the cotton manufacturers. In other words, out of every $9 paid by the people $1 goes into the Treasury, and $8 go into the hands of the greedy protectionists who shriek ruin whenever we talk of withholding from them this enormous tribute.

If I had time or deemed it necessary I might take up the subjects embraced in other schedules of the tariff, and show still more fully how oppressive to the masses of the people is the operation of the protective principle. The sugar schedule, about which, strange to say, there is a great deal of clamor, is constructed more nearly upon the revenue basis than any other schedule in the tariff law. There are 200,000,000 pounds of sugar produced in this country, and the duty averages about 2½ cents a pound. Make the calculation for yourselves, gentlemen, and you find that this gives only $5,000,000 bounty paid to the sugar-planters of the United States. How much revenue goes into the Treasury from sugar? Thirty-seven million eighty-six thousand nine hundred and ninety-two dollars. In other words, we pay on sugar a bounty of $5,000,000, and we get a revenue of $37,000,000. On cottons we pay a bounty of $49,000,000, and get a revenue of $6,500,000. On iron and steel, and manufactures thereof, we pay to the home producers a bounty of who can tell how many millions? and the Treasury receives from them only $3,765,846. The schedule of wools and woolens shows also a large bounty in proportion to the revenue received by the Treasury.

What is the use of adding words to these figures? The enormous wrong which they exhibit could not be worthily portrayed by any terms which the English tongue supplies. The people of this country have been deceived by ingenious sophisms on this question for a great while; but they are waking up; they are becoming better enlightened. I tell gentlemen that these wrongs must be righted. These great outrages will be stopped by the oppressed people of this country, even if they have to revolutionize politics, tear down parties, and reorganize them anew.

The bill reported by our committee falls far short of realizing my ideas of what a tariff law ought to be; but I support it heartily because it is the best we can now get and because it is much better than the law as it now exists. Believing in a tariff for revenue only, we have nevertheless been very tender with the protected interests. True statesmanship never forgets to be conservative. Nature is conservative. Night does not turn to day, nor winter to summer, without an interval. We have recognized this principle in our work. We have recognized the fact that the protected interests were like hothouse plants, and that it would be cruel to take them up and set them out in the open air at once. So we have only transferred them into an apartment of a slightly lower temperature; and by degrees we hope to accustom them to live outdoors.

The average reduction we have made in the duties does not exceed one-fourth to one-sixth of the present rates. Just think of it. As oppressive as the tariff now is, we have cut down the duties only one-fourth or one-sixth of what they are now; yet witness the clamors against this moderate measure. And when you see it you will realize how impossible it is to placate and satisfy those who antagonize this so just, so moderate, so conservative a measure. Their violent opposition only shows how extremely exacting they are.

The bill we have reported is an improvement on the present law in the fact that it abolishes compound duties. The present tariff has both ad valorem and specific duties on a great many articles. We have in every instance made the duty single, and also specific where it was practicable, and have only retained the ad valorem duty in cases where it was impossible to describe the articles specifically, so as to impose a specific duty upon them. The ad valorem principle may be correct in theory, but it has been found to open the door to so much cheating, so much imposition, so much fraud upon the revenue, that it is not wise to continue it any longer in practice. So we have resorted to the other method of specific rates in every instance where we could. This simplification of the law will reduce the expense of administering it nearly one-half.

The present tariff law levies duties on 1,524 articles. We have cut the number down to about one-half of that. That is an important consideration, a great improvement. The English people, from whom we could learn, if we would, so many valuable lessons on this whole subject—for no nation is more wise or far-seeing in its commercial and financial policy—levies a tariff on 18 articles only, and not one of them is produced or manufactured in that country.

The present tariff, Mr. Chairman, requires that in making out the invoice of imported goods on which ad valorem duties are imposed, there shall be added to the first cost the charge of transportation from the place where they are purchased in the foreign country to the port of shipment; also for packing, inspection, and sundry other items, and all these must be certified by the consul with perfect accuracy. It is very difficult to make out an accurate invoice with all these details. To get rid of that we have added 5 per cent. to the prime cost of articles wherever purchased in a foreign land in lieu of all these incidental charges. That is much simpler and much better in many ways. Many seizures of goods have taken place, for instance, because there was some inaccuracy or want of knowledge in regard to so trifling a matter as the cost of boxes in which the goods were packed. Such cases have occurred frequently. The plan we have adopted in this respect is also favorable to cheapness in the heavier and bulkier commodities which the poorer classes of our people have to buy.

We have provided also, Mr. Chairman, that foreign goods imported to be used in manufactures and re-exported afterward may be placed in warehouses and used as warehouse goods without paying duty, which is a great deal better than the system of drawbacks. The drawback system has nevertheless been retained in cases where the other is impracticable.

I might go on, if time permitted, and point out many other particulars in which our bill is better than the present tariff law, besides the important fact of its general reduction in the rate of duties.

On all articles in common use we have reduced the duty about 25 per cent., while on luxuries consumed by those who are able to pay for them we have left the duties nearly or quite as high as they are under the present law.

I will not go into a detailed discussion of the rates of duty on particular articles, but will leave that to be done at the proper time when we enter upon the consideration of this bill under the five-minute rule.

There is another branch of the general subject of revenue reform which the people I represent here are greatly interested in, and that is a change in the internal-revenue system. Some time ago this House took what I considered a snap judgment in regard to the spirit tax by passing a resolution declaring that it was inexpedient now to reduce the tax on spirits; and the Senate having concurred in that resolution, I recognize that matter as being removed out of the range of our action at this time. But I may be pardoned for saying that I think it was rather extraordinary on the part of this House to take such hasty action in regard to a business which yields $57,000,000 or nearly one-quarter of all the revenue we raise from every source—to take action on it at the very time when your committee was engaged in preparing a bill concerning it—to decide the question without a hearing, without waiting for a report, and without any discussion on the subject.

I shall not dwell on that matter now, except to remark that distilled spirits are, it may be said, a product of the field, or at least but one remove from it, and I think the husbandmen and agriculturists of the country, although they have been denied it now, will find means yet to compel a hearing by the American Congress as to the propriety and justice of levying this immense tax on what they produce.

But I am glad to say that no unfavorable action has yet been taken in regard to the reduction of the tax upon tobacco. Two days ago the House, by a small majority, indicated that it was in favor of the reduction of that tax to 16 cents. That is not as low as I think it ought to be; and on the first day of this Congress, when it was in order, I introduced a bill placing the tax upon tobacco at 12 cents, and other gentlemen introduced bills of the same purport shortly afterward.

The agitation that has occurred on this subject has caused great loss, great disturbance to the trade; and some have blamed those of us who brought these bills forward as the cause of it. I am not nervously overanxious to defend myself on this point, for I feel safe in relying on the good sense of my constituents who know my zeal in behalf of their interests. But it is due to truth to say that I saw the agitation was bound to come whatever course I might pursue. So long as the tax is so exorbitant agitation cannot be kept down. It is not within the control of any member of Congress to stop such a thing. The people demand a reduction of this onerous tax. Seeing, therefore, that the agitation was coming and knowing that it could not be prevented as long as the tax was so abnormally high, I introduced a bill at the earliest possible moment for the purpose of hastening the settlement of a question so important to the trade; and from that day to this I have been laboring to hurry up the decision and settlement of this matter so that those interested might know what we are going to do with it.

I trust that the House will take the question up in regular order at an early day and dispose of it finally. And after this long delay it would be unpardonable not to grant the reduction asked for. There are a great many cogent reasons for reducing this tax. In the first place tobacco is an agricultural production. The tillers of the soil are the creators of all wealth. Out of the earth springs everything we have. She is well called Mother Earth. And the tillers of the soil ought not to be taxed when it is possible to avoid it, nor ought they to be taxed one cent more than is absolutely necessary for purposes of revenue.

I think I can show, Mr. Chairman, that the present tax on tobacco is beyond the proper maximum to raise the most revenue. For instance, when you raised the tax on tobacco from 20 cents to 24 cents you increased the tax thereby one-fifth, but you did not increase the revenue from it one-fifth; you scarcely increased it at all. It would be very easy to demonstrate, if I had time, that if you had left the tax at 20 cents on the pound the increase of production and the enlargement of the business would have been such that to-day you would have more revenue in the aggregate from the tobacco tax than you raise by the tax of 24 cents a pound.

Now, I lay down this proposition: that whenever you impose a tax or whenever you increase a tax, and it does not produce a corresponding increase in the revenue, such a tax is unjust and works mere oppression to the industry which is the subject of it. I know it is contended by some that the consumer of tobacco pays all the tax and that the reduction of the tax cannot benefit the leaf-grower. Well, sir, one thing is certain: the effect of a high tax is to diminish the number of men who have capital enough to go into the manufacture. It has a tendency to throw the whole manufacture of tobacco into the hands of a few.

And what do we see to-day? Who is opposing the reduction of the tobacco tax? It is the manufacturers in the great centers who wish to monopolize the business; men like the Lorillards, of New York, who want to keep everybody from manufacturing tobacco except themselves; those who have plenty of capital to pay this high tax, and who can lay up their tobacco and hold it as long as they please until it suits them to market it. Those men are opposed to a reduction of the tax in order that they may kill off the men who have less capital. What would be the effect of that? The number of purchasers in the market will be diminished, and whenever you cut down the number of manufacturers, say from one thousand to one hundred, the man who has the leaf to sell has but a hundred instead of a thousand customers.

Does not every one see that this will bring down the price of the leaf? Besides, this smaller number of buyers can more easily combine together and put the price of the leaf down to whatever figure they choose. The way, then, to increase the price of the leaf is to lower the tax, thus increasing the number of manufacturers, the number of customers to whom by existing law you compel the leaf-grower to sell. Under the law as it now is he can sell only to three classes of men, the manufacturers, the exporters, and the licensed dealers. But after you have shut him up to three classes of customers for a market, by your high tax you cut down the number of one of these classes almost to zero. Is there any gentleman here who fails to see the great hardship of this sort of legislation?

Remove your high tax. Let the business of manufacturing be open to men of small means and limited capital. This will make the manufacturers numerous; the leaf-grower will have a larger number of customers to sell to, and will receive consequently a larger price for his commodity. It seems to me that the soundness of these views cannot be controverted by any gentleman of candor. A vote for the reduction of the tobacco tax is truly a vote against monopoly and for the interests of the masses of the people.

There is another fact, Mr. Chairman, that sustains my proposition. When you raised the tax on tobacco from 20 to 24 cents the price of manufactured tabacco did not rise at all. Look at the price-lists before the tax was raised and then afterward, and you will find that the price of tobacco when the tax was 20 cents was just as high as it was after you put on 24 cents. On whom did the payment of those four cents fall? Not on the consumer. It was on the men who stood before the consumer, to wit, the leaf-grower, the manufacturer, and the dealer. That is plain common sense. It is the commonest principle of political economy. I learned it at school from old Wayland, that when you increase the price of any article you diminish the number of people that will purchase it; or if you do not diminish the number of purchasers you diminish the quantity which each feels that he can afford to purchase; so that you narrow the market as you increase the price and you cause a corresponding loss to every one who has anything to do with the article. In ordinary cases this would be compensated by the increased price which would be received and divided among the various parties interested. But in this case the increase of price results from the tax, and this all goes to the Government.

Have you considered, gentlemen, how exorbitant the tobacco tax is? The average price of the leaf is not over 6 or 8 cents per pound; and a great deal of it sells for 2, 3, and 4 cents. But take the average at 8 cents, and the tax of 24 cents is 300 per cent. on the prime value of this agricultural product. It amounts to 1,000 per cent. on the lower grades. But let the average stand at 300 per cent., and I venture to say that there is not and never was any country in the world which levied such an enormous rate of tax upon a product of its own soil.

But gentlemen stickle for the revenue and say: "We must have revenue, and there is no more suitable article to tax than tobacco." I tell you that if you keep the tax up at this figure you will kill the goose that lays the golden egg. The other day the Commissioner of Agriculture paid $1,700 for tobacco-seed to Mr. Bagwell (I think it was) down in Virginia, $100 per bushel for seventeen bushels. What for? To send out in little papers all through the country to be planted in the gardens and the truck-patches and the by-ways everywhere. What is the result? Hundreds and thousands of people all over the country are beginning to raise a little leaf for themselves. They cure it, twist it up, and chew it, or crumble it up and smoke it in these forms of imperfect manufacture.

Sixty million pounds of tobacco raised and prepared in this manner are used now by the consumers of this country, and none of this pays any tax. Only the other day we were urged by gentlemen here on behalf of the Agricultural Department to pay I do not know how many thousand dollars to keep that Department up, including of course this $1,700 for tobacco-seed which will be distributed all over the country and used in growing the imperfect product of tobacco of which I have just spoken. The revenue will be injured by it by limiting in so far the sales of regularly manufactured tobacco which alone pays a tax. This habit of raising a home supply of leaf is rapidly extending over the country.

There is only one way to stop it. Reduce the tax. Those who use the leaf in this way would prefer to have the regular article manufactured and prepared in the proper manner. But if you compel them to pay such an exorbitant tax and high price for it they will resort to this means of supplying themselves and make it do. It is all a question of taste. The whole use of tobacco is a matter of acquired taste and habit, and even a man who has been using only good tobacco, if forced by poverty and high prices, can get accustomed to using an inferior article and be satisfied with it. That is what they are doing. If you keep up this tax you break down the regular tobacco trade, and break down with it your revenue. I repeat, then, do not kill the goose that lays the golden egg.

We raise a little over $41,000,000 from tobacco. We ought to be content with $35,000,000. That is about one-seventh of all the revenues we now raise from every source. In the attempt to raise so much by keeping the tax up, the result will be that it will go down. And if gentlemen will adhere rigidly to the idea that all we have to do is to raise the most revenue from the article I tell them the way to raise the most revenue is to make the tax more reasonable. Everybody knows, Mr. Chairman, that in proportion as you take the burdens off any occupation or industry, you increase the business; and the tobacco business, like everything else, can be increased and will be if you foster it by liberality instead of crushing it by extortion. As the result of this we may calculate with certainty that the revenue will not fall off, even the first year, by any means in proportion to the proposed rate of reduction in the tax; and before long the revenue derived from it will be equal to or greater than the amount now received.

Mr. ROBBINS. I hope I shall be allowed a little time longer.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the gentleman's time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman from North Carolina desire?

Mr. ROBBINS. Thirty minutes will be enough.

There was no objection, and Mr. ROBBINS's time was extended.

Mr. ROBBINS. I thank the House for its courtesy. Last year the revenue from tobacco was $41,106,546. Of this $1,896,500 was raised from special taxes on dealers, &c. We have not proposed to change that tax. The amount raised from cigars is $11,061,278. We propose to reduce the tax on these merely from $6 to $5 a thousand. Twenty-eight millions one hundred and forty-eight thousand seven hundred and sixty-seven dollars was raised from manufactured tobacco and snuff, and we would reduce the tax on these to 16 cents per pound. These changes in the tax, according to the most liberal estimates, will not cut down the revenue even for the next year more than $6,000,000. These being the figures I hope this Congress will not refuse to make the reduction, when I have shown that we have an excess of revenue of $36,000,000, if the sinking fund be suspended, as I most earnestly hope it will be.

This whole idea of a sinking fund was the ridiculous mathematical juggle of a visionary theorist of the last century who conceived the notion that debts could be paid by making figures and taking money out of one pocket and putting it into the other.

The Committee of Ways and Means have agreed to report in favor of suspending further payments into this fund until 1885, and I hope the House will adopt the report; but if gentlemen continue to insist upon paying the principal of the public debt, I ask if $2,500,000 a month or $30,000,000 a year is not paying it fast enough?

If we pass the income tax-bill we shall have several more million dollars than I have estimated, and if instead of leaving the tariff as it is now, raising only $130,000,000 a year, you will pass our new bill, according to calculations which I do not think extravagant we will raise many more millions. I think that the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] the other day, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] to-day, have shown you that by reducing the duties in many cases you double, or at least greatly increase the revenue, and by passing this tariff bill there is reason to believe that we will raise some $10,000,000 more than we do under the present law. From whatever point of view, therefore, you look at the subject, the justice, the propriety, and the practicability of reducing the tobacco tax are clear. I would urge the House to mitigate the heavy burden now weighing down this important industry, and to do so without delay.

My time is growing short, and I will not trespass much longer upon the patience of the House; but before I conclude I want to call attention to the remarkable spectacle that we witness here. The Committee of Ways and Means, in a spirit of moderation which ought to meet a favorable response from every gentleman on this floor, have brought in a tariff bill which has no extreme features, which proposes no reckless innovations, which does not aim to uproot suddenly even the vicious system of so-called protection, but only to cut it down a little and turn the course of legislation gradually in the proper direction. How are we met? We are met here by a spirit of the most uncompromising opposition on the part of gentlemen representing those interests which have so long been protected, which have for so many years been fostered at the expense of others, which have grown rich and powerful through a system which makes everybody else their tributaries. Shall there be no end to this? Will the daughters of the horse-leech always cry "Give!" "Give?"

A few weeks ago a large delegation representing the iron interests came here to see and talk with the Committee of Ways and Means. They said they recognized the propriety of a reduction in some of the duties upon iron, and they made a proposition of compromise, embracing what they said those reductions should be, and we in a spirit of liberality, not desiring to oppress anybody, accepted their proposition. I have seen in the newspapers, since then, a notice of a large and enthusiastic meeting, held in Philadelphia, participated in by some of those very gentlemen I believe, at which they denounced our work and repudiated the compromise they offered us, and the gentlemen here who represent them and whom I esteem so highly that I regret all the more having to differ with them in opinion, oppose and antagonize our bill, if not with the wisdom of true statesmen, certainly with the zeal of honest fanatics.

Will those great and wealthy communities which have under the existing system so long thriven by contributions from their less prosperous brethren never be satisfied to lighten the burdens they impose upon the rest of us? Look, for instance, at Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, both represented by distinguished gentlemen on the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. BANKS and Mr. KELLEY.] Their valleys bloom like the rose! Their hills are white with the beautiful cottages and vine-trellised homes of happy and thrifty citizens. It is true that under the shadow of the vast piles of wealth there heaped up we hear sometimes the mutterings of discontent from the toiling masses below; but still those are rich, great, and fortunate States, and I am sure I do not envy, but rejoice at their prosperity. Look, on the other hand, at my own impoverished State of North Carolina, with a soil and climate and natural resources unsurpassed by any State in the Union. The sun kisses her cheek like a lover; nor was any region ever occupied by a more noble, brave, sober, steady, and industrious population.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] the other day paid them the just compliment of saying that they are now at work doing their duty and attending to their own business. Let me thank that gentleman for his kind remark, and at the same time tell him that North Carolinians have always been so—a people of the manliest type, of the best habits, and no nonsense. Yet they are pitiably poor, and superficial observers have attributed their slow material growth to their own want of genius and energy. Sir, have they shown any lack of these qualities in other respects? No people have exhibited a higher genius in government. No State can boast of wiser rulers or better laws.

And in the late conflict of arms, by the judgment of all her sisters, no State showed a greater capacity for warlike organization, a sterner persistency, or a more Titanic energy than my own gallant old State of North Carolina. Out of a white male population of only three hundred and fourteen thousand of all ages, she sent more than one hundred thousand soldiers to the tented field, or about one in three of all her white males. What State, what nation ever beat that? And what kind of soldiers were they? Let their great commander-in-chief bear witness. When he arrayed them for battle the last time at Appomattox, and the serried battalions of North Carolina filed by him into line, with bleeding feet, but still compact, still undaunted, with a tear in his eye he said, and it was his last word to them, "God bless North Carolina, always faithful."

Why does a State that is peopled by such men remain poor? Let me tell you. It is because she has been reduced to a skeleton by paying the perpetual tribute exacted from her by unequal and unjust Federal legislation. Nature and circumstances have made her heretofore an agricultural State. What interest of hers has ever been fostered by protection or promoted by your favors? The fishermen of New England have received bounties; the cotton-spinners of Massachusetts, the iron-workers of Pennsylvania, the sheep raisers of Ohio and Vermont, the hemp-growers of Kentucky and Missouri, even the sugar-planters of Louisiana, all these have had protection extended to their several industries, thereby increasing the value of their products and increasing also the price which North Carolina has to pay for nearly everything she buys abroad. You have donated millions of acres of the public domain to the new States of the West for railroads, for schools, and for other improvements, and thereby made those States great and rich.

As for North Carolina you give her nothing; you take everything from her. She is an agricultural State, and you are the representatives of a country whose real superiority among the nations originates from its vast agricultural resources; and yet you tax the fruit that grows on her trees; you tax the grain that waves in her fields; you have taxed the cotton that whitened her plains; you have taxed and are still taxing from 100 to 1,000 per cent. the tobacco that would otherwise be one of her great money-making crops.

Mr. KELLEY. Do we not protect her rice and ship-stores? And if she would work her iron ores and coal-fields, would she not be protected by the same laws that protect Pennsylvania?

Mr. ROBBINS. I have said that nature and circumstances and her peculiar labor system so recently abolished made North Carolina of necessity an agricultural State. Have you no fostering law for a State which pushes those industries for which nature best fits her? Must every State tread in the pathway marked out by Pennsylvania or Massachusetts in order to be sure of Federal favor? It would indeed seem so; and the suggestion of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] implies that there are favored interests, and that States which will adopt these as their own may thereby become Federal beneficiaries. But I thank my friend for alluding to our coal and iron, for I know the kindly interest which he personally feels toward my State, and I will say to him that we expect soon to enter upon the development of those great natural resources, but all we ask is fair play, hands off, no protection, only let there be no discrimination against us. Certainly we have never had any protection of North Carolinian interests yet.

Throughout most of her history no State has been truer to the Union; but the Union, allow me to say, has been to her like a stepmother. This has gone on until hundreds and thousands of her sons in despair have bidden adieu to their native hills and sought homes in other States, where Federal legislation brings benefits, and not burdens. To whatever State her sons have gone they have illustrated its annals by their genius and valor and statesmanship.

No citizen of hers has been President of this Republic, yet three Presidents were born within her borders, and they owed their success to the great qualities which they inherited from the sturdy stock of their native State. Other losses she might endure, but when you tax her to impoverishment and drive out her people to other States, like Jacob she exclaims, "If I be bereaved of my children, I am bereaved."

In spite of all the losses and misfortunes and injustice she has suffered, North Carolina, by the bountifulness of her resources and the energy of her people, is yet a great and magnificent State. She is yet sixth in rank of the old thirteen. Let those who speak of her slow progress remember the many States that have grown great and waxed fat by feeding on her vitals.

I shall make no apology for dwelling at such length upon the situation and comparative growth of my own State. I have done so because she is so good a representative of that large number of States that have been retarded in prosperity by unfair legislation here, especially in this matter of taxation and the distribution of favors.

By my voice, as one of her delegation, she asks now for justice; she demands reform in the revenue system; she asks to be protected from the protectionists and from the impositions and oppressions of the internal-tax gatherer. Robin Hood, the freebooter of Sherwood Forest, robbed the rich to help the poor; yet he was only an outlaw. What shall be said of those who rob the poor to favor the rich and call it protection? I appeal to this House to adopt the very moderate and conservative measures our committee have reported. Modify the high tariff duties levied for the benefit of long-favored classes; reduce the exorbitant taxes now imposed upon the products of the field; and in the race for wealth and prosperity give a more even chance to the agriculturists and to the old agricultural States.

Mr. KELLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. WOOD. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] gives way I move that the committee rise.

Mr. KELLEY. I yield for the motion, with the understanding that I shall go on after the morning hour to-morrow.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAYLER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to impose duties upon foreign imports, to promote trade and commerce, to reduce taxation, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

OCEAN NAVIGATION COMPANY.

Mr. ELLIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4783) to incorporate the Ocean Navigation Company and to restore the shipping interest of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

NORMAN WIARD.

Mr. ELLIS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4784) for the relief of Norman Wiard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SEWERAGE OF WASHINGTON CITY.

Mr. MAYHAM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4785) for the improvement of the sewerage of Washington City, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR EVENING SESSION.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that a session has been ordered for this evening.

Mr. BURCHARD. It is desired by the gentleman who made the motion for the session of this evening that it be postponed until Friday evening.

Mr. KELLEY. I was about to ask, at the instance of other gentlemen, that a session be allowed to-morrow evening for general debate. A number of gentlemen desire to make speeches.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. I object to an evening session for debate; I have no objection to meeting for business.

The SPEAKER. A session has already been ordered for this evening, and the proposition is to vacate that session and fix one for Friday night.

Mr. KELLEY. Let to-night be assigned for general debate.

Mr. BURCHARD. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] who has just spoken, and who would be entitled to the floor this evening, has informed me that he does not wish to proceed to-night. Therefore the order might be changed so as to allow general debate to-night.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois. It seems that the gentleman who asked for the session of this evening to consider the bill to promote the refunding of the national debt and the loan of savings to the United States for that purpose does not desire to go on this evening. It is therefore asked that the session of this evening be devoted to general debate, no other business whatever to be transacted. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

PAVEMENTS IN WASHINGTON CITY.

Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee for the District of Columbia a letter of the commissioners of the District, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, information as to bituminous and wood-block pavements; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. WALSH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4786) for the relief of Lieutenant-Commander James H. Sands, United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. GARDNER, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of papers in the case of Charles Woelfer, second lieutenant Company E, Twenty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS AND AGENTS.

Mr. PHILLIPS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4787) to provide for uniform service among the clerks and agents in the railway mail service; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

MARTIN R. ARCHER.

Mr. BELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4788) for the relief of Martin R. Archer, postmaster at Gainesville, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN F. SEVERSON.

On motion of Mr. MAYHAM, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Benjamin F. Severson, no adverse report having been made.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. BURCHARD. I ask by unanimous consent that House bill No. 4414, to amend laws relating to internal revenue, be reprinted. It is the special order in the House, and the regular number of copies has been exhausted.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

EL PASO TROUBLES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from Colonel Hatch on the subject of the El Paso troubles; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

WRECK OF THE HURON.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, recommending an appropriation for the payment of sundry bills for service rendered in connection with the wreck of the United States steamer Huron; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

JOHN DILL.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copy of court-martial proceedings in the case of John Dill, late colonel Thirty-ninth Kentucky Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ALDRICH, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for five days.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. BURCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. No. 4414) to amend laws relating to internal revenue, which is the special order; and if gentlemen do not desire to proceed to its consideration to-night I will agree to a motion for a recess.

Mr. WOOD. Do not press it to-night.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move the House take a recess until seven and a half o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. The session to-night will be for debate only, no business whatever to be transacted, and the chair will be occupied by Mr. KENNA.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., Mr. CRAVENS in the chair.

Mr. VAN VORHES. As the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] who was designated by the Speaker to take the chair this evening as Speaker pro tempore has not yet arrived, I move the House take a recess for ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

At the expiration of ten minutes the House resumed its session, Mr. CRAVENS in the chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By order of the House the session this evening is for debate only, no business whatever to be transacted.

TARIFF.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the history of the proposed tariff bill scarcely shows its projectors to be "the great minds of the country who are to lead us onward in the important struggle for national grandeur, power, and wealth." (See Mr. WOOD'S speech, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 2393.) Leaders of men and exponents of commanding ideas adhere with heroic purpose to their convictions. The projectors of the present measure have evinced a spirit of vacillation quite inconsistent with this. The original measure given out informally several weeks ago is widely different from the one now proposed. The duties on some leading articles have been increased by the latter as much as 500 per cent. over those imposed in the former, and so various are the changes that have been made that scarcely a phase of similitude is left.

It is not unlikely that the admonition given by the monster meetings of Allegheny and Pittsburgh and Reading and Pottsville, in which tens of thousands of workingmen participated to give emphatic expression to their protest against the reduction of duties, had something to do with these changes. Nor is it unlikely that the remonstrances, memorials, and petitions—a single one of which contained the names of over one hundred thousand workingmen—against tinkering with the tariff, that came like a deluge from all sections of the country where intelligence dominates the masses, exerted a somewhat potent influence over the "great minds" having the matter in charge. It is even possible to believe that the political fortunes of an aspiring party might be regarded as needlessly imperiled by too radical a change, for the great fact is dawning that the protection of American industries is no longer a local but a national question. The people of the Western States have already joined hands with those of the Eastern and Middle States upon this question, and the alliance is a formidable one. Certain portions of the South are now on the way in the same direction. The commanding political issue in this country to-day is protection and revenue therefrom versus free trade and revenue from internal taxation. The republican party, without reference to locality, will stand as a unit in favor of the first proposition. The democratic party, having due regard for certain localities and the possibilities of political preferment therein, will support the second proposition as a mass.

It is not a new issue. It has been canvassed year after year during our organic history, and the changes that have been made from time to time are more numerous than the years of our national life, being one hundred and twenty-eight as stated by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.] These changes, frequent, sometimes sweeping and radical, operate most perniciously on the business interests of the country. It is in the very nature of things that they should have such effect. They unsettle values, disturb commercial relations, and necessitate new adjustments in every branch of industry at each recurrence. The statement of the gentleman from New York that he has just begun his work of destruction will not commend him to the thinking people of the country. In the present condition of affairs, with bankruptcies, business depression, low wages, and the enforced idleness of many who would be glad to get employment, the threat is simply cruel. All our past experience shows that prosperous times and high duties have invariably coincided; and conversely, that low duties and hard times have gone together. It moreover shows that high duties have always, and with success, been resorted to for the purpose of lifting the business interests of the country out of the depressions which have from time to time afflicted it. Let us examine some of the more notable examples.

In 1816 the democratic party became the earnest opponent of protection, and having a majority in both branches of Congress it reduced to a very low rate the duties on importations. From that year until 1824 great business distress prevailed. In the latter year the national republican party had gained a strong foot-hold in Congress, and with the assistance of a few democratic members that party passed the tariff of 1824, which was highly protective. This party in that year elected John Quincy Adams President, and got control so far in both Houses of Congress in 1828 as to be able to increase the duties on iron and many other articles. Highly advantageous results followed and the country continued to enjoy prosperity until 1834.

During this period of ten years from 1824 we imported thirty millions of specie more than we exported and paid off an indebtedness of about $100,000,000 resulting from the war of the Revolution and that of 1812. In 1832 South Carolina attempted nullification of the tariff laws, and although to the eternal credit of President Jackson he quickly nipped the movement, the democrats in Congress, desirous of appeasing the demands of that State, as well as doubtless to promote their favorite doctrine of free trade, exchanged the protective policy for one which provided for a gradual reduction of duties, which was to continue until 1842, after which a horizontal duty of 20 per cent. was to be charged. Disastrous consequences followed this reduction, and it doubtless was one of the principal causes of the terrible financial crash and general distress of 1837.

Relief was sought at the hands of the whig party, and in 1840 Harrison was elected President. When 1842 had arrived the whig party was sufficiently strong in Congress to control legislation. It gave to the country the protective tariff of that year. That good results and an improved condition of things followed is within the memory of many men still living.

The democratic party, realizing the popularity of the protective policy, changed front in the canvass of 1844, and adopted as its slogan, "Polk, Dallas, and the tariff of '42." Having faith in its sincerity, and especially in view of the fact that Dallas was a Pennsylvanian, the people placed the reins of government again in its hands. It soon repeated its old follies. Religiously wedded to free trade, it would not brook the continued existence of protective legislation, so it repealed the tariff of 1842 and substituted therefor the tariff of 1846, which imposed decreased ad valorem rates. The intention of the framers of this measure was to wholly eliminate the protective policy out of the laws imposing duties. The manufacturing industries soon felt the stroke thus inflicted, and gradually the depression spread over the whole country. Partial relief came from the discovery of gold in California which attracted considerable emigration, and from the Crimean war which created a large demand for our breadstuffs. In addition to creating this demand, the Crimean war generated a large European consumption which rendered protection for a time not necessary. After the war was over, however, and the waste had been supplied, the foreign manufacturers began to export largely into the United States, and although it was evident to everybody that financial distress and business prostration were imminent, the democratic party, with its wonted blind fatuity and fatal tendency to error, having full control, enacted the tariff act of 1857 which still further reduced the rates of duty.

This was the last piece of democratic legislation relating to the tariff. It gave birth to the ordinary and necessary consequences of the impolicy which it so faithfully represented. It left the Government bankrupt, and without credit. It checked the development of our resources in many important branches. It stopped our mills, put our furnaces out of blast, and drove to soup-houses able-bodied men and their wives and children, forcing them to eat the bread of charity instead of that of honest toil. It ruined multitudes of merchants and manufacturers, and cut a wide swath of desolation through the land.

When thus conditioned, the republican party came into power. Inheriting from its ancestor, the whig party, such traditions as fitly survived, it was not slow to recognize and adopt the policy of fostering the industries of the country. So in 1861, having the President and a majority in both Houses of Congress, it gave to the country the tariff acts of 1861 and the various supplements thereto, through all of which the spirit of protection runs as well as the idea of large revenues. The general prosperity which has prevailed in all the States that remained in the Union, up to 1873 at least, is convincing evidence of the excellence of the theory of the republican party respecting this subject. Who dare say that the economic ills of 1873 and the years since were not mitigated and alleviated by the tariff laws in force? We have had hard times since 1873. So has Great Britain; so has Germany; so has nearly every civilized country of the world. France is exceptionally somewhat fortunate. All others, like ourselves, are "passing under the rod." But it cannot be denied by any one that our condition has been and is much better than it would have been under free trade. In the progress of my argument I shall adduce some statistical data in support of this conclusion.

I have recalled only some of the salient phases of our experience of tariff legislation, such phases as have emphasis from the decisive character of that legislation, for the purpose of indicating the path of policy, of wisdom, and of safety. I have endeavored to show more particularly the opposing effects of protection and free trade upon the industrial and business interests of the country.

We are now called upon to consider tariff duties not only on account of their bearing upon our commercial, agricultural, manufacturing, and industrial interests, but also their bearing upon the important question of revenue. How to revive our depressed industries that labor may be employed and rewarded and that all branches of business may flourish, is one important question. How to raise sufficient revenue to gradually reduce the principal and pay the interest of the national debt and meet the current expenses of the Government is another important question. These questions are closely allied in many respects, and, fortunately as I think for the people of this country, their solution involves principles of compensation which mutually tend to benefit the Government, which levies and collects the taxes, and the people, who pay them; for if to-day the Government were not in debt, we would have a free-trade revenue measure instead of the comparatively protective bill before us. In that event the country would be subjected to a much more trying ordeal than that which is now impending. We are not left in doubt in this matter, for the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. WOOD] has frankly and repeatedly in the course of his speech explaining this bill avowed the policy of free trade. The traditions of his party, as I have shown, warrant his declarations, and he no doubt has abundant assurances of sympathy with his efforts to accomplish ultimately the consummation he and his party have so long and so devoutly wished.

Will the bill proposed yield sufficient revenue? Will it benefit or injure our industries? I ask these questions together because, as I have said, they are closely connected and the answer to each is necessarily responsive to the other.

The friends of the bill claim through their Representative [Mr. WOOD] that it will increase the revenue and relieve somewhat the burden of taxation and thus benefit the people of the country. They have not the temerity to claim that it enhances protection. On the contrary, they allege that our abilities and facilities are so far developed that we are now able to compete with foreign countries in our own markets. This statement is very far from being correct. We are not able to compete with foreign manufacturers either in our own or in foreign markets. It is true that in some specialties, such as pistols, rifles, muskets, and sporting-guns, sewing-machines, mowing-machines, and certain classes of edge-tools, our superior genius and skill, aided by patents in most cases, have enabled us to export and sell such articles in considerable quantities. Some of our manufacturers who employ convict labor at very low wages are also able to sell in foreign markets, but it is solely in consequence of this fact.

We are not now, nor will we be for years to come, able to compete with foreign manufacturers. There are two great difficulties to be surmounted, which stand in the way of such a realization. These are our higher rates of the wages of labor and the interest on money, both of which are largely in excess of those paid in Great Britain, France, Belgium, Germany, Austria, and Russia, and varying respectively and variously from 30 to 100 per cent. The average rate of the interest of money in Great Britain, our greatest rival, is but little more than one-half of the average rate obtaining in the United States to-day, and our operatives in the mill, factory and mines, even at the present low rates of compensation, are receiving this day from 25 to 100 per cent. more than those of Great Britain. Such differences render successful competition on the part of our manufacturers impossible in foreign marts; and, by parity of reason, these same differences forbid the expediency of permitting foreign manufacturers from competing on equal terms with us in our own markets.

The proposition that we can dispose of our surplus manufactures in foreign markets is a delusion and a snare. It is not within the range of possibilities. The laws of trade, which regulate all such matters under existing conditions, imperatively deny to us any such privilege. Examined in the light its absurdity becomes apparent. I have shown that our higher wages and higher interest on money preclude such expectation.

But, says the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, our exports are increasing. True, I reply, but what do they consist of? Wholly almost of such things as incomparable natural and relative advantages enabled us to supply at market rates. Our total exports of domestic production for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, the latest to the details of which I now have access, amounted to, exclusive of gold and silver, currency value, $632,980,080.

The following articles were embraced:

Bread and breadstuffs	$117,806,476
Cotton, unmanufactured	171,118,508
Hops	2,305,355
Fruits	2,937,030
Furs, hides, and skins	6,269,229
Provisions, wheat, corn, &c	115,001,743
Seeds	3,533,755
Tallow	7,883,616
Ginseng	562,268
Hay	116,936
Hair, unmanufactured	338,487
Tobacco	32,020,214
Animals, living	3,325,203
Wool, raw	26,446
Other unmanufactured articles	792,297
Oil, petroleum in various forms	61,789,438
Coal	2,916,062
	528,742,063

Now it will be observed that all the items enumerated, excepting the last three, may be denominated agricultural productions. I have included petroleum oil because it has no rival in the world. And I include coal and other unmanufactured articles because neither can in any sense be called manufactures. Let us see the difference:

Total exports, exclusive of gold and silver	$632,980,080
Deduct foregoing	528,742,063

for all other articles, the kinds of which cannot be less than one thousand, while those which yielded the aggregate of $528,742,063 do not reach one hundred different kinds of articles in the detailed official report of the Bureau of Statistics from which I have collated them. Now, when we take into consideration in this connection the significant and suggestive fact that our entire exports are but about 8 per cent. of our total productions, the conclusion that we must depend on the home demand for the consumption of our manufactures achieves a triumphant victory. We have excellent reasons for expecting an increasing export trade, but the source from which the bulk of it must come is agriculture. In claiming that this bill will yield sufficient revenue, its friends are also equally mistaken, though on this point there is an evident purpose to hedge on consequences adverse to the prediction.

The restoration of the obnoxious income tax is one method favorably suggested by many supporters of the bill.

Another hedging operation is the effort to stop payments to the sinking fund. The gentleman from New York has given us a long disquisition on the subject of sinking funds; has gone largely into English history to fortify the redoubts of his hostility to them; has shown that the national debt has been decreased $220,954,459.39 in excess of the amount required to be provided for the sinking fund by the act of February 25, 1862, and therefore concludes that payments to this fund should be stopped, and "we should provide only for the amount required for the actual living expenditures," and thus correspondingly lessen taxation.

This is an insidious fallacy, full of seeming promise, but fraught with evil, and that continually. Why is it that the rates of interest are so high with us? Why is it that money is not seeking business enterprise? What is it that impels the prevailing antipathy to the holders of public bonds? There is a latent logic even in this antipathy.

There are locked up in public bonds, municipal and national, over $3,000,000,000 in the United States, whose interest is payable out of taxes imposed upon the people. If this money were not so invested—if such opportunities for investment were not accessible—this vast volume of money would enter into the agricultural, commercial, and manufacturing industries, taxes would be reduced to the necessities of current municipal and national expenses, and unprecedented prosperity would abound. The simple truth is we are all burdened with debt. Public obligations are the debts pro rata of the individuals who compose the community. Every dollar of such indebtedness that is paid off is a relief to that extent, and to the same extent increases the amount of money to be employed in private enterprises. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I say that he who would perpetuate public indebtedness is not a statesman, is not a true friend of society, but is its worst enemy.

The proposition of the advocates of this bill that it will increase the revenue is signally absurd, as the analysis of the measure and the theory of all the probabilities that surround it and our past experience will abundantly show.

The following statement, furnished by the Bureau of Statistics, exhibits a summary of the dutiable and free articles under the present tariff law, showing the number of articles paying ad valorem, specific, and compound rates of duty, embraced in Schedules A to M, both inclusive; also number of articles admitted free of duty, under the Revised Statutes of the United States, approved June 22, 1874, (paragraphs from 921 to 1805, both inclusive, Heyl's tariff:)

Number paying ad valorem rates	823
Number paying specific rates	541
Number paying compound rates	160
Total dutiable	1,524
Number free of duty	648
Total free and dutiable	2,172

The bill reported—

Says the gentleman from New York—

has but one list so called, and that is the dutiable one. It has no compound rates, the duties being either ad valorem or specific, and the latter as far as practicable. It comprises 247 classes of articles, and 775 articles against the large number comprised in the present law.

It will be thus seen that the list of dutiable articles is largely decreased. Assuming that the 160 articles paying compound rates under the present law are included in those paying ad valorem or specific rates, there are now 1,364 distinct articles chargeable with duties. By subtracting from this number the 575 articles chargeable with duties under the bill reported, it will be seen that the decrease in the number of dutiable articles cannot be less than 789. By a statement made by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, to which I shall hereafter advert, it appears that the loss of revenue which will result from this modification of the present law will be $3,198,221.69.

It was to be presumed that the Committee of Ways and Means had definite information on this subject, but the chairman of that committee failed to give it, and in lieu thereof indulged in what I must think chimerical speculations about the expense of collection under the present law, the ambiguities of its language, and the immoral practice of smuggling.

We are not driven, however, Mr. Speaker, to the necessity of depending on fatuous speculations regarding the amount of revenue the bill will yield. We have a calculation that is perfectly reliable, unclouded by free-trade prejudices and uninfluenced by that sympathy which spans the Atlantic Ocean at the expense of our own people.

The following statement made by Mr. Edward Young, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, manifestly exhibits the loss of revenue which this bill will entail:

Summary statement by schedules of the amount of duty received from the articles enumerated in House bill No. 4106, reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, March 26, 1878, that entered into consumption in the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1877, and the estimated amount of duty by the proposed bill, with the increase and decrease of each schedule.

In addition to the loss of revenue to the extent of nearly nine and one-half million dollars this statement shows some peculiarities that are creditable to neither the minds nor the hearts of the promoters of this miserable scheme. For instance, it increases the aggregate duties on sugar, a common necessary of life consumed by the poor as well as the rich. $4,158,996.44, while it diminishes the aggregate duties on silk and silk goods, a luxury coveted and enjoyed by the rich, $3,014,283.86. The nabobs of the East and the sugar-planters of the South would seem to have co-operated in effecting a result so mutually beneficent.

Then it shows, though in less degree, but possibly soon to be in equal or greater degree—who can tell what democratic ascendency will bring forth?—a decrease of duties on metals, whose production and manufacture gives employment to thousands of men, of $257,923.69, and this in the face of importations of iron and steel and manufactures of them, amounting to $2,560,394 for the quarter ending September 30, 1877, while it makes spices, the condiments of every table in the land, pay an increase over present rates of $556,205.79.

Then, again, this democratic sympathy which goes out to the South and to Europe, in all cases alike where their interests are supposed to harmonize, decreases the duties on cotton and cotton manufactures from 53.56 per cent., the present rate, to 28 per cent., and diminishes the revenue from this source over $2,000,000. It is to be borne in mind that our imports of cotton represent wholly, I believe, the manufactured article in various conditions. Now, the loss of revenue thus threatened is a matter of great importance; but the injury to the classes of operatives who earn their living at the loom, many of whom are women and boys and girls, is incomparably more serious.

It is part of the programme, however, I suppose, and must be carried out. The cotton-planters of the South, unlike the sugar-planters, have command of the domestic market. They produce a large excess over the home demand, having exported, as I have stated, over $170,000,000 unmanufactured cotton during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877. On the theory that reciprocity of trade is conducive to the welfare of the interests participating, the duties are put so low as to invite the return of this same cotton after it is manufactured. Our poor operatives must not complain, and our manufacturers, though they supply all classes of cotton goods in abundance and at cheaper prices than ever before obtained in the United States, must close their mills in obedience to the requirements of the declared policy.

While in pursuit of this inquiry it may be well to advert to some other features of the bill.

The following comparisons are suggestive:

Articles.		Proposed duty.	Present duty.
Iron in pigs	per ton.	$5 00	$7 00
Scrap-iron, cast	do..	4 00	6 00
Scrap-iron, wrought	do..	6 00	8 00

Now, although the importations of these articles during the last two years have not been large, owing in all probability to the circumstance that our markets were glutted, the door is nevertheless opened wide by the bill for their admission the moment our iron trade revives. The principle of protection is expelled as to these articles entirely by the proposed reduction, and our iron-workers are denied in advance the fullness of the promise of better times.

From a statement published in the Bulletin of the American Iron and Steel Association of April 10, 1878, it appears that there were in the United States 716 completed furnaces on the 31st day of December, 1877, 270 of which were in blast and 446 of which were out of blast at that date.

The imports of pig iron in 1877 amounted to 66,871 net tons and our exports to 7,687 tons. The capacity of these furnaces is equal to a supply far in excess of any possible home demand. The capacity of the furnaces of Great Britain alone, it is claimed, is equal to the wants of the world. But, in addition to this, France, Germany, Belgium, Russia, Sweden, and Austria, with all of which we have intimate commercial relations, have an extensive capacity, having produced in 1876—the latest year I have obtained the production of—an aggregate of 4,959,080 tons. Add to this the production of Great Britain for 1876, which was 6,555,997 tons, and then compare this total production with our own for 1877, which was 2,314,585 tons, and is it not simply suicidal, in view of these facts, coupled with the telling circumstances relating to the wages of labor and the interest on money which I have heretofore endeavored to explain, to reduce the duties as proposed? Sharp domestic competition in this and every other industry has not only made cheap markets but has driven a vast number of business men into the straits of bankruptcy and deprived a much vaster number of workingmen of their occupations.

This bill is open to many other objections relating to metals, but I shall only mention one further instance which will forcibly point out one of its patent defects. The accepted theory of tariff legislation is that luxuries should pay high duties; that commodities which compete with home productions, either in the material or the labor which jointly make them, should pay such duties as will guard against exorbitant prices on the one hand and pay remunerative wages to labor and yield fair profits to capital on the other; and that all things else should come in free.

Now, this bill proposes to make "tin in plates or sheets, terne and tagger's tin," pay "one cent and one-tenth of a cent per pound; in bars, pigs, or blocks, and grain-tin, 10 per cent. ad valorem." This description covers only the pure metal, and unfortunately it is a metal of great value and utility which has not yet been discovered among our mineral resources. We consequently have to import from England, Australia, and other countries such quantities as we want. Under the present tariff tin in bars, pigs, and blocks, and grain-tin are free of duty. In view of the opportunity thus afforded two large tin-plate works have been established in Western Pennsylvania, one of which is in the district which I have the honor to represent. These works have a large capacity and their manufactures are sold in all parts of the Union. The present duty on similar manufactures is 2 cents and 2¼ cents per pound, according to the process of galvanizing or coating. This duty is a discrimination in favor of the home industry which the present bill will impair in two ways, first, by imposing a duty, as before stated, of 10 per cent. ad valorem on the raw material, and, secondly, by reducing the present duty on the manufacturers to 1¼ cents and 2 cents per pound, according to the process of galvanizing or coating. No good reason whatever exists for such discrimination against this industry; for like our planished sheet-iron, which has driven the once celebrated Russia sheet-iron from our markets, though but one mill in the United States makes it, and that mill, I am proud to say, is in my district also, the manufactures of these tin-plate works are cheap and excellent.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is not at all necessary to search out the inimical provisions that lurk in this bill. The gentleman from New York does not hesitate to assert the idea that permeates it. It is the first step toward a revenue tariff wholly devoid of the principle of protection. That gentleman says:

> If I had the power to commence de novo I should reduce the duties 50 per cent. instead of less than 15 per cent. upon an average, as now proposed.

That declaration discloses the animus of the bill unmistakably.

It will be noted, too, that he admits an average reduction of duties of nearly 15 per cent. I have shown by the estimate made by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics that this bill would diminish the customs receipts nearly nine and one-half millions of dollars. In order to boost it into a respectable attitude before the nation's creditors the gentleman indulges the hope that our imports will increase and hence yield a greater revenue than that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877. Why the gentleman should cherish such hopes I cannot understand, because he has shown by facts, figures, and inferences that we are not only able to supply ourselves with all the leading articles that pay duty, but are prepared to enter into competition in the foreign markets of the world! One of these positions is surely untenable; which one I will leave the friends of this measure to determine.

We protectionists think, Mr. Speaker, that increasing imports tends to our impoverishment. One palpable result is the exportation of our gold and silver. The retention of these implies the accumulation of durable wealth like the building of houses, workshops, and mills, and the improvements of lands, while their exportation for the purpose of buying such commodities as are usually imported implies an early and almost absolute loss since the consumption of such commodities, excepting a few of the large number, means extinction. Wealth results from producing and selling more than we buy and consume; while poverty results from buying and consuming more than we produce and sell. Is it possible to retain our gold and silver if we buy from year to year millions of dollars' worth from foreign countries more than we sell to them? Is it possible for us to be busy when we voluntarily spend abroad the capital that stimulates enterprise? Can our workingmen expect employment when we substantially employ the workingmen of other countries to make the things we need? The adoption of the bill before us will draw this evil train.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us examine some data which point with conclusive effect, I think, to the coincidence of high duties, large revenues, and prosperous times on the one hand, and low duties, small revenues, and hard times on the other. I have stated as a historical fact that depression of our industries preceded the tariff of 1824, that that tariff and its supplements largely increased the rate of duties, and that great advantages followed and continued until the adoption of the low tariff of 1832. I have also stated as matter of history that unfortunate consequences attended the latter and continued until the adoption of the high tariff of 1842. Although our population and capabilities gradually increased, and we should therefore have expected, on the theory of the advocates of this bill, that our revenues from customs would correspondingly increase, the following numerical data, which I take from an excellent article published in the Pittsburgh American Manufacturer of July 20, 1877, at once show the fallacy of that theory and the truth of the historic fact:

Nine years under the high-duty policy.		Nine years under the low-duty policy.
Years ended September 30.	Revenue from customs.	Years ended September 30.	Revenue from customs.
1825	$20,098,713 45	1834	$16,214,957 15
1826	23,341,331 77	1835	19,391,310 59
1827	19,712,283 29	1836	23,409,940 53
1828	23,205,523 64	1837	11,169,290 39
1829	22,681,965 91	1838	16,158,800 36
1830	21,922,391 39	1839	23,137,924 81
1831	24,224,441 77	1840	13,499,502 17
1832	28,465,237 24	1841	14,487,216 74
1833	29,032,508 91	1842	18,187,908 76
Total	212,684,397 37	Total	155,656,851 50

The difference in revenue in favor of high duties is thus shown to be $57,027,545.87. This should dispel the loose conjectures of the gentleman from New York as to increased imports and increased receipts therefrom.

But I said a few moments ago that increasing imports tends to our impoverishment. The following comparison of imports retained for consumption during the periods just mentioned, as representing the high duty and low duty policy, read in the light of the experience of those periods will effectually sustain the proposition.

Years ended September 30.	Imports retained for consumption.	Years ended September 30.	Imports retained for consumption.
1825	$63,749,432	1834	$103,208,521
1826	60,434,865	1835	129,391,247
1827	56,080,932	1836	168,233,675
1828	66,914,807	1837	119,134,255
1829	57,834,049	1838	101,264,609
1830	56,489,441	1839	144,597,607
1831	83,157,598	1840	88,351,207
1832	76,989,793	1841	112,477,096
1833	88,295,576	1842	88,440,549
Total	609,946,493	Total	1,055,698,766

Says this writer:

These statistics show that $445,752,273 more of imports were retained for consumption in the latter than in the former period. It was this vast excess that overwhelmed home industry and ruined the people and the Government. We may instructively note the fact that the revenue from customs during the nine years, 1825-'33, reckoned as a percentage on the total value of imports retained for consumption, both dutiable and free, was equivalent to 28.676 per cent.; while a like statement for the nine years 1834-'42 yields an average of only 6.782 per cent.

As I have verified my statements by incontestable mathematical data regarding the high tariff of 1824 and the low tariff of 1832, so I shall verify my assertions regarding the low tariff of 1846 and the subsequent acts consistent with it, and the high tariff of 1861 and the numerous acts which, especially in the earlier part of its existence, bettered it.

The following comparison of receipts from customs affords indisputable evidence of the correctness of the positions I have sought to maintain:

Fifteen years under the low-duty policy.		Fifteen years under the high-duty policy.
Years ended June 30.	Revenue from customs.	Years ended June 30.	Revenue from customs.
1847	$23,747,864 66	1862	$49,056,397 02
1848	31,757,070 96	1863	69,059,642 40
1849	28,346,738 82	1864	102,316,152 99
1850	39,668,686 42	1865	84,928,260 60
1851	49,017,567 92	1866	179,046,651 58
1852	47,339,326 62	1867	176,417,810 88
1853	58,931,865 52	1868	164,464,599 56
1854	64,224,190 27	1869	180,048,426 63
1855	53,025,794 21	1870	194,538,374 44
1856	64,022,863 50	1871	206,270,408 05
1857	63,875,905 05	1872	216,370,286 77
1858	41,789,690 96	1873	188,089,522 70
1859	49,550,416 04	1874	163,103,833 69
1860	53,187,511 87	1875	157,167,722 35
1861	39,582,125 64	1876	148,071,964 61
Total	708,067,548 46	Total	2,278,950,074 87

Without tabulating the imports in detail let me call attention to those of some particular years. In 1857 the total imports for consumption were $360,890,141. The total customs receipts, as appears above, were $63,875,905.05. In 1864 the imports were $329,565,115, and the revenue to the Government was $102,316,152.99. In 1860 the imports for consumption were $362,166,254, and the customs receipts thereon $53,187,511.87. In 1868 the imports for consumption amounted to $371,624,808, and yielded a revenue of $164,464,599.56.

But why elaborate? It is clear beyond all question that high tariff rates pay large amounts into the Treasury while low rates yield small returns. And it is equally certain that the notable periods of prosperity in our national career have synchronized in the main with the years in which we have enjoyed the protective policy; while the adverse policy in the main has brought with it at each recurrence calamitous results.

Our necessities are great and pressing. The annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows a deficiency in the amount due the sinking fund of $3,389,255.51 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877. The receipts compared with the previous fiscal year show a decrease in customs revenue of $17,115,491.54; in proceeds of sales of public lands, in sales of coin, in tax on banks, in prize-money, in sales of public property, and in miscellaneous items, $6,421,297.08. There was an increase in internal revenue, in profits on coinage, and in miscellaneous items of $5,055,335.08, making a net decrease in the receipts from all sources of $18,481,452.54. The actual and estimated receipts for the present fiscal year amount to $265,500,000, and the actual and estimated expenditures, including the amount required for the sinking fund, will be $267,855,448.52, leaving a deficit of $2,355,448.52. The revenues for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, estimated upon existing laws will be $269,250,000. The estimated expenditures for the same period amount to $280,688,796.38. It thus appears that there will be a deficiency at the close of that year of $11,438,796.38. The Secretary suggests, however, that by making judicious reductions in the appropriations there need not necessarily be such deficiency, and therefore I shall not include his amount.

Now, I have shown by the estimate made by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics that the bill under consideration will reduce the customs receipts about $9,500,000 on the assumption that the volume of the dutiable imports will not diminish. It is altogether probable, however, that it will diminish, because the inevitable effect of the reduction of customs duties will be to impair the purchasing power of the people by depriving labor of employment and capital of opportunities of investments in business enterprises. It is also a part of the scheme of the majority to reduce the taxes on tobacco and liquors. It is admitted the proposed reduction of the tax on tobacco will cause a falling off in receipts from that source of at least $10,000,000. I will accept that as correct for the purposes of argument, though I think the diminution would be much greater. If the scheme to reduce the tax on spirits had succeeded, it would have decreased the revenue from that source at least $25,000,000. And even now we know that the entire revenues from all quarters have fallen off as compared with last year at such a rate thus far as to indicate a decrease of over $10,000,000, principally from internal revenue.

Allowing that the tax on spirits will not be disturbed for some time, but that the tax on tobacco may be reduced as recommended, and that the bill before us becomes a law, the account will stand thus:

Deficiency under existing laws	$2,355,448 52
Decrease resulting from proposed bill	9,404,058 65
Decrease from proposed reduction of tobacco tax	10,000,000 00
Decrease from all sources as indicated by comparison with last year	10,000,000 00
Total	31,759,507 17

Thus ends the first consequence of democratic ascendency. Contrast this prospect with the actual results of the policy of the republican party which enabled the Government to pay off $700,000,000 of the public debt.

But this is not all that democratic policy forebodes. There are pending bills in the Senate and House of Representatives and claims before the southern claims commission which aggregated on the 31st day of March, 1878—those introduced since that date not being included—over $230,000,000. In addition to this there are the following: Texas and Pacific, interest annually for fifty years on $38,750,000, $1,837,500; Brazilian mail service, yearly, for ten years, $810,000; National Railway, $12,000 per mile; and about forty other railroad bills, demanding money or lands, the amounts of money not being specified. There are also sixteen hundred and thirty-eight bills, embracing a great variety of subjects, but all craving money appropriations, in no one of which is any amount named.

Now, a portion, though a relatively small portion, of these claims is just. Nearly all those for pensions for invalid soldiers and marines of the late war are righteous claims, and Congress should not be hypercritical in passing upon them. Judicious appropriations for the improvement of our navigable rivers and harbors, and for the construction of public buildings where they are needed, should be made, and there are undoubtedly some among the multitude of private claims which ought to be paid. The vast majority of them, however, are nothing but efforts to raid the Treasury, and must be frustrated, or this nation will be shaken to its foundation.

It is not to be doubted that every one of these claims, whether appealing to the necessities of the Government, its supposed justice, or its bounty, is earnestly sought and will be persistently pressed. An immense preponderance of them comes from the Southern States. The public sentiment of that section, conscientiously perhaps, encourages their presentation, and will not be content with less than their satisfaction.

Now, the Representatives from that section of the Union are almost solidly democratic, and they outnumber so far their party colleagues from the Northern States that through the power and discipline of the caucus they can effectuate unanimity of action in any direction they desire.

I mention these matters not to stir up or keep alive sectional animosities, but to point out and emphasize the strength of the probability that, in the event of the democratic party attaining control, some of these claims at least will be paid. And so it comes to this, that the different measures proposed by the democratic majority in this body will immensely decrease the revenues and largely increase the expenditures of the Government.

The present revenue system of the United States is the best in the world. It is simply impossible to devise a better one. It makes luxuries, whether imported or produced in the country, pay high taxes. It levies duties on such imported articles as come in competition with home productions, and thus fosters home industry. It admits such commodities as we cannot produce free. It distributes the burden of taxation equitably and universally. It is acceptable to the masses of the people.

The representatives of but a few special interests among practical men complain of it. The doctrinaires, whose operations are in the field of speculation, with keen acumen for framing a priori hypotheses and ready methods of deduction, are the only unselfish men who point out objections to it. But what do they offer in its place? What system of taxation exists anywhere equally good and less onerous? The tariff does not preclude competition and establish monopolies, as Adam Smith insisted, and as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] seems to think, because everybody knows that domestic competition in every branch of industry has become so active as to yield supplies at cheap prices largely in excess of the demand. The proverbial attribute of competition can no longer be invoked in the discussion of this subject. Instead of being the life of trade, competition is nowadays the death of trade.

The other argument we have heard so often, and which is now repeated by the advocates of this bill, namely, that free commerce will enable us to dispose of our surplus productions, is extremely faulty. It is very plausible however. Embellished with rhetoric and placed in the admirable category of free speech, free press, and free men, it captivates the imagination and derives support from the empiric logic that ignores principal factors of the problem. It is not to be disputed that tariff duties shut out a large circle of transactions which we would otherwise have with other nations. It is said that the present law on this subject injures our trade particularly with the Argentine Republic, with Chili, and with British North America, owing to their nearness to us and their demand for our staples.

By way of enforcing the argument the trade of these respective countries with Great Britain is contrasted with their trade with the United States, and the statistics show that Great Britain enjoys an immense preponderance, amounting to 95 per cent. in some things. Now if the effect of our protective policy results thus favorably to Great Britain, why is it that Great Britain is so anxious that we should adopt free trade? The argument is that we do not rival Great Britain and other countries in the markets of the world because we impose restrictions on trade; we could compete with Great Britain and other countries if we would remove these restrictions; and Great Britain and all other countries want a great competitor—for what? For the fun of the thing?

The truth is we are immensely rich in resources, and the whole world wants to pluck us. It is marvelously plain common sense that all the nations of the earth would not insist upon free trade with us unless they expected advantages from it. The gaining of such advantages to them implies corresponding losses to us, undoubtedly, in view of the salient fact, never to be forgotten in arguing this question, that we have within our own country everything necessary to supply our wants, excepting tea and coffee and a few articles of luxury. We admit the former free, and the latter should not escape the payment of duty.

Before concluding I desire to say a word regarding the partisan aspects presented by the pending controversy. I have held the democratic party responsible for this bill and for the adverse tariff legislation in the past. I have thought it proper to set forth the issue in this way, not only because history justifies the charge, but because the burden of the speech of the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] is the old democratic construction of the Constitution, which denies to the General Government the right to regulate politico-economic questions, and the democratic side of the House to-day applauded this view as vigorously as ever in the past. I have thought it proper, moreover, because every member of this House, if I am not mistaken, who will vote for this bill, is a democrat, while every republican member, if I am not mistaken, will vote against it. The protection of the industries of the country has therefore a partisan character, and has assumed a more pronounced partisan character in fact than it ever had before. While this is the case, however, I do not wish to do injustice to my democratic colleagues from Pennsylvania, who will, I believe, unite with this side of the House to kill this bill, nor to any other such democratic members; but I cheerfully and gladly award to all such gentlemen their just meed of praise.

But, Mr. Speaker, I will not trespass further than to say that all good reasons in my opinion converge upon the conclusion that this bill should be defeated. If any bill relating to this subject should pass it should be a bill increasing rather than reducing the duties on imports. We import too many commodities now that our people can produce. Let us give employment to our own capital and our own people, diversify our industries and multiply our facilities for supplying our wants, and we shall soon have unbounded prosperity and happiness throughout the United States.

REPEAL OF THE RESUMPTION LAW.

Mr. KEIGHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, during the late extra session I took occasion to place upon the record, briefly, my reasons for voting against the repeal of the resumption act. Time and further examination have only served to strengthen the conclusion I then reached, and I now desire to give to the House and the country more fully and at length the reasons for my faith and action.

Questions touching the propriety of the repeal of the resumption act or the fulfillment of its promise now occupy the foremost place in all political discussions. The wide divergence of opinion thereon, the zeal and ingenuity with which the advocates of utterly hostile theories urge their pet schemes for the cure of our financial ills, prove the necessity of giving to the subject the most careful thought and mature deliberation.

Where so many differ so widely not all can be right and many must be wrong. Widely as opinions differ, however, upon many points involved, upon one important point I think all are agreed. We all agree that we should so soon as possible give to the country a currency the most stable in value and the least liable to rapid increase or diminution in volume that it is possible for us to secure. A currency the purchasing power of which is subject to little or no change, the volume of which varies but little, cannot fail to maintain comparative steadiness in prices, and by so doing lend an element of certainty to commercial transactions, without which prosperity is impossible. Under such a currency the man of business who is called upon to aid or enter on a given enterprise, is enabled to judge closely of final results. He may thus the more readily be induced to engage therein though the margin of profit be small.

The investment of capital at the lowest possible rates of profit, is of the highest importance to the whole people and especially to the laboring classes. The earnings of capital beyond the rate of profit reserved to the investor inure to the benefit of the whole people. Eliminate so far as possible uncertainty from investments and capital will seek them eagerly at the lowest living rates in preference to others where a greater return is probable but where the hazard of failure is correspondingly increased. Where uncertainty attends an enterprise, in the same degree the promise of profit must be increased or no one will touch it.

If such a venture succeeds the increased rate of profit flows alone to the coffers of capital; if it fails, the capital invested is buried and lost. Under conditions of safe investment it would have still continued to contribute to the development of the country and the employment of its labor. A stable currency secures safe investments.

The adoption of a currency which will the most securely guard against great and rapid fluctuations in prices can alone give to the able, the diligent, and industrious those advantages which by every right they should possess over the scheming idler and reckless speculator.

The man who devotes his property and time to legitimate business, in order to succeed must devote his whole time thereto. His property invested must, in the nature of things, often be in such shape that sudden realization thereon would be impossible. No business man can rearrange his business day by day to meet suddenly changing conditions of prices. His only protection is to charge over upon his customers additional prices upon his wares to cover the risk imposed upon him. In this manner he can in some measure shift his burden, but it falls upon the shoulders of the people.

If prices rapidly rise the laborer finds that his wages do not rise in a corresponding degree. All experience attests that on a generally rising market wages are the last to rise, and that until a climax is reached the laborer's wages are clipped from day to day and from week to week.

On the other hand the speculators of Wall street and their kindred in other cities, the men who produce nothing; the men whose capital is always held in hand for speculative purposes; the men who do nothing but scheme and study how best to manipulate markets and take advantage of a rise or fall in prices, find in fluctuations their opportunities. They are familiar with the situation from day to day. Every indication of a rise or fall comes to them as certainly and quickly as the telegraph can transmit the information. Whether we go up or down, the harvest is the same to them. They are drones in the human hive, enabled by these opportunities to draw to themselves an undue proportion of the products of the shop and soil. Cut off these great fluctuations by giving us currency stable in value and steady in volume, and you drive the greater portion of capital now used solely for speculative gain into the service of mankind for lack of employment in its former field. So far I think there is little difference among us.

Where shall we find the currency that shall have a purchasing power least liable to change? Where shall we find the currency that gives the best guarantee of steadiness in volume?

I have studied the several experiments of the race with a purely paper currency, and to me they all furnish but one lesson. Avoid them as you would the plague. Nowhere and at no time has any people attempted to plant its business upon a purely paper currency that overwhelming ruin and disaster has not followed the attempt. It has always been found that no power could arrest its depreciation in value.

It will be of value to us, it will be of value to the American people, to review often and carefully these experiments of the past. I now propose to recall and group together the most important of these experiments and shall follow, so near as may be, their order in history. The first to which I shall call attention is that which is known in history as "Law's paper-money scheme."

John Law, the author and conductor of this scheme, is perhaps entitled to be considered the first prominent advocate of extended paper-money systems. Born a subject of Great Britain, and possessed of property and influence, he first strongly urged the adoption of his plans upon the English Government. Fortunately for that nation the man and his theories were rejected.

In France he met with better success and secured opportunities for testing his theories to the fullest extent. It will be found useful at this time to recall the principal arguments advanced by Law in support of his plans, and it is surprising how closely they resemble those put forward by inflationists of the present day.

It was the favorite argument of Law—the one upon which all his theories were based—that the power and prosperity of a nation increase in proportion to the amount of money circulating therein, and that as the richest nations have not specie enough to afford full employment to their inhabitants this defect may be supplied with paper money. Have we not heard the same arguments urged early and often upon this floor? Are not the different changes sounded upon them day after day by the opponents of resumption? If this be true, before we lend a willing ear to such arguments we should consider well the results flowing from the fabric reared by Law upon those arguments.

Law first obtained permission and authority to establish a company with the exclusive privilege of trading to the Mississippi and the then province of Louisiana. The company was chartered in August, 1717, with full and complete powers over commerce and taxes, and they were made the sole coiners of money. The company under the management of Law drew to itself privilege after privilege, until it was finally erected into the Royal Bank of France.

So soon as the bank from a private became a public institution its notes were issued to the amount of one thousand million livres. Backed by the whole power and authority of the nation (an expression we now sometimes hear) these notes for the moment commanded the confidence of all classes. Immense redundant issues caused a rapid nominal rise in prices. An era of apparent prosperity and speculative frenzy began which beggars description. Princes and peasants alike became victims to the mania. Capital and labor forsook the walks of industry and legitimate business to enter the vortex of speculation. Paper fortunes were builded up in a single day, the possessors of which hugged to themselves the delusion that their wealth was real.

As faintly describing the delirium that for a time reigned supreme, I read an extract from Mackey's account of this delusion:

> Law was now at the zenith of his prosperity, and the people were rapidly approaching the zenith of their infatuation. The highest and the lowest classes alike were filled with a vision of boundless wealth. * * * People of every age and sex and condition of life speculated in the rise and fall of the Mississippi bonds.
> The Rue de Quincampoix was the grand resort of the jobbers, and, it being a narrow and inconvenient street, accidents continually occurred in it from the tremendous pressure of the crowds. Houses in it worth in ordinary times a thousand livres of yearly rent yielded twelve or sixteen thousand. A cobbler who had a stall in it gained about two hundred livres a day by letting it out and furnishing writing materials to brokers and their clients. The story goes that a humpbacked man who stood in the street gained considerable sums by lending his hump as a writing-desk to the eager speculators. * * * At nightfall it was often found necessary to send a troop of soldiers to clear the street.

The fluctuations that gave rise to this terrible fever of speculation enabled the more shrewd and able operators to amass large fortunes. They were producing nothing. They were adding nothing to the general wealth. They were only gathering to their coffers that which the labor of the industrious had produced. The rich were growing richer and the poor poorer.

It was not possible for this condition of affairs to long continue. The more cautious and wary early in 1720, foreseeing the coming storm, began to convert their paper money into specie and send it to foreign countries. Specie could be used anywhere and at any time.

Soon the quiet, steady drain of specie attracted attention. To stop it, upon Law's advice an edict was published, depreciating the value of coin 5 per cent. below that of paper. This failed. Another edict followed increasing the depreciation 10 per cent. and forbidding payments by the bank in greater sums than one hundred livres in gold and ten in silver. Despotic power exercised to control natural laws was of no avail. Still the drain continued until specie became so scarce that trade was seriously disturbed.

In this emergency, (in February, 1720,) Law induced the government to issue an edict forbidding the use of specie altogether. This step, it will be observed, was quite as radical as any advocated by the most ardent greenbackers of to-day. Under this edict no man was allowed to possess more than $100 in coin under pain of heavy fine and confiscation. This law was expected to restore and maintain confidence in the paper money. Instead of doing this it precipitated the crisis which was sooner or later inevitable. The credit of the paper sank at once and forever. The great bubble which had for a period dazzled all France with its brilliancy, suddenly collapsed, leaving nothing but ruin on every hand. A few great fortunes towered above the general wreck, but misery and want ruled everywhere among the masses. For a long time the country hovered on the brink of revolution, and Law, who had been the public idol for a time, was hunted from the nation by an indignant populace.

Such was the first great experiment of the French people with irredeemable paper money.

AUSTRIA.

The experience of Austria is no less instructive. About the middle of the last century the Austrian government was committed to a paper-money system. By the Austrian National Bank, notes were issued which were made a legal tender, and from time to time the issues were increased. In compliance with a natural law no government can arrest, with each succeeding issue the purchasing power of the whole declined. This note issue in 1796 was $41,000,000, in 1800 it was $200,000,000, in 1806 it was $449,000,000. In 1802 it was so depreciated that seven-kreutzer pieces known to be counterfeit commanded a premium over the genuine paper money.

The most stringent measures were adopted for the purpose of bolstering up the credit of the paper money, but without success. In 1810 the paper money fell to 500 for 100, then to 800, and then to 1095. The utter want of confidence in the stability of the currency crushed trade and enterprise. Venality and corruption crept into every branch of the public service. Salaries paid in depreciated paper failed to furnish the necessaries of life, and frauds upon the revenues resulted everywhere. In February, 1811, when this circulation amounted to one thousand million gulden, by a proclamation these notes were suddenly reduced to one-fifth of their nominal value. Provision was made for exchanging them at this rate for a new paper called "redemption notes," also to be a legal tender.

Notwithstanding the government promise that no more of the new paper should be issued than sufficient to redeem the old, on the basis fixed in the proclamation, the new issue followed rapidly in the downward track of its predecessor. The solemn promise of the Emperor, too, was soon violated and secret issues followed one another, until in 1816 the amount of paper money in Austria was over six hundred and thirty-eight millions. Of the situation at that time the historian Springer gives the following graphic picture:

> Austria offered the strange spectacle of a state buried in the stillness of death—a grotesque conglomerate of states of different sizes, some of which did not dare, others of which did not know how, to breathe independently and freely. * * * Undeniably the paper money exercised the worst influence on the morale of the people. Frugality and diligence were lost virtues. Vulgar pleasure-seeking and wild extravagance became habitual even in the lower classes. Of what use to care for the future? Why not to-day enjoy all the pleasures of the senses? How could any one hesitate to pay two hundred gulden for admission to a ball? In fact the money had no value, and if one stood reflecting he might lose ball and money both. The very fact of speaking continually of large sums, which, however, in truth amounted to but very small value, stimulated to frivolity and folly. So the ground was prepared for developing the celebrated "Viennese" disposition, and the loafer life in which the hot-spiced pleasures of the palate seemed the highest good, became indigenous to "the unique city of the Emperor."

Subsequently, and by slow and painful processes, the evils were in some measure reduced; but even yet the cloud hangs over the nation. Every year since has shown a deficit in the national finances.

THE FRENCH ASSIGNAT.

Again in France, in 1789, the advocates of irredeemable paper money came to the front. This time the government at the outset assumed control of the issues. The National Assembly provided for the issue of four hundred million francs in assignats, a paper money not only backed by the "power, credit, and authority" of the nation, but secured under and by the terms of its issue, by a pledge of productive real estate and bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. To quiet existing fears of a recurrence of the nation's terrible experience under John Law, the Assembly issued an address justifying their action, in which we find the following:

> Paper money is without inherent value unless it represents some special property. Without representing some special property it is inadmissible in trade to compete with a metallic currency which has a value real and independent of the public action. Therefore it is that the paper money which has only the public authority as its basis has always caused ruin where it has been established. That is the reason why the bank-notes of 1720, issued by John Law, after having caused terrible evils have only left frightful memories. Therefore it is that the National Assembly has not wished to expose you to this danger, but has given this new paper money not only a value derived from the national authority but a value real, immutable—a value which permits it to sustain advantageously a competition with the precious metals themselves.

Observe here the confession that "paper money which has only the public authority for its basis has always caused ruin where it has been established." This money, however, was to have "not only a value derived from national authority but a value real, immutable." The people were further assured:

> These assignats, bearing interest as they do, will soon be considered better than the coin now hoarded, and will again bring it out into circulation.

The finance committee of the Assembly declared, among other things, that "the circulation of paper money is the best of operations," that "it is the most free because it reposes on the will of the people."

To recall all the arguments advanced would be but to recapitulate those urged to-day by those who wish our paper kept irredeemable. Very little time elapsed after the first issue before the thoughtless and the speculative, their appetite whetted by the universal rise in prices, began to clamor for more paper money.

Mirabeau lent his powerful aid to forward the demand, although less than a year before he had written "paper money is a nursery of tyranny, corruption, and delusions; a veritable orgy of authority in delirium." Such thorough conversion is only paralleled by some we have witnessed in our day, notably that of the Senator-elect from Ohio.

The 29th of September, 1790, the Assembly again yielded. By a vote of 508 to 423 a new issue of eight hundred millions was ordered, making twelve hundred millions in all. A solemn pledge was then given, however, that the entire amount in circulation should never exceed this amount. Not so was the tide to be stayed. The breach once made in the wall the flood came pouring resistlessly in. Again came up the cry of "insufficient circulation." Less than nine months after the pledge of a limit was given an additional issue of six hundred millions was provided for.

Then the results of the suicidal policy began prominently to appear. The paper rapidly depreciated. Specie rapidly disappeared. The uncertainty of values became so clearly apparent that, practically, trade was brought to a stand-still, while speculations and stock-gambling ruled the hour. In the language of Louis Blanc, "Commerce was dead; betting took its place." The most reckless and corrupt spirit was engendered, that ran through all classes and conditions of life. Bribery of public servants was notoriously common. A dislike for steady labor and plain living became general throughout the nation and all eyes were turned to additional issues of paper money for relief.

December 17, 1791, a fourth issue of three hundred millions more was ordered. The total issues now provided for reached an aggregate of twenty-one hundred millions. Yet the insatiable maw of speculation called for more, and on the 30th of April, 1792, the Assembly added three hundred millions more. After this came other issues, until on December 14, 1792, the amount in circulation was twenty-eight hundred millions. If large issues of legal-tender paper create prosperity, France should have become the most prosperous country on the globe. On the contrary it was found that the depreciation of the paper money had caused such heavy advances in the necessaries of life that want and misery were spreading rapidly among the poorer classes. The effect upon the populace is well described by Professor Andrew D. White in his valuable account of this experiment, which I here and subseqently, quote and follow:

> The washer-women of Paris, finding soap so dear that they could scarcely purchase it, insisted that all the merchants who were endeavoring to save something of their little property by refusing to sell their goods for the worthless currency with which France was flooded should be punished with death; the women of the markets, and the hangers-on of the Jacobin club, called loudly for a law "to equalize the value of paper money and silver coin." It was also demanded that a tax be laid especially on the rich, to the amount of 400,000,000 francs to buy bread; and the national convention, which was now the legislative body of the French Republic, ordered that such a tax be levied. Marat declared loudly that the people, by hanging a few shop-keepers and plundering their stores, could easily remove the trouble. The result was, that on the 28th of February, 1793, at eight o'clock in the evening, a mob of men and women in disguise began plundering the stores and shops of Paris. At first they demanded only bread; soon they insisted on coffee and rice and sugar; at last they seized everything on which they could lay their hands, cloth, clothing, groceries, and luxuries of every kind. Two hundred shops and stores were plundered. This was endured for six hours, and finally order was restored only by a grant of 7,000,000 francs to buy off the mob. The new political economy was beginning to bear its fruits. One of its minor growths appeared at the city hall of Paris, where, in response to the complaints of the plundered merchants, Roux declared, in the midst of great applause, that "the shop-keepers were only giving back what they had hitherto robbed them of."

Laws were passed making the sale of goods compulsory and fixing their price in paper money. As a natural result every possible device was adopted to avoid making any sales. A great scarcity ensued and it was found necessary to put the people of large cities upon an allowance. Efforts to support the paper were redoubled. All the power of the government was brought into requisition to sustain the value of the paper. Laws were passed forbidding the sale or exchange of specie for more than its nominal value in paper under a penalty of six years in irons. Another law provided that whoever sold assignats at less than their nominal value should be punished by imprisonment for twenty years in chains.

Surely this paper money was backed by the whole "power, authority, faith, and credit of the government."

Still higher and higher rose the wave of inflation, until early in 1796 the circulation reached thirty-six thousand millions. Despite the stringent laws enacted to support the paper, enforced by such relentless men as led the reign of terror, at this time one franc in gold was worth 288 francs in paper money. Of the situation at this time Professor White gives us this graphic picture:

> The writings of the period give curious details of these prices. Thibaudeau in his Memoirs speaks of sugar as 500 francs a pound soap 230 francs, candles 140 francs. Mercier, in his life-like pictures of the French metropolis at that period, mentions 600 francs as carriage hire for a single drive, and 6,000 francs for an entire day. Everything was inflated in about the same proportion, except the wages of labor; as manufactories closed wages had fallen, until all that kept them up at all was the fact that so many laborers were drafted into the army. From this state of things came grievous wrong and gross fraud. Men who had foreseen these results fully, and had gone into debt, were of course jubilant. He who in 1790 had borrowed 10,000 francs could pay his debts in 1796 for about 35 francs. Laws were made to meet these abuses. As far back as 1794 a plan was devised for publishing official "tables of depreciation" to be used in making equitable settlements of debts, but all such machinery proved futile. On the 18th of May, 1796, a young man complained to the national convention that his elder brother, who had been acting as administrator of his deceased father's estate, had paid the heirs in assignats, and that he received scarcely one three-hundredth part of the real value of his share. To meet cases like this a law was passed establishing a "scale of proportion." Taking as a standard the value of the assignat when there were two billions in circulation, this law declared that in the payment of debts, one quarter should be added to the amount originally borrowed for every five hundred millions added to the circulation. In obedience to this law a man who borrowed two thousand francs when there were two billions in circulation would have to pay his creditors twenty-five hundred francs when half a billion more was added to the currency and over thirty thousand francs before the emissions of paper reached their final amount. This brought new evils, worse if possible than the old.
> But, wide-spread as these evils were, they were small compared with the universal distress. The question will naturally be asked, on whom did this vast depreciation mainly fall at last? When this currency had sunk to about one three-hundredth part of its nominal value, and after that to nothing, in whose hands was the bulk of it? The answer is simple. I will give it in the exact words of that thoughtful historian from whom I have already quoted: "Before the end of the year 1795 the paper money was almost exclusively in the hands of the working-classes, employés, and men of small means, whose property was not large enough to invest in stores of goods or national lands. The financiers and men of large means, though they suffered terribly, were shrewd enough to put much of their property into objects of permanent value. The working-classes had no such foresight or skill or means. On them finally came the great crushing weight of the loss. After the first collapse came up the cries of the starving. Roads and bridges were neglected; manufactures were generally given up in utter helplessness." To continue, in the words of the historian already cited: "None felt any confidence in the future in any respect; none dared to make an investment for any length of time, and it was accounted a folly to curtail the pleasures of the moment to accumulate or save for an uncertain future."

One last attempt was made by the government to sustain paper money. The old plates of the assignat were broken up, and it was announced that the former issues were to be replaced with a new paper money with a new name which was to be "as good as gold." Whoever spoke against the new issue was to be punished by heavy fine and imprisonment. In less than six months twenty-five hundred millions of the new paper were issued and it had sunk below 5 per cent. of its nominal value. The most infatuated then could not fail to see that to pursue such a course further was madness. At once the whole thirty-eight thousand millions were repudiated.

Again I quote from President White:

The collapse had come at last; the whole nation was plunged into financial distress and debauchery from one end to the other.

To this general distress there was indeed one exception. In Paris and in a few of the greater cities, men, like Tallien, of the heartless, debauched, luxurious, speculator, contractor, and stock-gambler classes, had risen above the ruins of the multitudes of smaller fortunes. Tallien, one of the worst of the demagogue "reformers," and a certain number of men like him, had been skillful enough to become millionaires, while their dupes, who had clamored for issues of irredeemable paper money, had become paupers.

So slow and painful was the nation's recovery from the wreck that the lessons of that hour have been ever since remembered by the French people. Though the terrible strains upon their finances during the Franco-German war compelled a temporary suspension of specie payments, (as with us during the late war,) an early return to a convertible currency has been ever kept in view and is already an accomplished fact.

Let us profit by their experience and example.

THE ENGLISH BANK RESTRICTION.

I shall speak now more briefly of what is known as the English bank restriction. The Bank of England suspended specie payment on the 27th day of February, 1797, not to resume again until May 1, 1821, when the bank, by its own wish and permission of Parliament, resumed the payment of specie. During the suspension the notes were given the force of legal tender by provisions denying the usual remedies for collection of debts to those who refused them.

The act of Parliament known as Peel's act, passed in 1819 and providing for the resumption of specie payments in 1822, has been charged with causing great and unnecessary distress and with precipitating an extraordinary number of failures. Against this charge the great weight of authority of the time is arrayed. Both houses of Parliament, through committees appointed for the purpose, examined the question most thoroughly, and the act was sustained by an almost unanimous vote.

One of the most careful statisticians England has known (Mr. Tooke) upon this subject says:

Never, indeed, was there a measure dictated by a sounder policy than that by which Parliament determined in 1819 that the trifling divergence which then existed between the paper and the gold should as speedily as was conveniently practicable be remedied, and the convertibility restored, with the strongest sanction against its being suspended. So loudly was that measure called for by every consideration of justice and good faith, and of the most comprehensive view of the public interest, that if for the purpose of carrying it into effect some actual derangement of prices and of credit had been distinctly contemplated, the effect would have been amply justified by the object.

But there is not a vestige of a ground for supposing that the smallest part of the fall in prices or of the derangement of credit in 1819 or from 1819 to 1822 can according to any evidence of facts or any consistent reasoning be traced to the operations, direct or indirect, of that measure. The sufficiency of the causes, without reference to Peel's bill, of the fall of prices between 1818 and 1822 can hardly, it is presumed, admit of a doubt in the mind of any person who, unbiased by any preconceived theory, will examine carefully the facts as they will appear in evidence in connection with the fall of prices.

He analyzes the operation of laws passed and natural causes existing by which from 1816 to 1818 importations into the United Kingdom were very nearly doubled in two years, and very pertinently asks, "Could it be imagined that the importations of 1818, being within a trifle of double what they were in 1816, could be sold at the same prices?"

In the single article of cotton the importations increased from 93,920,055 pounds in 1816 to 177,282,158 pounds in 1818. A comparison shows similar results in other articles of merchandise, and it is absurd to suppose that with such large additional supplies the old prices could be maintained.

Notwithstanding the decline in prices that occurred at this time the aggregate number of failures fell off. During the three years ending in 1816, a period when the people of England enjoyed every advantage that could be derived from inconvertible paper, having the force of legal-tenders, the number of failures reached 6,627. During the next three years, under the same circumstances and immediately preceding the passage of Peel's bill, the number of failures reached 7,042. In the three years succeeding the passage of Peel's bill and preceding the resumption of specie payments the number of failures were only 4,118. This is the strongest proof that so far as solvency is concerned, matters began to mend upon the passage of the act. Following resumption, trade revived at once, and the years 1823 and 1824 were especially prosperous. The English paper currency has ever since been kept promptly convertible into specie. As a consequence, it commands confidence everywhere and circulates readily in all the great marts of the world. Under this currency it is a historical fact that the English people have enjoyed comparative immunity from great commercial revulsions and have well maintained their positions as the most wealthy, prosperous, and powerful of civilized nations.

We ought to profit by their experience.

THE BANK OF VENICE.

In support of the theory that irredeemable paper can be safely relied upon we are often cited to the history of the Bank of Venice. No reference could be more unfortunate for the advocates of inflation. Mr. McLeod in his valuable work on banking and currency furnishes a brief and concise history of this money from which I quote:

Venice was a small state but gradually became the center of an enormous commerce and as an inevitable consequence a great quantity of clipped and worn foreign coins circulated in it, brought by the foreigners who resorted to it. When the practice of bills of exchange became common, the degraded state of the currency caused an intolerable inconvenience to merchants. To obviate this at some subsequent time, though at what precise period we are not informed, the plan was devised of the chamber of loans receiving deposits from private persons.

Every merchant deposited there the coins he received and he was credited with their value in bullion, and the bank gave him a corresponding number of its notes payable to bearer on demand in full weight of bullion.

As the bank always pledged itself to pay in full weight its notes always bore a premium as compared with the worn and clipped coin in circulation. All bills of exchange between merchants were made payable in this bank money. The bank, however, does not seem ever to have discounted bills upon its own account, and as its paper only represented the price of bullion actually in it coffers, it made no increase in the quantity of currency in circulation. Its only advantage was to save the wear and tear of the coinage and to insure a uniform standard in mercantile contracts. This bank continued to enjoy great credit and repute until it fell with the republic in 1797.

Mark the fact that no paper was issued by this bank that was not promptly convertible into specie at the will of the holder, and was payable not in current coins, but in full weight of bullion. The success of the Bank of Venice, the credit so long enjoyed by its paper, is therefore, a most powerful argument in favor of a currency always convertible into the precious metals at the will of the holders.

COLONIAL PAPER MONEY.

If, however, we need to go further, we may most profitably study the record of our forefathers. Daniel Webster well and truthfully said:

Our own history has recorded for our instruction enough, and more than enough, of the demoralizing tendency, the injustice, and the intolerable oppression on the virtuous and well disposed of a degraded paper currency authorized by law or in any way countenanced by Government.

Colonial history furnishes many melancholy lessons from the attempts of the different colonial governments to float irredeemable paper money, which was made a legal tender and "backed by the whole power, credit, and authority of the government.

The student of Bancroft will agree with me that the record is always found the same. Redundant issues, rapid depreciations, and resulting bankruptcy and repudiation. Such is the condensed history of each and every experiment.

CONTINENTAL CURRENCY.

We are all familiar with the history of the continental currency. We all remember that it was based upon the "faith, credit, resources, and power of the continent." It was given full legal-tender power, and the most stringent laws were enacted to sustain it. Still, the issues steadily sunk in value until it became "not worth a continental." The phrase comes down to us to express the most utter worthlessness that can be conceived.

When these issues had reached an aggregate of $350,000,000, so low had it sank in value, as history tells us, that in Philadelphia "a barber's shop was papered with the money, and a dog, coated with tar, and the bills stuck all over him, was paraded in the streets."

We ought to heed these lessons and return while we may to a sound convertible currency. We must learn, if not from past experience, then from future bankruptcy and ruin, that no government decree can inject value into paper, however strongly it may be backed with bayonets. We must learn that no nation can disregard the natural laws of trade and exchange without inviting disaster; that natural laws will sooner or later assert themselves above and beyond all human legislation.

OPINIONS OF EMINENT MEN.

To the admonitions of history we may add for our instruction the views of the most prominent men intrusted with the administration of our public affairs in the past. Nearly every one spoke in his day, with no uncertain sound. I have collected a number of quotations from the utterances of those who were highly honored by the nation, which I submit:

WASHINGTON.

Some other States are, in my opinion, falling into the very foolish and wicked plans of emitting paper money. I cannot give up my hopes, however, that we shall ere long adopt a more just and liberal system of policy.

JOHN ADAMS.

I cannot but lament in my inmost soul that lust for paper money which appears in some parts of the United States. There will never be any uniform rule, if there is any sense of justice, nor any clear credit, public or private, nor any settled confidence in public men or measures until paper money is done away.

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Capital may be produced by industry and accumulated by economy; but jugglers only will propose to create it by legerdemain tricks with paper.

JAMES MADISON.

The loss which America has sustained since the peace from the pestilent effects of paper money on the necessary confidence between man and man, on the necessary confidence in the public councils, on the industry and morals of the people, and on the character of republican government constitutes an enormous debt against the States chargeable with this unadvised measure, which must long remain unsatisfied, or rather it is an accumulation of guilt which can be expiated no otherwise than by a voluntary sacrifice on the altar of justice of the power which has been the instrument of it.

ANDREW JACKSON.

The progress of an expansion or rather a depreciation of the currency, by excessive bank issues is always attended by a loss to the laboring classes. This portion of the community have neither time nor opportunity to watch the ebbs and flows of the money market. Engaged from day to day in their usual toils, they do not perceive that, although their wages are the same or even somewhat higher, they are greatly reduced in fact by the rapid increase of a spurious currency, which, as it appears to make money abound, they are at first inclined to consider a blessing. It is not so with the speculator, by whom this operation is better understood and made to contribute to his advantage. It is not until the prices of the necessaries of life become so dear that the laboring classes cannot supply their wants out of their wages that the wages rise and gradually reach a justly proportioned rate to that of the products of their labor. When thus by the depreciation, in consequence of the quantity of paper in circulation, wages as well as prices become exorbitant, it is soon found that the whole effect of adulteration is a tariff on our home industries for the benefit of the countries where gold and silver circulate and maintain uniformity and moderation in prices. It is thus perceived that the enhancement of the price of land and labor produces a corresponding increase in the price of products, until these products do not sustain a competition with similar ones in other countries, and thus both manufactured and agricultural productions cease to bear exportation from the country of the spurious currency, because they cannot be sold for cost. This is the process by which specie is banished by the paper of the banks. Their vaults are soon exhausted to pay for foreign commodities; the next step is a stoppage of specie payments—a total degradation of paper as a currency—unusual depression of prices, the ruin of debtors, and the accumulation of property in the hands of creditors and cautious capitalists.

Again:

There never was, nor ever could be, use for any other kind, (than redeemable currency,) except for speculators and gamblers in stocks; and this to the utter ruin of the labor and morals of the country. A specie currency gives life and action to the producing classes, on which the prosperity of all is founded.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

The evils of a redundant paper circulation are now manifest to every eye. It alternately raises and sinks the value of every man's property. It makes a beggar of the man to-morrow who is indulging in dreams of wealth to-day. It converts the business of society into a mere lottery; while those who distribute the prizes are wholly irresponsible to the people. When the collapse comes, as come it must, it casts laborers out of employment, crushes manufacturers and merchants, and ruins thousands of honest and industrious citizens.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

A return to specie payments at the earliest period compatible with due regard to all interests concerned should ever be kept in view. Fluctuations in the value of currency are always injurious, and to reduce these fluctuations to the lowest possible point will always be a leading purpose in wise legislation. Convertibility, prompt and certain convertibility into coin, is acknowledged to be the best and surest safeguard against them.

U. S. GRANT.

Among the evils growing out of the rebellion is that of an irredeemable currency. It is an evil which I hope will receive your most earnest attention. It is the duty, and one of the highest duties, of the Government to secure to its citizens a medium of exchange of fixed and unvarying value. This implies a return to specie payment, and no substitute for it can be devised.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

Paper emissions by the Government are of a nature so liable to abuse, I may say so certain to be abused, that the wisdom of the Government will be shown by never trusting itself with so seducing and dangerous a power.

WILLIAM H. CRAWFORD, SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

A metallic currency having a value independent of that which is given to it by the sovereign authority does not depend upon the stability of the Government for its value.

Revolutions may arise, insurrection may menace the existence of the Government—a metallic currency rises in value under such circumstances. * * * Not so with a paper currency; its credit depends, in a great degree, upon the confidence reposed in the stability of the authority by which it was issued. Should that authority be overthrown by foreign force or intestine commotion, an immediate depreciation, if not an absolute annihilation of its value, would ensue.

SALMON P. CHASE.

The Secretary recommends no more paper-money scheme; but on the contrary, a series of measures looking to a safe and gradual return to gold and silver as the only permanent basis, standard, and measure of value recognized in the Constitution.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

Of all the contrivances for cheating the laboring classes of mankind, none has been more effectual than that which deludes them with paper money. It is the most effectual of inventions for fertilizing the rich man's field by the sweat of the poor man's brow. Ordinary tyranny, oppression, excessive taxation bear lightly on the masses of community, compared with fraudulent currencies and the robberies committed by depreciated paper money.

We have suffered more from this cause than from any other cause or calamity. It has killed more men, pervaded and corrupted the choicest interests of our country more, and done more injustice than even the arms and artifices of our enemy.

HENRY CLAY.

If there be, in regard to currency, one truth which the united experience of the whole commercial world has established, I had supposed it to be that emissions of paper money constitute the very worst of all conceivable species of currency.

CHARLES SUMNER.

Surely we must all be against paper money. * * * We must all set our faces against any proposition like the present, except as a temporary expedient rendered imperative by the exigency of the hour. * * * Reluctantly, painfully, I consent that the process should issue. And yet I cannot give such a vote without warning the Government against the dangers from such an experiment. The medicine of the Constitution must not become its daily bread.

HORACE GREELEY.

We advise any man who wants to cheat himself into the belief that the funded debt of the United States may lawfully be paid in greenbacks not to read this handy volume, (Spaulding's Financial History of the War,) unless he is anxious to know that he is a rascal and that every one sees it.

Utterances like the foregoing from the most renowned of our Presidents, from the ablest men called to preside over the Treasury, from the most profound statesmen the country has known, should have weight in a crisis like the present when we are called upon to choose between a sound convertible currency and the alternative of following, to the bitter end, the course of irredeemable paper money.

GOOD FAITH REQUIRES RESUMPTION.

Beyond this we insist that good faith and honesty demand that we should make the legal-tender issues convertible into coin at the earliest practicable moment. With surprise I have heard men who pretend to leadership of the inflation forces argue upon this floor that at the time these issues were provided for, no intention existed to provide for their ultimate redemption. The terms of the first law enacted with reference to the greenback promised payment. In proof of this we need only refer to the first paragraph of the law, which is in these words:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue on the credit of the United States $150,000,000 of United States notes, not bearing interest, payable to bearer at the Treasury of the United States, and of such denominations as he may deem expedient, not less than $5 each.

To say that the "promise to pay" borne upon the face of each and every one of these notes was unauthorized is to dispute the language of the act itself. It would do violence to the good sense and honesty of those who passed the law to say that it was intended that the payment provided for in the act should be made by exchanging for the original promise to pay, another promise exactly similar. No other payment could have been intended than payment to be made in that which in the prior history of the country had been recognized as money—gold and silver coin. Each and every succeeding act continued the same language and the same promise.

Every friend of the measure in either House of Congress who spoke at all on the subject, in the discussions leading up to its passage, expressly announced and reannounced that the issue was to be regarded as a temporary expedient, accompanied by great danger, but justified by overwhelming necessity.

Secretary Chase, in his first report, December 9, 1861, alluded to, but refrained from recommending the adoption of such a policy. Here is his language:

The plan, however, is not without serious inconveniences and hazards. The temptation, especially great in times of pressure and danger, to issue notes without adequate provision for redemption; the ever present liability to be called on for redemption beyond means, however carefully provided and managed; the hazard of panics, precipitating demands for coin, concentrated on a few points and a single fund; the risk of a depreciated, depreciating, and finally worthless paper money; the immeasurable evils of dishonored public faith and national bankruptcy—all these are possible consequences of the adoption of a system of Government circulation. It may be said, and perhaps truly, that they are less deplorable than those of an irredeemable bank circulation. Without entering into that comparison, the Secretary contents himself with observing that in his judgment these possible disasters so far outweigh the probable benefits of the plan that he feels himself constrained to forbear recommending its adoption.

Subsequently, as dangers from rebellion thickened and the need of ready funds grew more and more pressing, Secretary Chase did recommend the issue, but only upon a basis looking to a return "to gold and silver as the only permanent basis, standard, and measure of value recognized in the Constitution.

DEBATE UPON THE BILL.

In proof of the light in which it was regarded when being considered I here give extracts from speeches made by friends of the measure:

The chairman of the subcommittee from which the bill was reported was Hon. E. G. Spaulding.

In 1869 he published a valuable little work entitled "Financial History of the War," giving a synopsis of the debate upon the bill. At the beginning of his work, speaking of the act, he says:

Experience has proved that notwithstanding it was a forced loan the end justified the means. * * * Although it was a war measure, a measure of necessity not of choice, and could only be justified on that ground, it has for many years exerted a most decisive influence over the property and material interests of every individual in the United States.

This is but a restatement of his opinion expressed in opening the debate, when he further announced that he would be "among the first to advocate a speedy return to specie payments."

Thaddeus Stevens, then chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and one whom the enemies of resumption sometimes delight to quote, said:

This bill is a measure of necessity, not of choice. No one would willingly issue paper currency, not redeemable on demand, and make it a legal tender. It is never desirable to depart from the circulating medium which, by common consent of civilized nations, forms the standard of value.

Mr. Blake, of Ohio, said:

The bill is brought forward as a war measure, to meet the pressing demands now on the Treasury.

Mr. Campbell, of Pennsylvania, said:

The bill now before the committee is necessary to sustain the credit of the country and carry on the war. It is with reluctance that I have come to that conclusion.

Mr. Walton, of Maine, said:

Necessity compels us to pay our creditors in Treasury notes.

Mr. Kellogg, of Illinois, said:

I treat this emphatically and clearly as a war measure. It is necessary to carry on the Government in a war direction.

When the bill came back to the House from the Senate, in the course of the ensuing debate, Mr. Spaulding, the author of the measure, said:

All are obliged to receive and pass it as money, and all are obliged to submit to heavy taxation to provide for its ultimate redemption in gold and silver.

Mr. Pomeroy, of New York, said, speaking of the issues authorized by the bill, bonds and notes alike:

The credit of the Government is alike bound for the payment of both classes of indebtedness ultimately in coin. Each derives its entire value from that.

These opinions are from the friends of the bill, by whose votes it was passed, and they certainly prove that in that day no one intended to provide for a permanent irredeemable paper money. The interpretation given the law by those who created it is more likely to be correct than that of our latter-day financiers, who court repudiation.

The enemies of the bill denounced it most unsparingly as unwarranted under any circumstances; predicted that the issues would become worthless and would be ultimately repudiated. Now, when the nation can and is about to redeem its promises, some of these men still prominent in politics are laboring diligently to bring about a fulfillment of their prophecies through the processes of inflation.

In the Senate the whole course of the debate shows the same unanimity of opinion as to the necessity for the measure, and that it could only be justified upon that ground. All agreed that a return to specie payment should be provided for so soon as practicable. We are now asked to disregard these distinct pledges of ultimate redemption given at every stage of the creation of the greenback.

If public pledges, solemnly made, are to be held better than mere tracings in the sand we ought not to turn back now. These pledges were the bone and sinew, the life of the greenback, and the friends of the currency should insist that they be sacredly kept. The men who fought this currency at the beginning, either in these halls or in the tented field, may consistently advocate measures looking to its depreciation, but the republican party, that is responsible for its existence, for the honor of its organization, for the credit of the nation and the good of the whole people, should insist that its promise be fulfilled. We should go forward until every dollar of its volume is worth one hundred cents.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS.

Not only have we the pledges of the men by whose votes this law was passed that the inconvertibility of its currency should be considered a war measure, and not applicable to times of peace, but we have the decisions of our Supreme Court that only thus can it be supported. Witness the language of the Supreme Court upon this subject in 1871:

One of the duties of the Government is to preserve itself, and it has all the necessary powers to that end. If under the circumstances of the war and the means required to maintain the Army and Navy, it were certain that nothing else would have supplied the absolute necessities of the Treasury, that nothing else would have enabled the Government to maintain its Army and Navy, that nothing else would have saved the Government and the Constitution from destruction, while the legal-tender act would, it cannot be said that Congress transgressed its powers in the enactment of this law, or if this enactment did work the result it cannot be maintained now that it was not for a legitimate end, and appropriate and adapted to that end.

In the decisions we find this further language:

It is a power not to be resorted to except on extraordinary and pressing occasions, such as war or other public exigency of great gravity and importance, and should no longer be exercised than the circumstances of the case demand.

In the case entitled Bank vs. Supervisors, reported in 7 Wallace, the Supreme Court said:

It is clear that these notes are obligations of the United States. Their name imports obligation, and every one of them bears on its face a promise to pay a certain sum. The dollar note is a promise to pay a dollar, and the dollar intended is the coin dollar of the United States; a certain weight and fineness of gold or silver. * * * These notes are obligations. They bind the national faith. They are therefore strictly securities.

Again, referring to what is known as the Legal Tender decisions, in 12 Wall., 553, we find the following language in the decisions:

The legal-tender acts do not attempt to make paper a standard of value. We do not rest their validity on the assertion that their emission is coinage or any regulation of the value of money. Nor do we assert that Congress may make anything which has no value money.

Surely no one who reviews these facts with an unprejudiced mind can doubt our duty (if we retain the slightest regard for good faith and established law) to restore these notes, so soon as may be, to specie values.

RESUMPTION IS PRACTICABLE.

Next I say, Mr. Speaker, that resumption is practicable on the day fixed by law. The first and perhaps the most important fact to be considered in this connection is that we have already reached practical resumption. Already in most of our large cities and in many smaller towns gold is being paid over the counters side by side with legal tenders. The cheering news comes to us from the distant West that in one instance even a premium in gold has been paid for greenbacks, and nowhere does gold command a greater premium than one-half of 1 per cent. This would not be so did not the state of our credit and the condition of our affairs convince the people of our ability to keep the promise of the law and the currency.

The resumption law will not be repealed. That settles the purpose of the nation to resume if it has the ability. Long experience has shown that to maintain specie payments it is not necessary to keep a reserve fund greater than about 40 per cent. of the circulation or demand liabilities. For the remainder, sufficient resources to draw upon in time are all that is required.

The following table, furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury, shows the condition of the Treasury with reference to resumption April 1, 1878, and what it will be under existing laws and contracts on January 1, 1879:

A comparison at once shows that the reserve then on hand will constitute a much larger percentage of the demand liabilities than is known to have been successfully relied upon by the European national banks. That the Secretary has not overestimated his resources to be obtained, is attested by the fact that the additional accumulation proposed by him, is coming in much more rapidly than he had hoped. The coin he expected to secure by the 1st of August is even now provided for. Add to this the fact that European nations produce but little of the precious metals, while we are adding to our present stock of gold and silver—amounting to $250,000,000 according to the best estimates—at the rate of over $80,000,000 in each year. Add to this the fact that the balance of trade is now most heavily in our favor, and must long continue to be, also the fact that the material wealth of the country and its resources for revenue are increasing at a wonderfully rapid rate, and the most timid ought to admit that the ability of the nation to resume is beyond question.

As well illustrating the rapid growth, within the last seven years, of interests which lie at the foundation of our national wealth and prosperity, I have compiled the following statement from the figures of the census of 1870 and statistics furnished by the Department of Agriculture at the request of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD.]

Statement showing the increase in the number of live animals and in the amount of cereal and other farm products in 1877 over 1870, and the percentage of such increase over the aggregate of 1870.

Animals.	Increase in number.	Percentage of increase over number in 1870.
Horses	3,184,330	44
Mules	512,085	45
Cows	2,364,768	26
Oxen and other cattle	4,338,024	29
Sheep	7,262,549	25¼
Swine	7,127,931	28

Crops.	Increase in amount.	Percentage of increase.
Bushels of corn	245,745,000	22¼
Bushels of wheat	124,114,300	52
Bushels of oats	157,922,600	62
Bushels of rye	6,627,000	42
Bushels of barley	9,304,600	35
Pounds of tobacco	229,372,000	91
Tons of hay	6,975,000	28
Acres cultivated	31,000,000	34

This vast increase of wealth is not confined to one section. It is the increased wealth of the whole country. It is an addition not to the wealth of the speculator and stock-jobber, but to the farm and field, upon which rests at last the prosperity of the whole nation. These facts show a silver lining to the cloud that has threatened us. I do not forget, and I would not disguise the fact, that we have passed through a period of severe business depression. It is because I well remember this that I would avoid a policy which, at the best, can only temporarily relieve and must ultimately aggravate the evils that have befallen us.

Turning from that darker side of the picture it is most gratifying to find assurance that there is solid ground beneath our feet, and that on every side are indications of the dawn of that safe, enduring prosperity that will surely follow resumption.

RESUMPTION DOES NOT MEAN CANCELLATION.

The cancellation or retirement of the legal-tender notes will not follow resumption. Under the Secretary's construction of the present law they would still be kept in circulation. But that no possible doubt may exist it is to be hoped that the wise provisions reported by the Finance Committee of the Senate in lieu of the act passed by this House will become a law.

The present volume of paper circulation will be maintained, not dishonored and depreciated, but always and promptly convertible into coin at the will of the holder. Three hundred millions of actual money, gold and silver, will be thrown into the circulation and our currency healthily expanded by so much. Side by side the promise of the Government and the money of the world will circulate among the whole people.

Then the money of the millionaire and the mechanic will be the same and be of equal value. Then the little stores of the frugal and industrious, laid by against the day of adversity, will not dwindle away to nothing under the withering influences of depreciation. Then will industry and legitimate business each receive its own and speculation find its "occupation gone."

We can go forward certain of success. We can go forward assured that subsequent events will vindicate our action. We can go forward assured that in history the complete success of resumption, the vindication of the nation's faith, honor, and credit, will be recorded as a triumph second only to the suppression of the great rebellion.

To recapitulate, I claim:

First. That all experience has shown that an irredeemable paper currency is among the worst of evils that can befall a nation, and more especially an evil to the working classes.

Second. That the best and wisest men the country has produced, each in his day has spoken against the evil.

Third. That to abandon resumption would violate the pledges given by those who passed the law, both before and after its enactment.

Fourth. That resumption on the day fixed by law can be accomplished, and that so far from decreasing the circulating medium it will, in fact, add to the currency $300,000,000 in actual money.

Fifth. It will insure stable values and solid prosperity.

POSTAL SAVINGS-BANKS.

Mr. HARDENBERGH addressed the House upon the postal savings-banks and the claims of labor. [His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

LABOR VS. CAPITAL.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Speaker, was the aspiration and belief of the men who founded and originated the governments making the Federal Union that the conflicts between labor and capital, which had embroiled the people of the Old World, would find their solution in the guarantees secured or attempted to be secured in written constitutions. In the struggle of man for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness he had been met by force, which, enthroned, claimed to govern by divine right. Force, obtaining power by fraud, treason, and might, sought, under the protection of religious sanction, to enslave the mass of mankind. This mass, protesting from time to time against the arbitrary power and rule of force, rebelled against its tyrannical exactions and asserted equality before God, and the right inalienable to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. The mass represented labor. Capital was represented in force. The founders of the American Constitution, recognizing this conflict, wisely endeavored in framing a government to secure to each individual the fruits of his labor and the protection of his inalienable rights; hence their protests against perpetuities monopolies and hence the reservation to the people of the taxing power and the control of all questions affecting their rights, privileges, and responsibility of labor.

It was wise that they should do so. Almost living witnesses of the disgraceful and tyrannical oppression of the house of Stuart, who had made merchandise of the labor and rights of the people of England, careful students of the struggles of the oppressed laborers of centuries—of the millions tributary from the sweat of their toil to the luxuries and pleasures of those who were anointed by force—themselves fugitives from the oppressions of the few, who claimed jurisdiction over the soul and body of man, it is not surprising that, in defining the rights of the governed and the powers of the ruler, they should declare "that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men;" and that they should make in our constitutions such monumental boundary marks as in their opinion would secure labor protection from the encroachments and dominion of power and capital. And for this they proclaimed the sacredness of jury trial, the freedom of speech and the press, the right of petition, the sanctity of contracts, and the preservation of the rights of person and property under the guardianship of the law.

Their idea and purpose in forming government was that it was the mere agent and creature of the people, made and ordained to establish "justice," by securing and guaranteeing to each citizen protection in the fruits of his industry and security in the pursuit of that which would insure his happiness, leaving him to the full enjoyment of these rights deemed inalienable, only enjoining that in such pursuit and enjoyment he should not trespass on the granted similar rights belonging to others. Thus independent and free, man, subject alone to government of his choice, would in peace, with full assurance of due reward to his labor, avoid conflicts which had heretofore made slaves of him and his children.

I have said that it was the aspiration of the founders of American governments that this conflict should be avoided, and with that view our peculiar and popular institutions were formed. Have these governments failed to accomplish this purpose?

He who reads our history and heeds the lesson of the present cry of distress now abroad in our land must conclude that, notwithstanding the form and character of our Government, the end is not yet, that the conflict still exists. Indeed, so severe and alarming have been the struggles between these opposing forces that conservative and patriotic lovers of constitutional liberty are awed with apprehension of danger thereto, from communism upon the one hand and centralization upon the other.

Capital seeks the protection of centralization. Distressed labor, denied the security of Government, resorts to communism. The effort of each is a stab at the form of government established by those from whom we inherited it.

Labor and its representatives assert that the Government is conducted in the interests of capital, and so as to control its efforts and deprive it of its just rewards; that its industry and mechanism, through unjust and oppressive taxation, through partial and class legislation, are made tributary to the behests, dominion, and power of the few; and, impatient under the continuance of this domination, seeks by mobs, combinations, and other steps unknown to the law or a healthy political existence to be relieved of this enslavement.

Have we forgotten how the country was startled and shaken to its very foundation by the riots of the last year? Can we forget the immense destruction of property—counted in value by the millions—that occurred as the result of these riots? Is it possible that so soon have fled from our memory the fright of capital and the paralysis of commerce, and that, pallid with fear, they demanded the protection of the military arm of the Government? Do not the scenes of that eventful crisis speak in warning and prophetic tones of coming danger? Shall the lesson of that period go unheeded?

Were not these scenes the outgrowth of this conflict between labor and capital? Beyond these evidences of this conflict let me invite your attention to the increase of a sentiment in all sections of this country that threatens the repudiation of all obligations that rest for their enforcement or payment upon the tax powers of this Government. That this sentiment exists and is growing in numbers and strength no thoughtful citizen for a moment doubts.

In view of this unquestioned state of affairs, pausing for a moment that the full significance of the queries that I have propounded may find lodgment in considerate minds, I have to repeat, shall the lesson of these riots as well as the logic of threatened repudiation go unheeded?

That we may give full heed to them it is well, Mr. Speaker, that we should look deeply and wisely into the causes that have produced these results. A resort to force or an application of evasive remedies will not suffice. We must boldly and conscientiously confront the complaint made by labor and the tax-payer, and fearlessly, honestly, and justly give the remedy. If these complaints be just they should be met and relief granted. If they be not just, appeal to reason and correct the error. The stake is too high and precious—that of the preservation of our constitutional forms of government—to be submitted to the tyranny of centralization or the anarchy of communism. From the Scylla of the one or the Charybdis of the other the valued inheritance of free institutions must be saved. It behooves the honest, patriotic citizens to guard against the counsel and corruption of the advocate of capital, or the wiles and seductions of the demagogue who represents communism. In doing so, and in an honest inquiry into the complaints made by labor and the tax-payer, while condemning any appeal to violence, any disregard to law, or any repudiation of an honest, legal contract, I feel constrained, alike from observation and study, to say that in a very great measure if not altogether these complaints are just.

Let us examine them. Everywhere poverty and distress exist. Bankruptcy threatens the fortunes and homes of the great mass of our countrymen. On all sides of us comes the appeal of laboring men and women for employment, and behind the appeal is the cry and wail of starvation. Behind this countless army of supplicants for employment stands arrayed another ready from inadequate rewards for labor to form in reserve. Upon their flanks are stationed the thousands who have swelled the list of bankrupts in trade made since the era of contraction commenced. Look at the track of their march throughout our country; it is marked by wasted fields, voiceless machinery, idle mills, unused factories, unemployed furnaces. Crime and death are the camp-followers of this immense horde. The condition of the revenues of the National Government as well as those of a large number of the States exhibits a deficiency, and yet the tax-payers are only conscious of the increasing weight of taxation and that they are growing poorer day by day.

But there is another picture. See the favored of our land, immense wealth has been gathered into their hands, all the luxuries and pleasures as well as the comforts and ease that wit or appetite may demand is theirs. Day by day it doth seem their aggregate is increased. The multiplication of bankruptcy and the addition of general poverty and distress but adds to their treasury. They do fatten upon the misery of the unfortunate. Too highly colored may this picture seem, but yet behind the color we do recognize the character of the living truth which speaks in unmistakable tones that there is existing reality in them.

The friend of labor and the tax-payer when required to explain why such a state of things exists, answers and says that it is in consequence of the vicious, corrupt, and subservient legislation that has pervaded alike State, municipal, and Federal legislatures; that this legislation has created monopolies, has fostered corporations, has made special and favored classes, and has prostituted itself to the interests of capital, and in verification thereof points to the past history of the cities and States of the Union as also to that of the National Government. Passing from any review of that history prior to the civil war, although it is fruitful in much of class legislation and in the multiplication of corporate and associated wealth, and waiving any view or reflection that might justly be made that that war was precipitated by this conflict between labor and capital, we come to the more serious legislation of the National Government enacted during and since the war.

It is to be noted that during that fearful struggle capital dictated its own terms to the National Government in its rate of interest, in relief from taxation, and in banking facilities secured to the creditors of the Government and no one else. At the close of the war, when the Government found more than a million of its producers destroyed, with more than nine billions of its wealth blotted out; with an increased pension list; with a debt of nearly three billions requiring provision for its payment; with its States, cities, counties, and towns overburdened with obligations; with the States recently subdued impoverished, it had to confront the claims of its creditor, who demanded terms and conditions of his own making, and such was the power of capital that his exactions were complied with.

Not content with the security, the privileges, and the exemptions made in its favor, capital, dissatisfied with the partnership that existed with labor and the tax-payer in the fact that they had a common, cheap, full, and non-oppressive currency, (in the greenback notes and other evidence of a common indebtedness,) demanded its retirement; demanded the conversion of the bonds which might under the law have been paid in this non-interest bearing currency, into 6 per cent. bonds; demanded the contraction of the volume of currency; demanded that the sinking-fund pledge of the Government should be applied to the whole nominal amount of the nation's indebtedness; demanded that the entire debt of the Government should be paid in coin; demanded, after having gained this last victory, that the coin should be limited to gold; demanded that the creditor of the Government should be the only banker of its citizens, and demanded that the Government should in quick and prompt time resume payment of specie upon its Treasury notes held and valued by the people as their currency. Along with these demands, remorsely enforced, capital coerced high taxes and tariffs, and allied itself with the powerful corporations of the country that controlled its trade and industry, compelling labor to pay tribute to these monopolies which had been fostered and enriched by national legislation at the expense of the tax-payer. Let us pause for a moment to examine in detail the character and effect of these demands. In order to do so it is necessary and proper we should look at the condition of the currency and the state of the national indebtedness in the year 1865 and at the close of the war.

The bonded indebtedness, exclusive of the 7.30 notes, the old demand, one-year, two-year, and compound-interest notes, as well as legal-tenders and fractional currency, was $1,090,046,125.96.

At which time the state of the currency was in the notes referred to, excluding 7.20 notes, the sum of	$698,918,800 25
National-bank notes	146,406,720 00
Notes bearing 7.30 per cent. interest	234,400,000 00
Total	1,079,724,520 25

Under act of March 3, 1865, this amount was increased about six hundred millions by the issue of more 7.30 notes. So that the country had an apparent circulation of nearly $1,700,000,000 in the year 1866. The money power or capital demanded the contraction of this circulation. True, the large part of it was bearing interest, but it was likewise true it was held and received by our people. And its conversion into a long bond was with the avowed purpose that the long bond should be sold in foreign markets; a most ruinous and disastrous policy in every point of view, as subsequent events have made most manifest. This policy not only deprived our people of currency, but robbed them of interest and compelled their labor to pay tribute to a money power alien to them and their interests.

But that we may fully understand the immense contraction that has taken place, I submit the following figures, taken from tables prepared by Mr. Power, chief of the warrant division Treasury Department, December 10, 1877, and laid before the House by my friend Mr. MILLS, of Texas:

1866.	Total notes United States	$608,870,825
	National bank notes	281,865,368
	7.30 notes of 1864, 1865	806,251,550
	Total	1,696,987,643

Now, in 1877, the currency is shown to be as follows:

Old demand notes	$63,962 50
Legal-tender notes	359,764,332 00
One-year notes	55,425 00
Two-year notes	40,300 00
Compound-interest notes	296,630 00
Fractional currency	20,403,137 34
National-bank notes	317,048,872 00
7.30 notes	164,550 00
Total	707,837,238 84

This sum of $707,837,238.84 represents the nominal amount of the currency in the year 1877, and shows a contraction from the year 1866 of $989,150,405. We need not be told of the effects following step by step this reduction of the currency. Year by year the list of failures, amounting now to over eighty thousand in number and representing in amount a sum nearly equal to the present indebtedness of the Government, attests the result in the distress, desolation, and bankruptcy that pervade all sections of the country.

While this conversion of the 7.30, one-year, two-year, and compound-interest notes was going on, if the Government had exercised its clear legal right to discharge the 5.20 bonds in greenbacks or legal-tenders, the effects of contraction in this direction would have been counteracted; but the money power in conscious strength demanded that the "sinking-fund pledge" of the Government should be redeemed, and at the same time exacted a new pledge or additional obligation that all the debts of the Government should be paid in coin.

The immediate effect of these two measures was to enhance the value of the bonds. This enhancement of the value of the bonds meant an increase in their purchasing power and a consequent diminution in the prices of the property of the people. In one alone of these measures, to wit, the coin act of 1869, by which the Government, subservient to the demand of the money power, pledged its faith to the payment of its entire debt in coin, it has been estimated that the increase in value of the securities in the hands of the money power was the sum of $250,000,000. This gain to their power was a loss of so much to the people. I feel sure that in all of its consequences, direct and remote, the loss has been far beyond this sum.

But turning a moment to the manner in which the redemption of the "sinking-fund pledge" has been executed, in which we see the same subserviency to the money power, it is to be remarked that Secretary Boutwell when he commenced in the year 1870–'71 to fix the amounts upon which he would establish the 1 per cent. assumed not the amount at that date, not the amount of the interest-bearing obligations of the Government created by and under the act of 1862, but he selected that date which showed the highest amount of outstanding indebtedness at any period since 1862, to wit, in August 1865, when the sum was $2,756,571.43. Now, in this sum was included not only the interest-bearing bonds and obligations of the Government issued for war purposes, but all bonds issued prior to the war, the Navy pension fund, (which is a mythical indebtedness,) certificates of gold deposit, and for which the gold was then in the Treasury, and the large amount of United States currency then outstanding.

Taking out the sums which ought not to have been included, and assuming that the amount of the interest-bearing obligations created by the war, due and existing at the time purchases were commenced on account of the sinking fund, it would give about $2,000,000,000 on which the 1 per cent. should have been reckoned, or, in other words, the sinking fund would have commenced at $20,000,000 per annum in 1870-'71, instead of twenty-eight millions. By so doing the people would in this year be paying from ten to twelve millions less than they do now. Under the assumption made the tax-payers are crushed with unnecessary and accumulated taxation in order to maintain and enhance the value of the bond. In the management of this fund for this purpose over $200,000,000 have been unnecessarily added thereto; in other words, this amount has been unnecessarily added to the wearisome burdens of the people during these years of bankruptcy and distress, and all at the dictate of the money power.

But, Mr. Speaker, why should the 1 per cent. upon this false amount of $2,756,431,571.43, assumed by Secretary Boutwell, be maintained; it is estimated, and a calculation will show correctly estimated, that with a continuance of this rate the entire public debt will be paid within the present century. By the report of the Secretary of the Treasury it appears that out of the taxes of the people, the sum of $220,954,459.39 has been paid in excess even of what the law requires. Again, it is not to be overlooked in this connection that a large part of the existing debt of the Government is now being reconverted at lower rates of interest into loans payable at long dates, and that with this deferred date and decreased rate of interest the debt will be extinguished before its maturity; hence it is cruel and unnecessary to oppress this generation with a wholly useless burden.

The process of contracting and funding inaugurated, the next step in the interest of capital is taken in the declaration and pledge of the Government made in 1869 that the debt of the Government should be paid in coin. The people had not asked this to be done for the amount held by them by currency; the tax-payer who supports the Government, maintains its Army, Navy, Legislature, judiciary, and Executive, had not demanded that the bond which was lawfully payable in currency (to wit, the five-twenties) should be made payable in coin. But yet the fiat of the money power required it and an obedient Congress and Executive complied, again increasing the purchasing power of the bond and diminishing the tax-paying resources of the country, again warring against labor and protecting capital. No more crushing and fatal policy of depression to the industrial energies of a people just emerging from a struggle in which had been destroyed from eight to ten billions of property could well have been adopted. From the hour of its passage to the present moment the history of desolated homes, bankrupt fortunes, unemployed labor, approaching poverty, and increasing distress have been daily witnessed.

But not content with these results the money power, in the continued possession of the controlling authorities of the Government, commands that the means of payment shall be limited, and this command is obeyed. By the act of 1869, the people are deprived of the right and privilege of paying, according to their contract, a portion of their debt in legal-tenders and are required to pay it in coin.

By act of Congress in 1870, the new bonds of the Government authorized to be issued for the purpose of funding the public debt in 5, 4½, and 4 per cent. bonds were made payable in coin of the United States at its then standard. At both these dates the silver dollar, as well as gold, was recognized legal coin, and silver dollars as well as gold were legal tender in payment of all the dues to the Government. About this time the German government, successful in her war against France, demonetized silver, most probably urged thereto by the desire to oppress and harass the French people, that country being the principal commercial government in the Latin union—a union that recognized the bimetallic standard of gold and silver—and with the further motive that, being a creditor government, such action would enrich her citizens. England, the great creditor country of the world, had previously demonetized silver; and it is a further fact to be noted that it is in these countries where the larger amount of our foreign debt, national, State, municipal, and railroad, is held. Bearing these facts in mind, and the further fact that the bonded indebtedness of this country is estimated at over $5,000,000,000, one-fifth, or about $1,200,000,000 of which is held abroad, and we commence to understand why it is that the money power demanded in 1873 that the means of payment of the people should be limited, or, in other words, why our creditors required that silver should be demonetized and that gold alone should be deemed a legal tender.

Regard for a moment the actual condition of the people at the time this requirement was made. A national debt of over $2,000,000,000; State debts exceeding eight hundred millions; municipal and corporate debts of over two billions, with an individual indebtedness exceeding the total of these amounts; all this hanging over a people whose surplus products, gathered from all the fields of labor, found no rewarding markets; and then, at this moment, secretly and fraudulently, they are deprived by the tricks of legislation of one of the means of payment, and the markets of one-half the world closed to their labor in the passage of the act of Congress, in 1873, demonetizing silver. No greater crime against the labor of the country has marked the legislation of any government.

No nation produced as much mineral wealth, and especially that of silver, in 1873, as did the United States. Gold and silver were among our chief resources. The production of silver was rapidly increasing, and it would seem that no policy could have been more foolish and mischievous or so unjust and oppressive as this. With the demands made upon the labor of the country to pay for the support of Government and the interest upon public indebtedness, it was the blackest of crimes to deprive one of the chief resources to meet these burdens, of its value for that purpose.

Sir, what would be thought of the wisdom of that architect or builder who, completing his structure, would commence diminishing his base which could barely sustain the weight of the entire structure, and, having reduced it more than one-half, should then contract or diminish it 50 per cent.? Would not the common sense of mankind pronounce it stupid folly, and say at once the superstructure must needs topple over. Suppose in the toppling over it brought death and destruction, would not the folly become crime?

And yet this is the fact in our financial legislation. From necessity the Government had built a pyramid of debt based upon a currency made up of a circulation of governmental notes, gold, and silver. The Government first subtracts from that base a large proportion of its notes, and in doing so adds to the weight of the pyramid by the increase of debt; and secondly, subtracts from the base "silver." Is it at all wonderful that the pyramid commences to tumble over? And, looking to the vast numbers under its shadow, some of whom are already buried and others pinioned so that they cannot escape, and now confront inevitable death and destruction in their fortunes, all the result of this criminal policy; what words of condemnation can be employed to do full justice either to the policy or its agents? No wonder is it that labor, appalled and paralyzed, should cry out in distress and protest against such domination. Who can measure the far-reaching effects of this legislation in the disturbance it made in values, the millions added to the treasury of capital and stolen thereby from labor?

But the end of this great conspiracy against labor for the felonious purpose of enriching capital, was not yet. The next step taken was by the act of January 14, 1875, in which it was enacted that the Government should upon the 1st day of January, 1879, redeem the notes of the Government then outstanding in coin. Let us pause for a moment to see the precise logic of this enactment. It was to convert the immense national, State, municipal, railroad, and individual indebtedness of the country, amounting to over ten billions of dollars, (the largest portion of which was contracted on a basis of the mixed currency authorized by law,) into coin.

In other words, the largest proportion of this indebtedness was contracted upon a volume of currency amounting upon an average to over a million of dollars, while its payment under this legislation is to be made upon a volume of currency, not exceeding in its practical use over five hundred millions. This being the logic of this legislation, the next question is to inquire into its effects. To do so, it is proper to understand, if we can, the amount of currency which will be in the hands of the people upon the 1st day of January, 1879, the date fixed for resumption. As I have said previously, the nominal amount of currency in the year 1877 was the sum of $707,837,238.84.

I give again the table showing this, which is as follows:

Old demand notes	$63,992 50
Legal-tender notes	359,764,332 00
One-year notes	55,425 00
Two-year notes	46,300 00
Compound-interest notes	296,630 00
Fractional currency	20,403,137 34
7.30 notes	164,550 00
National-bank notes	317,048,872 00
Making total	707,837,238 84

Now, approximating as near as can be done, I assume that it will be shown upon the 1st day of January next the following sums:

Legal-tender notes	$340,000,000
National-bank notes	300,000,000
Total	640,000,000

This will be about the nominal amount then shown to be outstanding by the books of the Treasury and the banks. But will this nominal amount show the real amount in circulation or accessible to the people for the purposes of effecting the exchange of the products of labor or for payment of debts, &c.? I answer, unhesitatingly, not. Why not? When that day arrives it will become the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, in the interest of resumption, not only to retain as much as he can of the gold on hand, but also to husband in the Treasury as much as possible the legal-tender circulation. Its reissue makes the necessity of a redemand for resumption, and hence makes a constant demand upon the coin of the Treasury, and therefore it is that he must husband and keep the legal-tenders to a very large extent. That this demand will be large necessarily follows from the relations of the Treasury to the national banks, whose circulation the Secretary must be prepared to support and redeem.

Now, the banks must in order to maintain their position of solvency keep and hold in reserve a sufficiency of legal-tenders to meet any demands made upon them for the redemption of their circulation. Assuming that each, that is the Treasury and the banks, adopt (and the preservation of the public credit will compel and make necessary some such percentage) 33 per cent., and we have a mobile circulation of about four hundred and fifty millions; but deduct from this the lost and destroyed notes, and there will remain about the sum of four hundred millions of paper circulation to perform all the offices of currency for the trade, commerce, industry, and debts of the people of the United States. To this assumption of facts it is replied that gold and silver will form then a part of the currency. Let, then, one hundred millions be added on this account and we will have nearly or quite the sum of $500,000,000 to perform all the offices of currency required by the trade and commerce of forty-five millions of people inhabiting a territory larger than that of the whole of Europe, and whose import and export (foreign) trade is over $1,200,000,000 per annum, whose internal and domestic trade is estimated at nearly $20,000,000,000 per annum. I dare challenge any one safely to promise under the resumption policy any larger amount of circulation than that I have estimated.

It is about $11 per capita; quite 100 per cent. below that of any of the intelligent and commercial countries of the world. In France the circulation is estimated at about $44, in England it is about $28, in Germany it is about $24 per capita. With our immense domestic trade and between distant States, with our population remote from trade centers, there is a necessity for a retention of currency in the pockets of traders and people that does not exist in the countries named. In view of all these facts, will any disinterested man argue unselfishly that the amount of circulation promised under the resumption policy is sufficient? Is it not patent, with the volume of currency so contracted, that it subjects the property and labor of those who do not hold or possess it to the dominion and control of those who do? Is it not idle to argue so plain a proposition? But it is suggestively replied that banking is now free. Free to whom? The bondholder. If you want his bond for such purpose he dictates the price and may make your banking dear to you. But suppose it is not dear, and more banks are multiplied as they bring into life more bank-notes, do they not retire for purposes of maintaining and preserving resumption more "greenbacks?"

After all, Mr. Speaker, is not this the object of this grand conspiracy against the labor of the country, to foster, nourish, and perpetuate the national-banking system, whose very life is the national debt? To state the proposition in other words, is it not the policy to confer upon your creditor the right and privileges as well as monopoly of making, managing, and controlling that which is the representative of the labor, industry, and energy of the debtor? If the statement of the proposition is correct, and I undertake to say no one can successfully controvert it, is it not an enslavement of the labor and muscle of the great mass of our people—who are the laborers—to the dominion and mastership of the bondholders? Let us see for a moment what this dominion and mastership means. Assuming resumption is an accomplished fact, the Treasury of the Government, unless greenbacks be wholly retired, is at the mercy of the banks, who may constantly accumulate and constantly demand payment of these notes. The markets of the country are dependent upon the facilities they afford to commerce and trade; being lords of the currency, they enlarge or contract these facilities, and so control the industry and labor of the people.

Sir, recently you emancipated the black man from the slavery of the body. But the black man from his master obtained shelter, bread, and raiment. It is the dire misfortune of white and black who are now laboring-men under the ruinous policy inaugurated and maintained by the money power that they have as masters, whose system of slavery deprives them alike of shelter, bread, and raiment. I but pause to remark of the present national banking system that it is framed so as to enable Wall street, in New York, and State street, in Boston, to control the entire brood of banks throughout the limits of the Union, and that its whole tendency is to concentrate power into the hands of the metropolitan banks; and need I add that these metropolitan banks are controlled in a very large degree by foreign capital. In short, sir, the kings of the money power, now controlling, through these agencies, the trade, commerce, and industries of the United States, are foreign and alien to our people. No such dominion and power was ever before stolen from the people—the cruel results of which are plainly visible in our ruined commerce and prostrated industries.

Much more, sir, could I say in criticism of this system of banking, but just now I am content to protest against its privileges and powers and to utter a warning as to dangers which will affect not only the trade and commerce of the country, but the character of our free institutions, from a continuance of these powers and privileges.

Again, while these various measures were being put into force, labor complains that other monopolies were being created and that unjust and oppressive taxation was being enforced under the sanction of legislation, and points to the increase and multiplication of vast railroad and other corporations, a large number of which were enriched out of the public Treasury, either in lands or money belonging to the people, and that, in order to grant these largesses and give value to the investments of the money-power, heavy and onerous taxes were levied and collected. When we look to the grants of public lands and loan of bonds made to various railroads since the year 1862 by Congress, a table of which I append to my remarks, showing that the homeless of our country have been deprived of 180,311,573 acres and the tax-payers made liable for $64,623,512, with now nearly thirty millions of accrued interest, and then examine our present iniquitous tariff, under which our people are taxed from three to five hundred millions of dollars, not for the support of their Government or the payment of their debt, but for the benefit of the protected classes, we are compelled to concede the justness of the complaints made upon behalf of labor and the tax-payer.

And thus, Mr. Speaker, having gone over the complaints made by labor and its representatives, which complaints, as I stated in the outset of my remarks asserted, "that the Government is conducted in the interest of capital, and so as to control its efforts and to deprive it of its just rewards, that its industry and mechanism through unjust and oppressive taxation, through partial and class legislation is made tributary to the behests, dominion, and power of the few," and finding that labor has justly and temperately stated the truth, I have but now to invoke your attention to the remedies which are or may be suggested and to the agents who are or may be selected to apply them.

But before doing so let it be understood that in the period of time during which these iniquitous and inconsiderate measures were being adopted the democratic party had no authority or control. An appeal to the record will show, however, that step by step this conspiracy in favor of the money power against the labor and industry of the country has encountered the stern opposition of the great body of the democratic Representatives; and that now, while upon all sides of us and in all sections of our common country, notwithstanding the earth in production has been generous, the seasons have been kind and gentle, and labor has with skill and industry added increasing millions to the common treasury of the world, yet in our midst and among all classes save the favored few distress, poverty, and bankruptcy prevail, and that for this, alone, are those who at present administer our finances responsible. If there be merit in this state of things, John Sherman, the present Secretary of the Treasury, more than any other man, is entitled to the credit. If there be wrong, crime, and folly, he is the chief criminal.

Relief cannot come from a resort to violence; strikes fail as a remedy, and more often than otherwise recoil with disastrous effect to the cause they seek to favor. The law is the best friend of the poor and the laboring man. Battle that down and force is supreme. Nor can relief come from repudiation of legal and honorable contracts. Repudiation enforced is the destruction of credit. The destruction of credit is to take from the young their inheritance of hope and energy and to rob the poor of possibly the sole means they have of support. Repudiation is a check to commerce, trade, and public improvement. Repudiation demoralizes our faith in all things esteemed sacred. It is communism in its most dangerous form. Violence and repudiation take from the cause of labor its highest merit and chiefest support, the law and respect for its mandates, in fact its only safe shield and protection. He who teaches the people a resort to either distrusts their intelligence, manifests his want of confidence alike in the form of our government and faith in free institutions and the capacity and strength of the people to remedy the evils which may now or at any time threaten their interests.

These measures will not do; they but add to the existing distress. What are the proper measures of relief? Who shall decide? Shall we take the consideration of these questions away from the people? If so, to whom shall we refer them? It is sufficient now to say that the people have, under the Constitution, the consideration of these measures before them and are fearfully divided in their opinions in regard to them. The issues are well and sharply defined. Parties are strongly arrayed on each side.

Upon the one hand, adherence to the present legislation of the country is maintained with great obstinacy. The party in power, with all the influence of the Government, conscious in its strength, is the advocate of adherence. Pointing to the fact that gold and the paper currency are nearly at par and that resumption is nearly an accomplished fact, they promise that when resumption is such fact the streams of confidence will commence to flow and the gates which now confine locked-up currency will be opened, values will be adjusted, and a new era of prosperity will dawn upon the country and all of its industrial pursuits; that our bonds calling for low rates of interest can be sold at or above par, thus enabling the Government to reduce the amount of expenditures per annum; that now, with such an era, with these means, in sight, it would be a great error to retrace our steps. In this policy of adherence there is no proposition to amend or modify the tariff and the internal-revenue laws. Adherence means no change in the laws which have brought the country to its present condition; no protest against the monopolies that control the trade and industries of the country; no modification of the banking laws, under which the bondholder controls and dictates the rewards of labor, and no relief from the burdens of taxation.

If we accept the measures of relief proposed by the policy of Mr. Sherman, we must prepare to adjust our trade, (foreign and domestic,) our debts, (national, State, municipal, corporate, and individual,) upon a specie basis, and that basis, according to the policy of adherence, must be maintained. Step by step, as we approach the day of resumption, bankruptcy, distress, poverty, and ruin mark and overtake every industrial pursuit and enter into almost every household of the land. Is the experience of other countries of any value to us in this crisis? Let us turn for a moment to what is said by two distinguished writers in reference to the legislation of Great Britain coercing resumption of specie payments. The Bank of England, which was the government's financial agent, had suspended specie payments in 1797, and in 1819 the British Parliament declared that resumption should take place in 1823; in reference to the effects of which, says Alison, in his history of that period:

> The effect of this extraordinary piece of legislation were soon apparent. The industry of the nation was speedily congealed, as a flowing stream is by the severity of an arctic winter. The alarm became as universal and wide-spread as confidence and activity had recently been. The country bankers, who had advanced largely on the stocks of goods imported, refused to continue their support to their customers, and they were forced to bring their stocks into the market. Prices in consequence fell rapidly; that of cotton, in particular, sank in three months to half its former level. The entire circulation of England fell from $232,000 000 in 1818 to $174,000,000 in 1820, and in the succeeding year it sank as low as $142,000,000.
> The effects of this sudden and prodigious contraction of the currency were soon apparent, and they rendered the next three years a period of ceaseless distress and suffering in the British islands. The accomodation granted by bankers diminished so much in consequence of the obligation laid upon them to pay in specie, which was not to be got, that the paper under discount at the Bank of England, which in 1815 had been $103,300,000, sank in 1820 to $23,350,000, and in 1821 to $13,610,000. The effect upon prices was not less immediate or appalling. They declined in general, within six months, to half their former amount, and remained at that low level for the next three years. Distress was universal in the latter months of 1819, and that distrust and discouragement were felt in all branches of industry which are at once the forerunner and the cause of disaster.

Doubleday, in his Financial, Monetary, and Statistical History of England, says:

> We have already seen the fall in prices produced by the immense narrowing of the paper circulation. The distress, ruin, and bankruptcy which now took place were universal, affecting the great interests both of land and trade; but especially among landlords, whose estates were burdened by mortgages, settlements, legacies, and the like, the effects were most marked. In hundreds of cases, from the tremendous reductions which took place in the price of land, the estates barely sold for as much as would pay off the mortgages, and the owners were stripped of all and made beggars.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we look to the immense amount which must be paid by the labor of this country annually to the payment of interest upon the vast amount of indebtedness existing in various forms among and from our people, then to the support of our different governments—national, State, and municipal—and to the protected classes, under our existing tariff and internal-revenue laws, with the admitted fact that under this weight of taxation and interest our products do not and cannot successfully compete with the products of other peoples in the markets of the world, is it possible to maintain specie resumption? To maintain it successfully we must be able to pay and adjust necessary expenses from our productions, and from this source alone (not by borrowing and so increasing our debt) pay the interest upon so much of our debt as is held abroad.

It is estimated that for interest paid to foreign bondholders of American securities and freight paid to foreign carriers of our commerce, as well as the coin taken from our midst by absenteeism of our citizens, there is a coin demand upon the productions of our country amounting to about $175,000,000 per annum. With the statement warranted by the explanation recently made by the Secretary of the Treasury before the Committee on Banking and Currency of this House, that there will be available for purposes of resumption in the Treasury probably the sum of $188,357,608, in coin, to redeem three hundred and forty millions of legal tenders, about one hundred millions of other demand obligations, and to support the banks, while the banks will have on hand about the sum of twenty-five millions in coin and seventy millions in currency to meet $300,000,000 of bank-notes and $664,000,000 of deposits, I submit herewith a table that I have collated that shows this probable condition of the Treasury and banks upon the 1st day of January, 1879, to which I invite attention.

This statement shows the probable condition of the United States Treasury and national banks upon 1st day of January, 1879, (see notes of conference between Secretary Sherman and House Committee on Banking and Currency, pages 68 and 69:)

Instant liabilities of the Treasury for legal-tender and other notes, interests, certificates, &c.	$435, 098, 400
Circulation and deposits of national banks	960, 816, 052
	1, 395, 914, 452
Coin resources in the Treasury, if successful in negotiating an interest-bearing debt of $50,000,000	188, 357, 608
Coin resources in the banks	32, 907, 750
	221 265, 358

It is estimated that there is on deposit in the savings and State banks about nine hundred millions liable to instant demand.

In view of this state of things, and recognizing the fact that a demand for coin in foreign countries, or even an alarm among the depositors of these various banking institutions, will at once create a "run" upon the Treasury, who does not see that the attempt to maintain resumption of specie payments must result in a failure? And that failure will be the loss of billions to our agricultural, manufacturing, and mining industries, with its attendants of distress and poverty to the great mass of the people, while the gain will be to the capitalists of this and foreign countries.

So believing of this policy, I have consistently and uniformly opposed it, and in so doing have I, as I believe, faithfully reflected the views and sentiments of the people whom I have the honor to represent on this floor.

But I am asked, "What, in lieu of the policy you so oppose, do you propose and advocate as measures of relief?"

I have no hesitation in replying, and wish that time and opportunity favored me so that I could elaborate the reasons which induce me to support them, but inasmuch as time is not allowed me, I simply state—

First. I advocate a modification of our present banking laws, with a view that the Government should issue the paper used or to be used as currency; and in so doing that measures should be adopted to reduce not only the amount of our bonded indebtedness, but the rate of interest; and further, in so doing cease to pay 6 per cent. to individuals to furnish a currency based upon Government currency.

Second. An immediate and unconditional repeal of the resumption act, to the end that the day of resumption may be determined by the business prosperity of the country rather than by legislation.

Third. I would give to silver coin and bullion the advantages and privileges now secured by law to gold coin and bullion. With this done a most important step will be taken in securing for our agricultural and manufacturing labor the trade of the silver-producing countries, especially that of Mexico and South America, and in my judgment would open a stream of wealth to our people unequaled in the history of the commerce of the world. It is the law of all nature that matter seeks that association in which it has most value. And while Germany and England denies to silver advantages and power it has enjoyed from the birth of commerce, it would seem wisdom in us, in view of all the facts which surround the trade of the countries to which I have referred, to give to it the powers, privileges, and advantages of gold, its legal associate under our Constitution.

Fourth. I would favor the conversion of our present bonded indebtedness (not converted into currency) into bonds of a long date with a low rate of interest, said bonds to be of small denomination, convertible into currency upon demand, which currency should be reconvertible into this bond. These bonds would afford a good security to the poor, whose accumulations and savings are small; they would retain the interest upon them in this country, and at the same time, as did the interest-bearing notes in 1865 and 1866, form a part of the currency of the country, and thus increase its volume.

Fifth. The next relief measure would be, first, a suspension of the sinking fund for a period of six or eight years until, in the opinion of the most fastidious, the obligation of the Government in this regard is met, and that then, or whenever purchases shall be made on account of said "sinking fund," the same shall be done in such amounts and in such manner as will only provide for the payment of the bonded indebtedness of the Government at maturity thereof; and in this way, without prejudice to the good faith of the Government, a saving of annual taxation of several millions of dollars per annum can be made, thus lessening the burdens resting upon the labor of the people.

Sixth. The next in the order in which I mention them, but first in importance, is the modification and change of the tariff and internal-revenue laws. This tariff, framed ostensibly to meet the expenses of the war, but really with the view of affording protection to certain classes and interests in this country, has extorted per annum in indirect taxes more than the surplus production of the labor of the people, and has tended in a very large degree to increase the burdens of the people as well as their indebtedness. It is estimated by able and careful statisticians that under our present tariff system we pay from three to five times as much into the pockets of the protected classes as goes by way of revenue into the Treasury; that is to say, that when the consumer, who is the tax-payer, pays into the Treasury under the tariff the sum of $130,956,493 07, (the amount of customs dues paid in the last fiscal year,) he pays in the enhanced price of commodities obtained from the protected manufacturers from three to five times this amount to the favored classes. Add to this the onerous and unjustly discriminating internal-revenue tax upon whisky and tobacco, a tax that discourages the agricultural producer and is annoying and offensive in its methods of collection, and that is exceedingly oppressive to the producers of tobacco in the limitation and control of its sale so as to benefit manufacturers, in view of which a change in our tariff and internal-revenue laws is demanded as an essential and necessary relief measure.

Seventh. The corporations, vast in their power and almost limitless in their control, must be subjected to the supreme law of the life of the Government. Their powers and privileges must be held amenable to the purposes for which the Government was created, and not superior to it.

The rapid growth of corporations, that admittedly control the legislation of the country and increase the burdens of labor, fills the minds of all patriotic citizens, friends of constitutional liberty, with apprehensions as to the permanency of free institutions, and the necessity of strong and effective remedies to arrest the growth and encroachment of their corrupting and dangerous influences is deemed an absolute and essential measure of relief. It is not a stretch of constitutional power to provide by proper punitive legislation a check against their combination to impede interstate commerce or their combinations to thwart labor of its just compensation. On the contrary, such legislation is but responsive to the demands of the people for relief.

Eighth. I do not forget other measures of relief that have been submitted for the consideration of this Congress, one of which has special merit in my judgment, and which will afford relief to the agricultural States of the Union, and especially to the Southern States. I refer now to the proposition I had the honor to introduce, in the House bill to repeal the tax imposed upon notes of State banks and associations. In the first place, the tax itself is wanting in constitutional fairness and equality, and is an unjust interference with the business of the people. Its evident object is to consolidate and concentrate the business of banking in the hands of the few, and under the operation of existing laws gives the control of the industries of the people to the jobbers and speculators in trade, a middle and favored class, between the producer and consumer.

The necessities and interests as well as the misfortunes of State street, in Boston, and Wall street, in New York, dominate the want, interests, and misfortunes of the producers and manufacturers of the South and West. The production and preparation of the principal products of these sections of our country cannot be made upon the basis of commercial necessity and proper needs in the East and North, and yet under present laws these products and their preparation are absolutely dependent upon the commercial necessities and interests of the East and West. A local currency, with a system of banking adapted to the wants and necessities of the producers, which are more or less the development of climate and season, is necessary to the independence, health, and security of the trade of the South and West. This local currency, left to the wholesome law dictated by the trade and commerce of the world, will secure the rapid restoration of the prostrated labor and industries of those sections of our country from which alone permanent prosperity and wealth are to come.

I have not now the time to argue this proposition as it deserves to be done, but trust, if opportunity is afforded in the discussion of the various currency measures which may be brought before the House, to do so, when I shall assume to meet all the objections which have been made to it, and to maintain that this measure will give almost instantaneous relief, at least to the section of the country I in part represent.

Ninth. The next step in the relief to be afforded to the people is to restore the Government in its administration to the economic methods and constructions of the powers of its executive and legislative departments to the teachings and practices of its founders. These teachings and practices were in effect that the Government was but the agent of the people, and none but granted powers were to be exercised, and then only without abuse, extravagance, or unnecessary expense. How far and widely have we departed from these teachings. An adherence to them would cure all the evils that now afflict us. An adherence to them would solve the conflict between capital and labor. An adherence to them would insure the safety of free institutions forever.

Shall we despair of the Republic? True, labor is oppressed; true, money power has centralized the forces of the Government; true, wide departures have been made from the faith of our fathers; true, bankruptcy and distress doth environ our broad country; true, gloom and despondency doth brood alike over our industries and our energies, but after all the ballot is left, that sure weapon of a people's safety and a people's liberty. This weapon is in their hands. Shall we distrust their intelligence or fear their integrity and devotion? I, for one, do not, and in sincere faith believe they will meet their oppressors in the field, where happily under our form of government they may yet contest and decide these questions of fearful import to constitutional liberty and struggling humanity.

Heretofore it has been the proud boast of the democratic party that it has been the friend of labor and the opponents of special and class legislation; that its sympathies are with the oppressed and against the oppressor, and let it be admitted that by the record it is shown the great body of its representatives have consistently opposed the measures that doth now oppress the labor of the country and which doth now paralyze the energies and fortunes of the people. If true to its ancient faith and present record, why seek other and untried agents for relief? Why, when near to the goal of victory, divide and disband? Division of its forces assures success to the adherents of the Sherman policy. No matter in what guise the advocate may come, or how plausible and tempting his pretext may be, it is to this complexion at last he will lead us.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 9, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 25th of April, a report of the Chief of Engineers, and a copy of the report of Lieutenant-Colonel Q. A. Gillmore, and also the preliminary report of the board of engineers to whom the project of Colonel Gillmore was referred concerning the practicability and cost of constructing permanent works of improvement for the ship-channel at the entrance into the harbor of Charleston, South Carolina; which, on motion of Mr. BUTLER, were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MEXICAN COMMISSION AWARDS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I should like to have the bill (S. No. 1016) to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868, taken up by unanimous consent, and laid aside until the morning business is concluded.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We had better go on with the morning business.

Mr. THURMAN. But the morning business can be gone on with. The Senator from Illinois wishes to take up the bill and then let the morning business proceed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposition of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let it be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside informally for the reception of morning business.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WALLACE presented resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, in favor of the passage of the Texas and Pacific Railway bill; which were referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
May 2, 1878.

Whereas numerous petitions have been presented by citizens of this Commonwealth, and especially from the mining and manufacturing districts thereof, urging such action by the Legislature as will tend to relieve the great distress prevailing therein; and it being of vital importance that labor should be provided for those who are willing to work; and

Whereas the increase of laborers during the rebellion and since, the over-production of our manufactured materials and mining resources, and subsequent financial stringency, over which the State of Pennsylvania has no control, and for the evils resulting from the same she is unable to furnish the much-needed relief in her legislative, judicial, or executive capacity; and

Whereas to this end legitimate enterprises which create a demand for the products of our mills, mines, and factories, should be encouraged, especially where they are national in their character, and while aiding the people will develop new wealth and increase the revenues of the country: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the house of representatives (the senate concurring) would most earnestly and respectfully recommend that our Senators and Representatives in Congress devise a means of aiding and encouraging the immediate building of the Texas Pacific Railroad, and any other needed national improvement consistent with prudent economy and protection to our national interest.

Resolved further, That we recommend that they adopt some practical plan and furnish the necessary means by which a portion of the surplus labor of the country may be settled on the public domains and assisted until such times as they can be self-sustaining; and that we earnestly protest against any change, at the present time, of the tariff laws of the nation.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to each of our Senators and Members in Congress.

WM. C. SHURLOCK,
Chief Clerk House of Representatives.

Concurred in by the senate, May 2, A. D. 1878.

THOS. B. COCHRAN,
Chief Clerk.

Approved May 3, A. D. 1878.

J. F. HARTRANFT.

Mr. WALLACE presented the petition of Owen Brady & Co. and others, shipping merchants of Philadelphia, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 2478) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of James L. Williamson, of Tennessee, praying compensation for certain quartermaster and commissary stores taken from him in 1862 by the Army of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, presented the petition of T. W. Chickering, late first lieutenant Sixth United States Cavalry, praying for the passage of a law restoring him to his former rank in the Army held by him prior to the 27th day of January, 1875; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BOOTH presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of California, in favor of such an amendment of the present law relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States as to provide for the lapse of at least five months between the day fixed for choosing electors and the day fixed for the casting of their votes; which was referred to the Select Committee to take into consideration the state of the law respecting the ascertaining and declaration of the result of the elections of President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB presented the petition of J. M. Russell and others, citizens of Wyandotte County, Kansas, praying for the repeal of the resumption act; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. RANSOM. I present, Mr. President, several petitions of citizens of North Carolina, praying Congress to repeal the clause of the national-banking act imposing a 10 per cent. tax upon the circulating notes of State banks. I find that these petitions are signed by the leading men of the State. One of them has the signature of the governor of our State, the attorney-general, the auditor of state, the secretary of state, various presidents of national banks, presidents of railroad companies, and the leading and principal merchants in the commercial cities of the State. I think I can say with propriety that the sentiment in North Carolina is, without exception, in favor of the repeal of that clause of the banking act.

I move that these petitions be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented the petition of R. H. Porter, of Independence, Missouri, praying payment of balance of compensation for loss and damages to his property alleged to have been occasioned by the military authorities in the year 1857 at Camp Scott, Utah Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DORSEY presented a resolution of the Beehive Council No. 2, Sovereigns of Industry of the District of Columbia, representing one hundred and twenty families, in favor of the passage of a law providing for the appointment of a coal-weigher for the District, and requiring all coal-dealers to send the certificate of such coal-weigher with each load of coal sold; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 347) to remove the political disabilities of Manning M. Kimmell, late of Cape Girardeau County, Missouri, (by which I suppose it is not meant that he is dead) to report it favorably. The report is preceded by a petition, and on a former occasion we reported against the relief, because when this gentleman went into the rebellion he had left his accounts unsettled with the Government. Since that he has settled his accounts and paid up the balance to the entire satisfaction of the Government, and we now recommend the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 66) for the relief of John Thorns, of Fayette County, Kentucky, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BOOTH, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 570) to enable Moses Marshall to have a hearing before the Commissioner of Patents, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 896) to authorize the extension of the patent of Gilbert Jessup, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Railroads, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1218) to aid in the construction of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3546) to change the name of the steamboat D. A. McDonald to Silver Wave, reported it without amendment.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT AND COLONIAL CHARTERS.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution of the House of Representatives to print 300,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1877, reported it with amendments.

The resolution, as proposed to be amended by the committee, was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed 200,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1877; 150,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 30,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 20,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture: Provided, however, That the number of pages of said report shall not exceed six hundred.

And be it further resolved, That there be printed and bound in leather 4,627 copies of The Colonial Charters and Constitutions of the United States, compiled under the direction of the Senate, of which 960 copies shall be for the use of Senators and the Vice-President, and 2,500 copies shall be for the use of Representatives and Delegates, and the remaining 1,167 copies shall be distributed by the Public Printer, as follows: To the President of the United States, 2 copies; to the Department of State, 50 copies for transmission to United States legations and consulates-general abroad; to the War Department, 1 copy for the Military Academy at West Point; to the Navy Department, 1 copy for the Naval Academy at Annapolis; to the Department of Justice, 100 copies for the use of that Department; the Chief-Justice and justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the judges of the circuit and district courts of the United S ates, the Court of Claims; the Assistant Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General; and to the Smithsonian Institute 1 copy; and 1,000 copies for sale by the Public Printer at the cost of printing and binding, under such regulations as he may prescribe, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. MORRILL. This resolution evidently involves a very large expenditure, and it embraces a very miscellaneous distribution. I think it had better be printed and laid upon the table so that we can all have an opportunity to see really what is contemplated by the distribution of the document. I do not know how much this is to cost, and I do not now remember whether the division proposed between the House and the Senate is that which has heretofore prevailed. I ask to have the resolutions printed and laid on the table.

Mr. DAWES. I did not hear the Senator from Rhode Island state what would be the aggregate cost.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to occupy just one minute on the resolution before it goes over.

Mr. DAWES. I simply inquire the aggregate cost of this printing?

Mr. ANTHONY. As the resolution comes to us from the House of Representatives the cost would be $95,000. As amended by the Senate it would cost $73,000. The Senate Committee on Printing have added a resolution to print the colonial charters and constitutions, which would cost $16,720.

Mr. DAWES. I observe a limitation attempted to be put upon the Commissioner of Agriculture in the resolution, that his report shall not exceed six hundred pages. I should like to inquire of the Senator what is the object or the necessity of such a limitation?

Mr. ANTHONY. The resolution as it came from the House restricts the volume to five hundred pages, and as it is reported from the Senate committee it is restricted to six hundred pages.

Mr. DAWES. What is the object of putting a restriction on the volume? That is so unusual that I should like to know the reason.

Mr. PADDOCK. It was done in accordance with the suggestion of the Commissioner himself.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Commissioner feel unable to restrain himself except by law?

Mr. PADDOCK. The report is ready and it makes six hundred pages. It was attempted by the House to eliminate so much of it as would restrict the volume, as I understand, to five hundred pages. The Committee on Printing of the Senate has changed that so as to allow six hundred pages.

Mr. DAWES. If it is already limited by the Commissioner's own free will to six hundred pages it seems to me that this would be unnecessary legislation. But if the Commissioner does not feel safe to trust himself without such a limitation, then it may be necessary.

Mr. ANTHONY. The resolution as it came from the House limited the number of pages to five hundred. The Commissioner of Agriculture addressed a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, which he handed to me, asking that that limitation be removed, but submitting to a limitation of six hundred pages. The Committee on Printing have followed his suggestion in his letter to the Committee on Agriculture, leaving it at six hundred pages, although the Commissioner stated that he would like to have made the report contain eight hundred pages.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us call for the regular order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the Senator from Rhode Island any objection to allowing the resolution to lie over and be printed?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It must, having only been reported to-day, if anybody wishes. Let it go over and be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to say as far as the proposed reduction of the number of Agricultural Reports is concerned that I feel an interest in that subject, and shall object to the reduction of the number. The House fixed the number at three hundred thousand. That was the number last year and I think that number ought to be retained. As to the increase of the volume in size, that is another question. I give notice now that when the resolution comes up again I shall ask that we concur with the House and agree to print three hundred thousand copies.

Mr. ANTHONY. I must express my surprise that my economical friend from West Virginia, who stands at the door of the Treasury with uplifted sword, should object to a proposition in the line of economy which would save over $20,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I beg to reply to the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for. The introduction of bills is next in order. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator from Vermont will allow me to make a statement, I will say that my friend the chairman of the Committee on Printing overstates the amount that would be saved by the amendment. It would be less than $15,000, I think. The number of copies to be printed according to the action of the House would be the same, or substantially the same, as was printed last year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right. Let us have the regular order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COCKRELL (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1219) for the relief of Richard H. Porter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KERNAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1220) granting a pension to Margaret Mills; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BECK. A bill was handed to me a moment ago with a request to present it, which I ask leave to do.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S No. 1221) for the relief of Norman Wiard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DORSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1222) to regulate the sale of coal by retail dealers in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1223) to regulate the railway mail service; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. ROLLINS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1224) to extend and continue in force the act approved March 3, 1877, to provide for the support of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EATON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1225) to incorporate the National Electric Light Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1226) to provide for the payment of interest due the Chickasaw Nation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HEREFORD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1227) to provide for the election of Representatives to the Forty-sixth Congress in the State of West Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. JOHNSTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 29) in re claim of William B. Isaacs & Co.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

T. B. M. MASON.

Mr. WHYTE. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution (H. R. No. 109) authorizing Lieutenant T. B. M. Mason, United States Navy, to accept a medal conferred by the King of Italy for extinguishing a fire on a powder-ship was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I merely want to enter the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion will be entered.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. GORDON. By mistake yesterday a bill introduced by me was referred to the Committee on Claims when it ought to have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is the bill (S. No. 1215) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Erwin." It involves a law point, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change of reference will be made.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. SPENCER, it was Ordered, That Mrs. E. H. Powers have leave to withdraw her petition and papers now on the files of the Senate.

DECORATION DAY.

Mr. BURNSIDE submitted the following communication from the Grand Army of the Republic; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE POTOMAC,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Grand Army Hall, Washington, D. C., May 6, 1878.

To the United States Senate:

On Thursday, the 30th instant, Decoration Day, memorial services in commemoration of those who fell in defense of the Union and the sacred and glorious cause in which they died will be held, under the auspices of the Department of the Potomac, Grand Army of the Republic, at Arlington National Cemetery; and in behalf of said department I hereby extend to the several members of your honorable body a cordial invitation to be present on that sacred occasion.

G. E. CORSON,
Department Commander.

MEXICAN COMMISSION AWARDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business being concluded, the bill moved by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1016) to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 15 of section 1, after the word "assigns" to insert "except as is in this act otherwise limited or provided;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to receive any and all moneys which may be paid by the Mexican Republic under and in pursuance of the conventions between the United States and the Mexican Republic for the adjustment of claims, concluded July 4, 1868, and April 29, 1876; and whenever and as often as any installments shall have been paid by the Mexican Republic on account of said awards, to distribute the moneys so received in ratable proportions among the corporations, companies, or private individuals respectively in whose favor awards have been made by said commissioners, or by the umpires, or to their legal representatives or assigns, except as is in this act otherwise limited or provided, according to the proportion which their respective awards shall bear to the whole amount of such moneys then held by him, and to pay the same, without other charge or deduction than is hereinafter provided, to the parties respectively entitled thereto. And in making such distribution and payment, due regard shall be had to the value at the time of such distribution of the respective currencies in which the said awards are made payable; and the proportionate amount of any award of which by its terms the United States is entitled to retain a part shall be deducted from the payment to be made on such award, and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as a part of the unappropriated money in the Treasury.

Mr. INGALLS. Before voting upon the bill I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. There is no written report accompanying it.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I should like to hear a statement about the provisions of the bill?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. This bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It was, I believe, exactly similar to a bill which was introduced in the other House. The amendments which the committee propose are in section 3, that the costs shall be deducted before any payment of claims is made, to which there will not be any objection that I can see. The main amendment is in the fifth section. The commission under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded its sittings in this city on the 4th of July, 1868, and awarded about $4,000,000. Two installments have been paid by the Mexican government, but they have not been distributed. The purpose of this bill is to distribute those amounts and all others as they may be paid into the Treasury, except the cases of Benjamin Weil and the La Abra Silver Mining Company. The Judiciary Committee have information that the Mexican government has represented to our Government that those claims were fraudulent, that they had no foundation in fact; not that they had cumulative testimony upon the subject but that they had testimony to show that the claims were actually fraudulent. The committee did not investigate the question at all to see whether those claims were fraudulent or not, and do not wish, in presenting this provision in the fifth section, to be understood as passing an opinion upon the merits of those claims at all; but we thought that the honor of this country, as well as common justice and equity, required that where a sovereign government with whom we made this convention had represented that these two claims were fraudulent actually, having no foundation in fact, we ought to give to the treaty-making power, the President of the United States, the opportunity to examine for himself and ascertain whether that is so or not; and we have intrusted to him this power and limited it to six months. If after that time he shall have done nothing in the matter, these claims are to be paid the same as the others.

Mr. HEREFORD. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask him a question right there for information as to the alleged fraud of these claims? Does it come to our Government from the Mexican government officially?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. So I understand, information officially that they are fraudulent. As I stated before, we do not pretend to pass judgment upon those claims, but we think that while there is any controversy in relation to them the other claims should not be deferred.

Mr. INGALLS. There is one point upon which I should like to be informed, and that is as to the amount that has been awarded to the citizens of each government respectively—the aggregate amount.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. About $4,000,000.

Mr. INGALLS. I want to know the amount that has been awarded to Mexican citizens and to American citizens.

Mr. McDONALD. The amount that is to be taken out of the Treasury.

Mr. INGALLS. No, I want to know the amount that has been awarded to American citizens and to Mexican citizens separately.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I have a memorandum here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amount awarded to Mexican citizens appears in the second section, adding $50,528 in Mexican gold, $10,559 in American gold, and $89,410 in currency. That makes the total award to citizens of Mexico.

Mr. INGALLS. How much is that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars, I should think.

Mr. INGALLS. How much is there on the other side?

Mr. EDMUNDS. About $3,000,000. The Senator from Illinois has a memorandum of the amount.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Three or four million dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Over $3,000,000.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, if this bill passes in its present shape there will be a great injustice done; and if I can engage the attention of the Senate for a few moments I will explain why it would be an act of injustice. The two claims that are singled out and stigmatized in the fifth section of the bill were submitted to the Mexican commission, discussed and investigated just as all the other claims were. The claim of Weil is for the alleged capture of a wagon train of cotton. It was pending before the commission provided for by treaty nearly seven years; it was investigated by the American commissioner and the Mexican commissioner during a large portion of that time. There never was a fairer opportunity to arrive at the truth than there was in regard to this claim. It was not a subject of mystery; it was not a complicated matter; it was a plain question of fact: whether a train loaded with cotton was taken or not—one of those ordinary questions that are governed by such evidence as we constantly hear in courts of justice. I have practiced law long enough and the Senator from Illinois has presided on the bench long enough to know that the losing party can always—it is one of his privileges—after the case is over allege that he has found additional evidence which shows that the judgment is wrong. As my friend the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] suggests, it was one of Mr. Lincoln's sayings, when his client got beaten, "Now, all that is left for us is to go to the tavern and curse the judge." [Laughter.]

In this case I repeat that for nearly seven years the Mexican government had its day in court; the Mexican government was heard by its counsel; the question as to the capture of this cotton was fully discussed; the place where the train was said to have been captured was open to inspection. There is no circumstance connected with it that could be concealed, and there is no new light that can now be thrown upon this claim except in the shape of cumulative testimony.

At the conclusion of this investigation the commissioners divided, the American commissioner sustaining this claim, the Mexican commissioner deciding against it. Under the treaty it then became necessary to select a referee to pass upon the claim and decide between the disagreeing commissioners. That referee was Sir Edward Thornton, the British minister to this Government. He accepted the duty, and having examined the case to his satisfaction held the claim to be a valid one and that it ought to be paid. What else can now be done I am at a loss to perceive. Since, however, the case was thus settled by the referee I suppose I commit no breach of propriety in saying that a committee of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, have fully investigated——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I must ask the Senator not to go to the proceedings of the House.

Mr. VOORHEES. I stand corrected. I have no desire to infringe any of the rules. I will put it, however, in this shape: I believe if the Judiciary Committee would investigate this claim as it has been investigated elsewhere, that committee would arrive at the same conclusion that the American commissioner and the referee, Sir Edward Thornton, arrived at, to say nothing of conclusions unanimously arrived at by anybody else.

This bill comes here now singling out two claims and stigmatizing them as in some way tainted with fraud. Allow me a word on that compliance with our treaty, its reference to a man of distinguished point. After the long investigation of this Weil claim, the careful ability and probity, after all that had been done, whispers then for the first time began to be heard of fraud, until, as I am informed, the matter was at last pressed, I will not say by blackmailing parties, but it was pressed upon the attention of the Mexican government. The Mexican government did not take the initiative in opposition to the payment of this award. Why should she? She had not merely her day in court, but years. The treaty had exhausted all its powers. The last resort had been made for a decision to a referee, and the Mexican government was not complaining until the matter was urged upon her attention; and I believe now perhaps there is a quasi authority from the Mexican government to get clear of paying these claims if she can.

I hope this bill will not pass in its present shape. I hope it will come before this body in another and better form. Let there be investigation if necessary; but I see no propriety in hurrying this bill through in the interest of other claimants and to pay them at the behest of their lawyers who do not wish to wait until this matter can be properly disposed of.

Mr. HILL. Will my friend allow me to ask a question for information?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I do not know anything about this matter; but, as I understand from the statements of various Senators, there are certain claims and certain awards about which there is no dispute that they are perfectly just and ought to be paid.

Mr. THURMAN. There are only two about which there is any question.

Mr. HILL. I understand there are only two about which there is any dispute or charge of injustice or wrong; and I understand the purpose of this bill is to order the immediate payment of those about which there is no dispute and whose justice is admitted. Now, I wish to ask my friend, the Senator from Indiana, is it right that those claims which are not disputed and whose justice is admitted should be delayed even a day because of the delay necessary to investigate, either wholly or otherwise, the two claims which are in dispute?

Mr. VOORHEES. No, they ought not to be delayed; they ought to be paid; but in paying them a stigma ought not to be placed on claims that I contend are as fairly assessed and as justly awarded as the others.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The committee did not design to place any stigma upon these claims at all, but to allow the President of the United States as a matter of friendly duty to Mexico to consider whether there was any ground for a new trial. But inasmuch as this subject has been opened in the way it has by the Senator from Indiana, and as some things are in the possession of the committee that perhaps the Senate ought to understand which may bear upon this subject, and which I think ought not to be stated publicly, I move that the doors be closed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Senator from Vermont moves that the doors be closed. That order is granted upon the request of any Senator.

Mr. VOORHEES. I did not hear the Senator. My attention was engaged.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The motion requires to be seconded under the rules, I believe.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I second it.

Mr. VOORHEES. What is the motion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. My motion is to close the doors. That requires, if there is any objection to it, the Chair to close the doors until it is considered whether the matter ought to be considered privately.

Mr. VOORHEES. I make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The galleries having been cleared and the doors closed, the bill was considered, and various amendments having been made the bill was reported to the Senate and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed in the following form:

A bill to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to receive any and all moneys which may be paid by the Mexican Republic under and in pursuance of the conventions between the United States and the Mexican Republic for the adjustment of claims concluded July 4, 1868, and April 29, 1876; and whenever and as often as any installments shall have been paid by the Mexican Republic on account of said awards, to distribute the moneys so received in ratable proportions among the corporations, companies, or private individuals respectively in whose favor awards have been made by said commissioners, or by the umpires, or to their legal representatives or assigns, except as is in this act otherwise limited or provided, according to the proportion which their respective awards shall bear to the whole amount of such moneys then held by him, and to pay the same without other charge or deduction than is hereinafter provided, to the parties respectively entitled thereto. And in making such distribution and payment, due regard shall be had to the value at the time of such distribution of the respective currencies in which the said awards are made payable; and the proportionate amount of any award of which by its terms the United States is entitled to retain a part shall be deducted from the payment to be made on such award, and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as a part of the unappropriated money in the Treasury.

SEC. 2. That out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Secretary of State of the United States, in gold or its equivalent, the equivalent of $50,528.57 in Mexican gold dollars, and $10,559.67 in American gold coin, and $89,410.17 in United States currency, said sums being the aggregate in said currencies respectively of the awards made under the said convention of July 4, 1868, in favor of citizens of the Mexican Republic against the United States, and having been deducted from the amount awarded in favor of citizens of the United States, and payable by Mexico, in accordance with article 4 of the said treaty; and that said sums, when paid to the Secretary of State, as aforesaid, shall be regarded as part of the awards made under the said treaty, to be paid or distributed as herein provided.

SEC. 3. That out of the payments and installments received from Mexico, as aforesaid, on account of said awards, and out of the moneys which shall be received by the Secretary of State under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of State shall, when and as the same shall be received and paid, and before any payment to claimants, deduct therefrom and retain a sum not to exceed 5 per cent. of said moneys awarded to citizens of the United States, until the aggregate of the amounts so deducted and retained shall equal the sum of $114,948.74, being the amount of the expenses of the commission, including contingent expenses paid by the United States in accordance with article 6 of the treaty, as ascertained and determined in pursuance of the provisions of the said treaty; which said sums, when and as the same are deducted and retained, shall be, by the Secretary of State, transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and passed to the account of, and be regarded as, unappropriated money in the Treasury.

SEC. 4. That in the payment of money, in virtue of this act, to any corporation, company, or private individual, the Secretary of State shall first deduct and retain or make reservation of such sums of money, if any, as may be due to the United States from any corporation, company, or private individual in whose favor awards shall have been made under the said convention.

SEC. 5. That the awards made in the case of Benjamin Weil and in the case of La Abra Silver Mining Company shall not, nor shall any part thereof, be paid, except as in this section provided. The President of the United States shall, within six months next after the passage of this act, consider and determine, upon such evidence and information as he shall deem just, whether there is probable cause to believe that the honor of the United States, the principles of public law or considerations of justice and equity require that said awards, or either of them, shall be opened or set aside, or a new trial be had in respect of the validity or justice of the respective claims on which they are founded; and if the President shall so determine, the award or awards so determined upon shall not be paid over by the Government of the United States to said claimants, and shall be suspended to await such action in respect thereto as the two governments may, in due course, agree upon, or the Government of the United States may determine. But if the President shall not so determine as aforesaid, within said six months, then the award or awards aforesaid not so determined upon shall be paid in the manner and proportions provided for the other awards in this act mentioned.

After one hour spent in secret session, the doors were opened.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-roads in the several States herein named; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MERRIMON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4236) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, with the accompanying papers, and ordered to be printed.

T. B. M. MASON.

Mr. WHYTE. I moved this morning to reconsider the vote by which yesterday the joint resolution (H. R. No. 109) authorizing Lieutenant T. B. M. Mason, United States Navy, to accept a medal conferred by the King of Italy for extinguishing a fire on a powder-ship was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I ask now that that motion may be considered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. WHYTE. A Senate joint resolution in identically the same words has already passed the Senate and gone to the House; they crossed each other, and the subject has already been reported upon by the Committee on Foreign Relations. The object is to pass this joint resolution and let the one in the House be indefinitely postponed. I ask that it may be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection to this resolution, for I believe there was gallant and meritorious service by this officer, and it comes within the rule I stated some time since.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that the bill (S. No. 1098) to transfer Paymaster Robert Burton Rodney from the retired list to the active list of the Navy reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs by the honorable Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] and indefinitely postponed, may be recommitted for the purpose of laying before that committee some additional testimony not in their hands at the time of the consideration. I have submitted this to the honorable Senator from California and he makes, as I understand, no objection.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Senator from Delaware moves that the vote by which this bill was postponed indefinitely be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4549) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. SARGENT to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to section 3, after the word "stipulation," to insert the words "for the several Indian tribes;" in the same line, after the word "of," to strike out "the various Indians" and insert "said;" and after the word "tribes" to insert "respectively;" so as to make the words proposed by the committee to be inserted read:

That the several appropriations herein made for teachers, millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons, and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulation, for the several Indian tribes, may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of said tribes respectively within the discretion of the President, and with the consent of said tribes expressed in the usual manner; and that he cause report to be made to Congress, at its next session thereafter, of his action under this provision.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no objection to that. It is right.

Mr. SARGENT. I supposed there would be no objection to perfecting the text.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment is that of Mr. EDMUNDS, to strike out commencing in line 10 the words "for teachers, millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons, and;" so as to read:

That the several appropriations herein made for various articles provided for by treaty stipulation may be diverted to other uses, &c.

Mr. SARGENT. I hope that will not be agreed to.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The next question was stated to be on the amendment of Mr. HOAR, to strike out all after the word "that" and insert:

Whenever any of the foregoing appropriations shall, in the judgment of the President, be unnecessary, he may, with the consent of the tribe interested, expressed in the usual manner, dispense with the expenditure therein provided; and a sum not exceeding $10,000 is hereby appropriated, which may be expended for such other uses, for the benefit of such tribes, respectively, as the President, with such consent, shall approve.

Mr. SARGENT. I rise to a point of order on that amendment under the twenty-seventh rule. It has not been referred to the committee; it increases an appropriation; it has not been reported from any committee; and it is new legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to be heard on the point of order a moment. This amendment——

Mr. SARGENT. I rise to another point of order. Are points of order debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are decided without debate by the Chair, but a Senator may take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and that is debatable.

Mr. HOAR. I trust the Senator from California will hardly press his point.

Mr. SARGENT. I will not do so, although the Senator yesterday morning called for the regular order to prevent me speaking.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from California is very much mistaken in thinking I called for the regular order to prevent his speaking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the point of order to the Senate, which makes it debatable.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inform the Senator from California that he is mistaken in thinking that I called for the regular order yesterday to prevent his speaking. He misunderstood the transaction that happened.

This bill proposes that certain expenditures therein contained may be dispensed with and the appropriation used for other purposes. The amendment proposes the same thing, that the appropriation provided in the bill may be dispensed with, but it limits the amount of the appropriation for other uses to $10,000; in other words, it cannot possiby increase the appropriation in any particular, and it may diminish very much the appropriation proposed in the bill. That is the only effect it can possibly have.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator a question right on that point?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Suppose the Secretary of the Interior should dispense with $1,000, say, of the original appropriation under the first clause of the Senator's amendment, he could then reach the whole $10,000 of the additional appropriation proposed by the amendment of the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I will correct that by saying "of the appropriations herein provided," so as to read: "$10,000 of the appropriations herein provided."

Mr. SARGENT. It is very obvious for a great many reasons, which I will not take the time of the Senate to give, that that would be improvident. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 9; no quorum voting.

Mr. SARGENT. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 32, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Allison,	Davis of W. Va.,	Kirkwood,	Spencer,
Bailey,	Dorsey,	Lamar,	Teller,
Bayard,	Eaton,	McCreery,	Voorhees,
Beck,	Gordon,	Merrimon,	Wadleigh,
Blaine,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Wallace,

Conover,	Kernan,	Sargent,	Withers

NAYS—15.

Anthony,	Coke,	Howe,	Maxey,
Burnside,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Morgan,
Cameron of Wis.,	Ferry,	Kellogg,	Paddock.
Cockrell,	Hoar,	McMillan.

ABSENT—29.

Armstrong,	Dennis,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Barnum,	Edmunds,	McDonald,	Saulsbury,
Booth,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Saunders,

Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	Morrill,	Thurman.
Chaffee,	Hamlin,	Oglesby,
Christiancy,	Johnston,	Patterson,
Davis of Illinois,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,

So the amendment to the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the amendment as it now stands be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended is to strike out the third section of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof:

That the several appropriations herein made for teachers, millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons, and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulation for the several Indian tribes, may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of the said tribes, respectively, within the discretion of the President, and with the consent of said tribes expressed in the usual manner; and that he cause report to be made to Congress, at its next session thereafter, of his action under this provision.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out the word "teachers" from the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is a wise amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out sections 4 and 5, in the following words:

SEC. 4. That in case of an emergency requiring immediate action and calling for an expenditure of funds for which no appropriation has been provided, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to use for the purpose such funds herein provided for other purposes as may not be needed for the specific object for which appropriated, but no deficiency shall thereby be created in the fund from which any money is so taken: Provided, That funds appropriated to fulfill treaty obligations shall not be so used.

SEC. 5. That when not required for the purpose for which appropriated, the funds herein provided for the pay of specified employés at any agency may be used by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the pay of clerks or other employés at such agency, but no deficiency shall be thereby created; and, when necessary, specified employés may be detailed for clerical or other service when not required for the duty for which they were engaged.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. The amendment just adopted was intended as a substitute for the fourth and fifth sections.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert in lieu of those sections:

SEC. 4. And no purchases of supplies for which appropriations are herein made, exceeding in the aggregate $500 in value at any one time, shall be made without advertisement except in case of exigency, when purchases may be made in open market in amounts not exceeding $3,000.

This provision has been made in several Indian appropriation bills, and as arranged in the bill of last year it was supposed to cover future appropriations. But on a careful examination of the statute under a letter received from the Indian Office it is thought there may be some doubt about that, and therefore it is moved to insert it here.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will the Senator state the difference between the law and this amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. There is not the slightest difference, except that there is a doubt whether that law applies to appropriations made this year; or, in other words, whether the provision in last year's appropriation bill is not limited to the appropriations therein. This is the exact language of the law of last year.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not know that I am opposed to this amendment; I hardly think I am; but I want information——

Mr. ALLISON. I thought I had consulted the Senator and he had consented to it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No; this is the first I knew of it. The information I wish is this: if the amendment is not adopted and the bill is passed as it came from the committee, will not all supplies have to be advertised for?

Mr. ALLISON. All supplies of the minutest character will most likely have to be purchased after advertising.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator's object is, whenever there is a sudden emergency where they cannot wait for regular advertisements, to allow small purchases to be made in open market.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; to a limited amount.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I see the object.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a very necessary amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that there are several cases in this bill where contracts other than for supplies are to be made or are authorized to be made. I wish to suggest to him to so amend his amendment as to provide that no contracts shall be made without advertisement. I refer him particularly to the case of $20,000 of surveys for the Sioux reservation. It would evidently be improper to allow a contract of that kind and that magnitude to be made without advertisement, and I suggest to him to amend by adding at the beginning of the amendment the words:

No contract shall be made.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President, with reference to the particular illustration of the Senator from Kansas, contracts for surveys are made under existing provisions of law with the price and rates fixed by law. I do not think it worth while to provide for an advertisement for this particular survey. If one is to be made, the law fixes the rate.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not allude to the particular contract except by way of illustration. The contract provided for in this bill would not be regulated by the law governing the surveys of public lands. It is a specific appropriation for a specific purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. Under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. INGALLS. But there are other contracts authorized to be made by this bill, such as those for the removal of Indian tribes. In several cases in this bill there are appropriations made for the removal of certain tribes from their present location to others to be designated hereafter. Now, unless this amendment is made there will be a very large amount of money to be expended under contracts other than for supplies without advertisement, and the public interest would as well be consulted by having those matters advertised for, as for supplies or provisions. The Senator understands that in the case of the Nez Percés and of the Poncas and of many of the Sioux that are to be removed to new agencies contracts are to be made other than for the purchase of supplies, and I have no doubt that the interest of the Government will be better protected by competition than by allowing the Commissioner to issue these contracts to whomever he might see fit without the advantage of competing bids.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it would only confuse that class of work to have public lettings for it. I think it would be exceedingly difficult, for instance, to advertise in Chicago that four hundred Nez Percés are to be removed to a suitable location in the Indian Territory. It seems to me that that would not be a matter proper for a public letting. I submit to the Senator from Kansas that we must leave some things to the discretion of the Executive Departments of this Government; we must place some little reliance upon the integrity and capacity of the men who administer the Indian affairs of this Government.

Mr. INGALLS. Then, what is the use of the Senator's amendment, if that is the rule?

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa if it is not the practice of the Indian Office to have the agents in charge of the tribes to be removed superintend such removal? That certainly was the case with the Sioux last year, and it was the case with the Poncas to my certain knowledge.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the case almost universally. They are removed generally under the care of their local agents or some Indian inspector in the regular service of the Department.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator is strangely misinformed. I happen to know that in two cases which occurred the last year the removal was made by contract, and that the contract in one instance was given to one of the most irresponsible scoundrels on the frontier.

Mr. ALLISON. I know the case to which the Senator refers. That was the Poncas.

Mr. INGALLS. It does not make any odds what the case was, I make the statement.

Mr. TELLER. Then, that is a very good illustration of the evil of letting by contract.

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator from Colorado suggests, it is a very good illustration of the practice of letting by contract.

Mr. VOORHEES. I would ask the Senator from Kansas who made that contract with one of the most irresponsible scoundrels on the frontier?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know.

Mr. VOORHEES. Whose duty was it to make the contract?

Mr. ALLISON. I think my amendment covers all that is necessary, and I hope that it will be adopted.

Mr. PADDOCK. My understanding was that the Poncas were removed by the then agent, or, at all events, that he superintended the removal.

Mr. WHYTE. It may be that he was the scoundrel.

Mr. ALLISON. I never had occasion to examine that subject critically; but I understood there were very loose contracts or arrangements made with reference to the Poncas, and that the party engaged in the removal of them was very soon afterward removed himself.

Mr. INGALLS. After he had got the money.

Mr. PADDOCK. I know the requirement to remove them was very loose.

Mr. VOORHEES. I want to ask a practical question. I have sat here and listened to this debate on Indian affairs as I have listened to similar debates in both branches of Congress for the last seventeen or eighteen years, and I always come to the conclusion, before the debate gets through, that we have the most corrupt and infamous set of men in the public service in this regard that there are in the world, and the character of my mind is such that I want to get at somebody, to punish somebody. Now, the Senator from Kansas states in his place that a contract to remove certain Indians from one location to another, which, I believe, is a lucrative job, was awarded in the last year or so to one of the most irresponsible scoundrels, to use his own language, on the frontier. I asked him who made that award. He tells me he does not know. I asked him whose duty it was to make such an award. Somebody ought to be punished.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Indiana will excuse me for interrupting him.

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Iowa said that he knew to whom I referred, and I suggest as he is the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs that he probably could advise the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me a moment, the Senator from Kansas has a strange way of misunderstanding what I said. I said that I knew the tribe of Indians to which he referred, namely, the Poncas, but I do not know the person.

Mr. VOORHEES. Does the Senator know the tribe of scoundrels to whom the Senator from Kansas referred?

Mr. ALLISON. No, I leave that to the Senator from Kansas to explain.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let me ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, as the Senator from Kansas has referred me to him, whose duty it is to make contracts for the removal of the Indians?

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary of the Interior, under the guidance of his subordinate officer, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES. Then, until the contrary shall be shown, a prima facie case exists that the Secretary of the Interior awarded this contract to "one of the most irresponsible scoundrels on the frontier;" and in that shape I leave it for the present.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is not able to state to the Senate that any contract at all was made with anybody. I think there was no contract whatever made with any person.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Kansas stated otherwise.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think some inspector connected with the Indian Office, some one of the inspectors provided for by law, and the then agent of the tribe, whoever he was—his name has now passed from my mind—were the persons who superintended that removal, without any contract whatever. That was my understanding at the time, and I had some knowledge of the removal.

Mr. VOORHEES. As the Senator from Nebraska seems to be better advised on this subject than either the Senator from Iowa or the Senator from Kansas, I should like to have him bear testimony also as to whether this man was, as he has been so graphically described, "one of the most irresponsible scoundrels on the frontier."

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not feel it to be my duty even to make a response for any other person who has made a charge or declaration in respect to the character of anybody. I have made no such charge myself.

Mr. VOORHEES. As the Senator was testifying a little upon the matter, I did not know but that I could get some testimony on that point also.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not know any such person at all on the frontier myself.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that the Poncas were not removed by a contract. They were removed under the charge of the Department by the Indian agent, Howard.

Mr. COCKRELL. By whom?

Mr. TELLER. By a man by the name of Howard. I have his report here. It appears that they were not removed by contract at all. The chapter of their removal would be interesting for the Senate and for the people at large to read. The consent of these people to be removed was obtained by bringing a United States Army there to compel them to move, and then they took them in improper conveyances in such a manner that they suffered for food and in every other way. The history of the removal is simply a disgrace to the Indian Department and to the nation, as nearly every page of our Indian history is. When the Senator from Kansas said they were removed by the most notorious scoundrel in the country, I had not any doubt that it was true, because if I wanted to find him I should look for him in the Indian department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] as a substitute for the fourth and fifth sections.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to call the attention of the Senator who has the bill in charge to line 82 of section 1, where it is provided that the Indian agent at the White River agency shall have $1,200. This Indian agent, who has recently been appointed, I believe to be an exceptionally good man. I think the agent there has been heretofore paid $1,500, and I think the appropriation should be increased at least to that amount.

Mr. ALLISON. I believe myself, in view of the fact that we are about to consolidate the Utes, that it would be wise to make that alteration, leaving the agent to receive what he is now receiving.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, that is the sum he is now receiving. Then I move to strike out "two" and insert "five;" so as to make the amount $1,500.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to hear some reason for that. This bill has been carefully considered by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. As it came from the House the sum fixed was $1,000. The Senate amended it by adding $200 more, and I understand from the subcommittee who had it in charge that that is just as the Commissioner recommended it. I therefore see no reason why the amount should be increased.

Mr. ALLISON. I will interrupt the Senator in order to say that if any member of the committee objects I shall also object. I supposed the members of the committee would consent to the change suggested by the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment can only be received by general consent. It is not in order.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to state to the Senate why I think this amendment ought to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. TELLER. It is in order if not objected to. I do not understand that the Senator from West Virginia objects. He said he should like to know the reason for it, and I should like to state the reason.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I certainly object to it unless the Senator can give a very good reason for it. If there is any reason not yet known to me why the amount should be increased, I will hear it.

Mr. TELLER. I have had no opportunity to explain it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The committee looked pretty carefully into all these agencies. As I have just stated, the Senate committee increased the amount fixed for this agency by the House bill $200. Of course the Senator can make his explanation if he desires. I have no wish to prevent that.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that I have a right to move an amendment and to be heard upon my amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Of course as the amendment raises the amount it is subject to objection, but I withdraw my objection in order to give the Senator from Colorado an opportunity to explain it.

Mr. TELLER. I will move an amendment that will be perfectly in order. I move to strike out in line 80 the words "six hundred" and to strike out in line 82 the word "two" and insert "five." That does not increase the aggregate appropriation and I believe it will be in order. At the Los Pinos agency the committee who have so carefully considered this subject allow $1,600. At the White River agency where there is an equal number of Indians the agent is allowed $1,200, and at the Southern Ute agency the agent is allowed the same sum. Of all the Utes provided for by this bill at these agencies there are only twenty-nine hundred, as shown by the report. The report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shows that two thousand of them are at the Los Pinos agency and that nine hundred are at the White River agency. There are more, according to this report, at the Southern Ute agency. That is not correct. The fact is that it is the intention that they shall be about equally divided between the three places, and the White River agency is the one upon which it is proposed to consolidate all the Utes mentioned as the confederated bands. They ought to be consolidated there because they are safer from the aggression of settlers and miners than in the section where they now live. They ought to be consolidated at that place because the Government would save a vast amount of money in getting supplies to them there, it being so much nearer to the railroad, and it is a country that is non-mineral, and where they are not liable to be disturbed for many years. A very exceptionally honest agent, I believe, has been recently appointed by the Indian department, a Mr. Meeker, who was the founder of the Greeley colony, a man who has given great attention to the agriculture of that section of the country, a man who is thoroughly qualified to instruct the Indians in agriculture, and a man who will enter upon his work of taking charge of the Indian agency with an enthusiasm, with a zeal, and with a degree of integrity and intelligence that is not excelled by any man who ever went into that business. He is a natural-born philanthropist. He is not a politician. He is honest and poor, and he cannot afford to go to that agency for less than $1,500 a year. That is the point of all others in the agencies that we expect to fix upon if we ever succeed in civilizing and Christianizing these Indians; and I, a friend of the Indians, depend more on this man Meeker to do that than on all the other agents combined.

Mr. ALLISON. May I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that in case of consolidation the Secretary of the Interior is authorized by this bill to increase the compensation of any agent at the consolidated agency; so that, I think, that may cover the point.

Mr. TELLER. But of course we do not know whether we shall be able to accomplish that. It must be done by the consent of the Indians. If there is no consolidation, then this agent has at least nine hundred and thirty Indians, if I recollect the last report, at that agency. About one hundred of them are clothed as white people clothe themselves. If the Government had treated them fairly and paid their annuities at the agency where they belonged during the last year, they would all have been on the agency and made some progress in civilization; but they have been compelled to leave the agency during the last winter to sustain themselves and to keep from starving while their goods remained at the railroad, a distance of one hundred and twenty-five or one hundred and thirty miles away. Heretofore the agent at that place has had $1,500. It does seem to me that this agent ought to have that amount of money. I see no reason why the agent at the Los Pinos agency should have $1,600 while the agent at White River should receive but $1,200. Therefore I have moved the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the amendment objected to?

Mr. TELLER. The amendment does not propose to increase the appropriation, and I understand an amendment to be in order when it does not increase the appropriation. I have moved to strike out from one agency and add to another. I will modify my amendment, however, and make it a little better. In line 80 I move to strike out "six" and insert "three," making the sum for Los Pinos agency $1,300, and in line 82 to strike out "two" and insert "five," so as to make the sum for the White River agency $1,500. That leaves the same amount appropriated, but divides it a little differently.

Mr. ALLISON. I must submit to my friend that it would be hardly just to reduce the appropriation at the Los Pinos agency, where they have two thousand Indians, and a good many of them are wild Indians, to $1,300, and increase the appropriation to $1,500 at the White River agency, where they only have nine hundred Indians. That is a rule of arithmetic that would be hardly fair to this other man who did not found the Greeley colony.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that there may seem to be a little unfairness in that, and I would not have moved the amendment in that way if Senators had not objected to my first proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order.

Mr. TELLER. Then I shall offer an amendment that I believe the committee will agree to. In line 1277, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

Provided, That of this sum the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may authorize, with the consent of said Indians, the expenditure of a sum not exceeding $3,000 to construct an irrigating ditch on the White River.

Last year the Indians asked to have this amount, or so much as was necessary, taken out of their appropriation to build such a ditch, but the Commissioner decided that he had not the authority to do it. If this is done with the consent of the Indians, I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Secretary to report what comes before the proviso proposed, so that we may see whether this $3,000 is to come out of the Indian fund or whether it is an additional appropriation.

Mr. TELLER. It comes out of the Indian fund.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My colleague on the committee also tells me that it comes out of the Indian fund. If so, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from West Virginia will observe that immediately preceding, the expenditure of money is authorized for the purchase of flour, beans, and potatoes. As I understand, the object of the Senator's amendment is to allow them to irrigate and raise their own potatoes and beans; and I think it is a very worthy object.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The money is to be expended by the consent of the Indians?

Mr. TELLER. By the consent of the Indians. They asked for it last year, and the Commissioner said that he had no authority to give it.

Mr. INGALLS. What Indians are these?

Mr. TELLER. The Utes.

Mr. PADDOCK. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that their consent be obtained in open council.

Mr. SARGENT. I would not boil it down too close. Those words are used all the way through the bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. I merely make the suggestion.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let their consent be obtained in the usual way.

Mr. SARGENT. The words simply "with the consent of the Indians" occur all the way through the bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think their consent in all cases ought to be had in open council.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. I wish to call the attention of the Senator having charge of the bill to a verbal error in line 194, to the word "Cimarron," and in the following line to the word "Abiquiu." These words should be stricken out to conform to the text of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Is there no agency at Cimarron now?

Mr. DORSEY. There is no agency there.

Mr. ALLISON. We have made no appropriation for the Cimarron agency.

Mr. DORSEY. No, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator is right, and that that word ought to come out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas striking out the word "Cimarron," in the one hundred and ninety-fourth line of section 1.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. As to Abiquiu I am not so clear, because the Senate did not agree to the amendment of the committee in lines 74 and 75.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest to my colleague on the committee that striking out "Cimarron" it gives us jurisdiction in the committee of conference over the whole paragraph, and we shall have time then to look into the Abiquiu agency question.

Mr. DORSEY. I withdraw the proposition to strike out "Abiquiu."

Mr. SARGENT. In order to make that paragraph consistent, in line 193 we should strike out "six" and insert "five," the number of tribes being five without the Cimarrons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made, being verbal, as there is no objection to it.

Mr. ALLISON. There is a correction to be made in the footing in lines 145 and 146. "Three thousand and three hundred" should be stricken out and "five thousand" inserted; so as to read, "$105,000." That is a change in the footing to correspond with the text already agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made as a matter of course.

Mr. SARGENT. In line 227 I move to strike out "four" and insert "one" before "hundred;" so as to read, "in all, $27,100."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. What does that come from?

Mr. SARGENT. From taking off the Cimarron agency.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator having charge of the bill and to have his attention directed to pages 1 and 2. I find that the salaries fixed by the House for the Indian agents and not changed by the Senate committee from the amount fixed by the House are at Warm Springs agency, Klamath agency, Grand Ronde agency, Siletz agency, Umatilla agency, Malheur agency, Neah Bay agency, and the Yakama agency. I desire to know whether there has been any change in those salaries from the sums now fixed by law?

Mr. SARGENT. Some are decreased and some are increased over the present year by the House.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to know whether the salaries as fixed by the House are reductions?

Mr. ALLISON. Some of them are reduced and some are increased. It is a readjustment of salaries of Indian agents.

Mr. MITCHELL. I notice they are very low.

Mr. SARGENT. The Yakama agency is $2,000, which is a very decided increase. It is an important agency.

Mr. MITCHELL. I find that Klamath agency is fixed at $1,100. What was that before?

Mr. ALLISON. Fifteen hundred dollars.

Mr. MITCHELL. It ought to be $1,500 now.

Mr. SARGENT. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the committee of the Senate and the committee of the House thought $1,100 was the proper sum, considering the nature of the duties and the importance of the agency.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senate committee has cut down the Colville agency from $2,000 to $1,500. The House fixed it at $2,000.

Mr. SARGENT. Yes; but no good reason could be given why they fixed it at $2,000. It is not an important agency.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not regarded as an important agency and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs thought that $1,500 would be ample there.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is one agency here that I know something about, the Malheur agency. The amount fixed is $1,000. That is unquestionably too low. It is a pretty large agency of wild Indians.

Mr. ALLISON. There are seven hundred and fifty-nine Indians there.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are about eight hundred Indians there, wild Indians, just gathered in.

Mr. SARGENT. We thought when we were giving over a dollar an Indian for the agent, where they are wild Indians, roaming Indians and not doing much work, merely wanting herdsmen rather than teachers, that an allowance of more than a dollar an Indian was doing pretty well.

Mr. MITCHELL. What was he getting before?

Mr. SARGENT. Fifteen hundred dollars. Adjustment was made of all the agencies by the House, having in view the nature of the duties and service required. At the Nez Percé agency, there are four or five times as many Indians as at this point, and the agent receives $1,600.

Mr. ALLISON. There are twenty-eight hundred Indians there.

Mr. SARGENT. Just four times as many.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move the adoption of an amendment which I send to the desk and of which I gave notice yesterday. I also send to the desk a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs addressed to the chairman of the committee, which, in connection with this amendment, I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. After "dollars," in line 1375, it is proposed to insert:

For pay of a physician at the Chippewa agency, Minnesota, for one year, under the third article of the treaty of March 19, 1867, $1,200.

Mr. SARGENT. Is that recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask to have read the letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., May 7, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the fact that the provision for the pay of a physician at the Chippewa agency, Minnesota, under the third article of the treaty of March 19, 1867, with the Chippewas of the Mississippi, expires with the current fiscal year.

Under ordinary circumstances these Indians should have been in a condition of self-support, but owing to the ravages of the grasshoppers during several years past, their moneys have necessarily been mainly expended in providing them with subsistence and other necessary supplies.

The Indians at this agency number above twenty-eight hundred and a physician is absolutely necessary; therefore I respectfully recommend that an item of $1,200 be incorporated in the Indian appropriation bill now before the Senate, for the purpose above indicated.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HAYT, Commissioner.

Hon. WILLIAM WINDOM,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. McMILLAN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I notice in the bill as it came from the House the following paragraph:

The Union agency in the Indian Territory is hereby abolished, and the duties heretofore devolving upon said agency are transferred to the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

These, as I understand, comprise what are known as the five civilized Indian nations in the Indian Territory. It appears to me that the Committee on Appropriations here must have improvidently struck out that provision of the House bill. Those Indians are semi-civilized in all cases, and in many cases entirely civilized. They have a form of government of their own, laws, literature, and a school system of their own, and are entirely capable, as I understand, of self-government. In any event, I should like to have the experiment tried for a single year to ascertain whether there is any objection to allowing these people to manage their own affairs. They receive no money from us by way of appropriations. Their funds are all invested, and we pay them yearly interest upon the bonds that we hold for their benefit. The moneys are paid direct from Washington. The agent is purely a supernumerary and has no functions to discharge, so far as I know, except those of drawing his salary, which I suppose he does with punctuality and dispatch.

Mr. BECK. Quarterly.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from Iowa has no objection, it seems to me it would be well enough to try the experiment for a single year whether or not these Indians cannot get along without an agency. I suggest to him that he allow the Senate to disagree to the amendment striking out this clause.

Mr. ALLISON. I would rather take another year to make the experiment. I know that to some of these tribes it is very distasteful to have an agent at Union agency, but the Indian Bureau and the Interior Department think it very important that an agent should be continued there. It is true these tribes are civilized, or known as the civilized tribes. They have their own council, and they dispense and disburse their own funds. At the same time the original treaties authorize an agent and it seems to me, as it does to the Department, and to the Commissioner, that it is important to continue this agent for these five confederated tribes in order to have some person there who can communicate constantly and accurately and intelligently with the Department here at Washington. I must say that where an Indian agent is deserving and understands his duty and discharges it, I think he can be of great service to the Department and to the Indians under his charge. Therefore, I trust that my friend from Kansas, who I know is so much interested in the welfare and success of these tribes in the Indian Territory, will not press the amendment which he suggests.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if there is anything but an Indian agent there. Are there any other employés at the Union agency?

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot answer my friend at this moment. I see he has some documents which will perhaps enable him to answer the question better himself. I think there are very few employés at this Union agency.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not know but that this agency was in the same condition that the Secretary of the Interior himself describes other agencies. On page 402 of the report of the Secretary of the Interior, on this very important question of agents, the Secretary says:

> The anomaly of the present system of paying Indian agents needs only to be stated to be apparent. We pay an agent having charge of three hundred and twenty-five Indians $1,500, while another, having the care of seven thousand, is paid only the same sum. It may also happen that an agent having the oversight of but three hundred and twenty-five Indians may have with him a son employed as a clerk at $1,000 per annum, a daughter as a teacher at $600 per annum, a brother as a farmer at $900 per annum, a cousin as a blacksmith at $900 per annum, with a nephew as a carpenter at $800.

Mr. INGALLS. Where is that?

Mr. COCKRELL. This is the general condition of the agencies.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a suppositious case, as I understand it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am reading from the report of the Secretary of the Interior describing the condition of the agencies.

Mr. ALLISON. At this moment? Describing them as they exist now or as they existed once?

Mr. COCKRELL. I read from volume 1, report of the Secretary of the Interior, being part of the message and documents communicated to the two Houses of Congress at the beginning of the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress:

> At the same time, another agent having the care of seven thousand, having only his wife, (not under pay,) though obliged to entertain all strangers and military officers visiting his agency, draws from his salary only a bare subsistence for himself and wife, and is necessarily in very straitened circumstances. This latter case, to my knowledge, is literally and exactly true of one agent. The first case stated, though a supposable one, is possible to have occurred under our present system.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, it might have occurred.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I desire to know if this agency is one of that class where the agent has a son and a daughter and an uncle and a brother and a cousin and a nephew feasting upon funds of this kind.

Mr. ALLISON. As the agent is a Dr. Marston, of Missouri, a neighbor and constituent of my friend, I will leave him rather to answer that question. Judging from other Missourians, however, I should think not.

Mr. COCKRELL. Well, sir, if the agent is from Missouri, I can say that if he were appointed under a certain administration which I hope will soon have possession of this Government I would vouch for his correctness and for his fidelity and for his faithful and honorable discharge of the duties; but I must beg to be excused from indorsing every man who may be appointed or may have been heretofore appointed from Missouri.

Mr. WINDOM. Anybody else probably would under the circumstances.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think a great many probably would vouch for him, and I doubt not that the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Iowa have both indorsed Dr. Marston for this office. The indorsements generally come from neighboring States for those who get positions as from Missouri now.

Mr. WINDOM. I supposed it was a suppositious case put by the Senator. Appointed by any other administration, would anybody indorse him but the Senator himself?

Mr. PADDOCK. It is due to the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs that I should state that I called his attention to an abuse of this kind which had existed under a preceding administration of that office, and he at once corrected it, and as I understand he has made a rule and has given instructions thereunder to all agents that they shall not employ members of their families in these subordinate places. I state that in justice to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say in behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, as far as I am authorized to speak for them—I can speak for myself as a member of the committee—that it was to avoid just such things as have been suggested by the Senator from Missouri, that the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate struck out certain sections at the close of this bill and inserted the provision that the special appropriations made for millers, blacksmiths, farmers, carpenters, and others, where they were not needed, with the consent of the tribes and the acquiescence of the President, might be employed and used to provide blankets and provisions for the Indians, instead of keeping up these supernumeraries; and the Senate has very wisely inserted that provision in this bill. We avoid all these evils by that very provision.

Mr. ALLISON. And I think the Senator from Kentucky might add that in this bill we have also corrected the apparent injustice that was in it by increasing the compensation of certain agents and diminishing that of others.

Mr. BECK. That is true. That shows for itself, however, on the face of the bill. We have endeavored, instead of making them an allowance of $1,500 each, where the responsibility was great to give them more pay, and where the responsibility was small and somebody had to be on hand, to reduce it down to a point proportionate to the responsibility.

Mr. ALLISON. I mentioned that because the Senator from Missouri did not seem to have looked at it.

Mr. BECK. I want to say this only in regard to the action of the committee as to this item. The House inserted:

> The Union agency in the Indian Territory is hereby abolished, and the duties heretofore devolving upon said agency are transferred to the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The Senate committee inserted among the list of agents:

> At the Union agency at $1,500.

There is no other employé provided for there; there is no treaty stipulation to be carried out so far as I am advised; and so far as I as a member of the committee am concerned, I consented to that because we are having a great many questions made in regard to the Indian Territory, in regard to the rights of the United States, in regard to the rights of the various tribes, as to whether they want a territorial government or whether they want to be allowed to remain just as they are, and questions involving their titles, their property. Everything is brought before the Congress of the United States. Some want the Territory of Oklahoma organized; some say it would be injurious to the Indians. Great corporations claim to have rights in that Territory; others deny that they have any rights. We thought it safer to have an agent among those nations who from time to time would make impartial reports to the Secretary of the Interior and advise us of the facts in regard to these matters, and that $1,500 would be well spent perhaps in obtaining the information from the agent as to the condition of these different nations in that Territory rather than to abolish the agency altogether and transfer the duties to the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. DORSEY. I would suggest to the Senator from Kentucky in addition to what he has already so well said, that this Indian agent represents the Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws, and Seminoles, altogether about forty-five or fifty thousand Indians. They have no other agent except this one; and all differences as between those tribes, as between the different tribes or different individuals of different tribes, are submitted to him for adjudication, and he acts there more in the capacity of a judge than an Indian agent. I think it is one of the most important and necessary agencies in this country.

Mr. BECK. I am much obliged to the Senator from Arkansas for the suggestion. That was stated before us, I believe, by the Senator himself in committee, and acting upon that as well as upon the other matters we were advised of concerning the importance of this agency, we determined to retain it. We know that very many important questions are growing up there in every variety of form, and one man who is impartial was thought to be valuable, so that Congress could be advised without having to look to men who were employed on one side or the other of any controversy pending, and who would report if collisions took place among the tribes, if there were men who had no business there, if white men were selling whisky, or if the Cherokees and Choctaws were in difficulty among themselves, each espousing their own cause. In that case it would be advisable that some friendly person employed by the United States should be there to act as an umpire between them, and to tell us the truth as to what was the cause. I rather agree with the Senator from Arkansas that it is one of the most important items in the bill. After all the facts are presented, if the Senate think otherwise, however, that is for them.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The question will be taken on all the amendments together, unless a separate vote be demanded.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ADVERTISING MAIL-LETTINGS.

Mr. FERRY submitted the following report:

> The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3987) entitled "An act to regulate the advertising of mail-lettings," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:
>
> That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 15, and agree to the same.
> That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 11 and 12, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of said amendments substitute the following:

SEC. 4. Hereafter all advertisements, notices, proposals for contracts, and all other forms of advertising required by law for the Post-Office Department may be paid for at a price not to exceed the commercial rates charged to private individuals, with the usual discounts, such rates to be ascertained from sworn statements to be furnished to the Postmaster-General by the proprietors of the newspapers proposing to so advertise: Provided, That all advertising in newspapers since the 10th day of April, 1877, shall be audited and paid at like rates. But the Postmaster-General may secure lower terms at special rates whenever the public interest requires it.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 13 and 14, and agree to the same with an amendment, namely:

Change the numbers of sections 6 and 7 to numbers 5 and 6, respectively.

And the Senate agree to the same.

T. W. FERRY,
A. S. PADDOCK,
ELI SAULSBURY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
O. R. SINGLETON,
ANTH. EICKHOFF,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FERRY. If any Senator desires, I can explain the bill; but I suppose there can be no objection to the report. The Senate amendments were nearly all concurred in, except the one in relation to the compensation for advertising. The price now is under the old law of 1853, forty cents per folio. That was deemed not sufficient. Newspapers were not willing to be paid at that rate. The Senate proposed to pay them at commercial rates with the usual discount, requiring them to treat the Post-Office Department as they treat individuals. It was not thought that the newspapers should print for the public at any less rates than they do for individuals. The House struck out that amendment, and by the by it covered all the printing of the different Departments of the Government as it passed the Senate. It is now so modified as to confine it to the Post-Office Department, based upon commercial rates.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 20) authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 613) subjecting the Fort Wayne military reservation in the State of Arkansas to entry as other public lands in said State;

A bill (H. R. No. 699) to restore certain lands in Iowa to settlement under the homestead law, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) to provide for the enforcement of the eight-hour law.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THURMAN. I now call up the bill to repeal the bankrupt law.

Mr. DORSEY. By the courtesy of the Senator from Ohio, I desire to say that it was the purpose of the Appropriation Committee to call up the post-office appropriation bill immediately on the conclusion of the Indian bill; but at the instance of another committee and of some members of the Appropriations Committee we have deferred it for to-day and will not antagonize the bankrupt-repeal bill. I give notice, however, that on Monday, immediately after the morning business is concluded, I shall call up the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Why not to-morrow?

Mr. THURMAN. I hope we shall be through with the bankrupt-repeal bill in half an hour, and then the Senator can call up his appropriation bill and leave it the unfinished business for to-morrow.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio and of the Senate to the fact that I shall take the floor at the close of the bankrupt-repeal bill for the purpose of calling up the question of the resumption act, the House bill on that subject. I desire to press the consideration of that bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Not to the exclusion of the appropriation bills?

Mr. FERRY. Not to the exclusion of the appropriation bills, because the understanding was that they should be considered first; but aside from them and aside from the bankrupt repeal bill, which it was understood would follow the appropriation bills, I shall press that measure.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope that may be done.

BANKRUPT LAW REPEAL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 35) to repeal the bankrupt law.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senate in a very few words to the effect of the vote upon the pending amendment in order that we may vote understandingly. The Judiciary Committee of the Senate in the amendment reported by it preserved that feature which had been voted by the Senate, that the bill should take effect on the 1st of January, 1879. The committee did not feel at liberty to alter that date, the Senate having voted to insert it. Upon the amendment being reported the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] moved to strike out the words "which shall be on the 1st of January, 1879," as the date when the act shall take effect, and to insert in lieu of it "from and after the passage of this act." If that amendment were to prevail, no alteration could be made of that date, because the words having been inserted they could not be stricken out.

In order to enable those who do not agree that the bill shall take effect on the 1st of January, 1879, nor that it shall take effect immediately upon its approval by the President, and as a compromise between them, I availed myself of my right to move to amend the text of the committee's amendment, and insert instead of "the 1st day of January, A. D. 1879," "the 1st day of September, 1878." I offered that, and I adhere to it.

Now, what I wish to call the attention of the Senate to is this: if my amendment prevails the date will be fixed, and it cannot be altered; but if my amendment be defeated, then it will be in order to move any other amendment fixing any other day. And if my amendment should be defeated I shall take it as the sense of the Senate that it considers the 1st of September as too far off for this bill to take effect.

Mr. RANSOM. No, too short a time.

Mr. THURMAN. Some may consider it too short. If any one thinks that, he can move to insert either the 1st of October or the 1st of November or the 1st of December, or to satisfy some who think it ought to continue in effect until after the beginning of the next session of Congress, so that it may be seen whether some amendment may not be agreed upon, he may move to insert the 31st day of December. But I shall consider a vote of the Senate defeating the 1st of September as an intimation of the opinion of a majority of the Senate that the bill should take effect before the 1st day of September, and I shall therefore in that case move to insert the 1st of August next; but for the present, and for the reasons that I have heretofore stated, I insist on the amendment fixing the date of the taking effect of the bill at the 1st of September.

I said on a previous occasion, and I repeat now, that I do not think the people of this country were fairly notified of the fact or expected that this law would be repealed at this session of Congress. The subject had lain a long time in the Judiciary Committee, and no pressing haste had been required of it. It is true that my friend from Kentucky on my left [Mr. MCCREERY] did at one time question the chairman of the committee on the subject, but there was nothing to attract public attention, I think, to the fact that both branches of Congress by large majorities were ready to repeal the law.

Under these circumstances and in the peculiar condition of the country, it seems to me fair to let the law remain in force until the 1st day of September. I know very well that it is urged very strenuously by business men, large merchants, large manufacturers, and the like that the effect of leaving the law in force until that time is to a certain extent to paralyze business in the country. So they think. Indeed, I have a telegram from a city in my own State, most imposingly signed by the leading business men of that city, in which a very surprising fact is revealed that all that we need for our prosperity is—I am not quoting their language but the effect of it—not the resumption of specie payments, not inflation, no legislation on the currency whatsoever, but all that is necessary to bring perfect prosperity to this country and all its business interests is to repeal the bankrupt law instanter! I confess, Mr. President, I was delighted when I saw that, because——

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if that comes from the debtor class.

Mr. THURMAN. Entirely from the creditor class.

Mr. DAWES. I understood the Senator the other day to controvert a suggestion of mine that the continuance of the bankrupt law was in the interest of the debtor class, by replying that the debtor class had petitioned in large numbers for its repeal. I did not understand after that how the Senator, in order to give that debtor class that wanted the law repealed more time to take advantage of it, thought they ought to have a longer notice as far as September. It seems to me that if they want it repealed they do not want any notice until September. But if the demand comes from those who desire to avail themselves of the law, in whose interest the law is, and not those who are creditors, I can quite understand the position of the Senator.

Mr. THURMAN. That is a pretty long question [laughter] and if the Senator had done me the honor to listen to what I said the other day he would have found that there was no inconsistency at all between what I am stating now and what I stated then. I said then, and the records of this body and of the other House will show it to be true, that almost every petition which came to us in the session of 1873–'74 asking for the repeal of the bankrupt law came from the debtor class. They asked for its repeal because they said the existence of the law prevented them from making such arrangements with their creditors as would enable them to carry on their business. I was speaking then of the session of 1873–'74, and what I said was literally true. I think that every petition which came here was from men in embarrassed circumstances, who asked that that law be repealed because it prevented them from making arrangements with their creditors which would enable them to carry on their business.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask my friend from Ohio if the petitioners of whom he has spoken as the creditor class are not largely the debtor class to another class of people?

Mr. THURMAN. They may owe. I do not know any merchants scarcely who do not owe money as well as being the creditors of other persons; but this I will say to my friend, that I do not believe he could find anywhere in the United States a list of names of men less likely to go into bankruptcy than the men who sent that telegram to me. I do not think there is one of them that will ever have his foot inside of a bankrupt court in the world unless it be to prove a claim against some bankrupt. They are very solid men indeed.

But I did not rise to debate the merits of this bill one way or the other. I said the other day that I thought the country ought to have a little notice of this repeal bill before it goes into effect. I said that because I think some consideration is due to the people who are indebted and who are honest, for there are honest men who take the benefit of the bankrupt law as well as dishonest men. Some little consideration is due to them, and we ought not in hot haste and without full notice to the country to put an end to the law at once.

I now repeat what I said before, that if my amendment shall be adopted that settles the date; but if my amendment shall be voted down, then it will be in order to move another amendment fixing some other date..

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I am somewhat at a loss to understand what the difference is between the proposition I made and the proposition made by the Senator from Ohio in its rights before the Senate. I moved to strike out and insert. It is true I moved to strike out "the 1st day of January, A. D. 1879," and insert "from and after the passage of this act." The Senator from Ohio announced that if that was done it would lock the door and clinch it; and he, under what he calls perfecting the text, makes precisely the same motion that I did, to strike out the "1st day of January, A. D. 1879," but to insert "the 1st day of September, 1878." It seems to me that I was perfecting the text just as much as he was, and it is simply an effort to get the advantage of the first vote by calling it "perfecting the text." It is a motion to strike out and insert just as I had made the motion, only fixing a different date and if the motion that I made, to strike out "the 1st day of January, 1879," and to insert "from and after the passage of the act" is not precisely the same motion, differing only as to the date, that the Senator from Ohio has made, I cannot quite understand the case, not being very familiar with the rules. I desire to know whether the motion I made is amendable. If it is not, then I deny the right of the Senator from Ohio to make his motion. If it is, then of course he has a right to make it. I desire to ask the Chair now whether the motion I made can be amended, being an amendment to an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio does not move to amend the motion of the Senator from Kentucky, but moves to perfect the part that the Senator from Kentucky proposes to strike out.

Mr. THURMAN. That is it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And then the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky will be in order after the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is acted upon, whether it be adopted or not.

Mr. BECK. I do not see how he is perfecting the part I moved to strike out otherwise than as I am trying to perfect it, because his motion is to strike out "the 1st day of January, A. D. 1879," and insert a given day, and I moved to strike out "the 1st day of January, A. D. 1879," and insert a given day, and each is equally perfecting the text, as far as I am able to understand. They are both motions to strike out and insert; and unless he can move an amendment to my amendment he has no right to move another amendment, an independent amendment, while mine is pending. It seems to me that there can be no dispute on that point. For that reason I rose to ask the question, because his amendment, as he admits, locks the door, to use his own expression, as completely as the motion that I made locks the door. Therefore there is no use of disguising what the meaning is. The Senator from Ohio after four or five or six months of incubation over this bill in the Judiciary Committee, after it has passed the House by an overwhelming majority to take effect at once, after it has passed the Senate by an overwhelming majority to take effect at once, changes his tactics now, and wants to change the date of its taking effect to three months ahead. For what? To give people notice that it is coming. Did they not have notice by the passage of the bill in the Senate by an overwhelming majority? Did they not have notice by its passage in the House by a majority equally overwhelming? Has not every man that honestly desires to take the benefit of the bankrupt law had ample notice and been able to take it by this time? Will it not necessarily suspend all business and make all trade and commerce unsatisfactory until the day when it does take effect? Is the country in a condition to stand any more of that sort of thing?

This repeal is either a proper thing to do or an improper thing. If we are going to repeal this bankrupt law and it is a good thing for the country, it is a good thing to do it now. If it is not a good thing to do, then do not do it at all. Let the question be settled. Nothing disturbs business so much as uncertainty. I do not care if it is a change of the internal-revenue law, a change of the tariff, a change of a bankrupt law or a repeal of it, anything that produces uncertainty is of great detriment to all classes of men. To say that you will have that condition of things continued, to hold out inducements to men to put their property out of their hands and take the benefit of the bankrupt law between now and the 1st of September, is offering a premium to fraud. We had better not do this at all than to say that three or four months longer are given for such things to go on. If a man is honestly satisfied that he cannot get through, let him take the benefit of the law now. He has had all the opportunity to do it.

I say, then, that if the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is to be adopted, whether it be perfecting the text or whatever it may be, it is perfecting it exactly as I was perfecting it, by striking out one date and putting in another date. If the Senate wants to give that time, they will say so. If they desire to have the law repealed and the business of the country settled, and let it be understood from this time forward that the bankrupt bill is out of the way, they will vote down that amendment if it is in order, and I think it is not, but the Chair has decided that it is, and he knows better than I do.

Mr. THURMAN. My amendment was in order for the reason stated by the Chair, and which was stated at the time I offered it, and it was received in order. I moved to perfect the words which the Senator from Kentucky moved to strike out, and which I had a right to do before the question was put on striking out those words.

Mr. CONKLING. What was the motion of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. THURMAN. His was to strike out a clause in the bill and insert in lieu of it "from and after the passage of the act." I wish to change two words in the clause which he moved to strike out, and it comes under the general law that you may amend anything which is moved to be stricken out before the motion to strike out is put.

Mr. BECK. I should like to say to the Senator from New York, as he asked the question of the Senator from Ohio, that I moved to strike out "the 1st day of January, 1879;" the Senator from Ohio made precisely the same motion to strike it out word for word. I moved to insert "from and after the passage of the act" and he moved to insert "the 1st day of September, 1878."

Mr. CONKLING. I think I can satisfy the Senator from Kentucky that the ruling of the Chair must be right. Take the reverse; suppose the question should be taken on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky, and the date as it stands should be stricken out and his words inserted, namely, that the act shall take effect immediately; certainly it would not be in order after that for the Senator from Ohio to make his motion, and therefore if he can ever get the sense of the Senate upon it at all, it must be in the way he proposes. Now had the Senator from Kentucky moved to strike out the date and insert another future date, I could agree with all he says; but when he proposes to strike out all words which assign to the future the day when the act is to speak, and to put in words making it speak now, he will see at once, to use the expression both Senators use, that he would close the door forever, so that those of us who want to vote—if there are such, I do not—to fix a future day would never have an opportunity at all to vote on that day, but the whole question would be between the day as now proposed and an immediate day. The Senator from Ohio says "I want the question taken on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky, not as against the day now proposed, but against an earlier day which I want first to try." The Chair says that is right; he has a right to change what the Senator from Kentucky proposes to strike out altogether, before the vote of the Senate is taken. I cannot doubt that the ruling is right.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I am in favor of the absolute, immediate repeal of the bankrupt law. The debtor class, as well as the creditor class, of American citizens are in favor of repealing absolutely and immediately the bankrupt law. It is perfectly true, as the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] has said, that in 1873 the petitions which came from all parts of the country into the Senate and into the House of Representatives asked vociferously that the bankrupt law should be then repealed. The cry was almost unanimous on all sides. The clamor was so great that the President of the United States in his message sent to Congress at the opening of the session in December, 1873, asked Congress to respond to that sentiment, and said that there were many and most urgent reasons why the bankrupt law should be repealed; and I think on the very first or second day of the session, certainly early in the session, a bill was introduced for the purpose of repealing the law then. These people came to Congress and asked for bread, and Congress gave them a stone. They asked for the repeal of the law, and instead of repealing it Congress turned its ear to the voice of certain creditors, changed the law, and by its amendments, instead of striking out that which was most obnoxious to the people, actually made the law more hateful after the amendments than it was before.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him one moment?

Mr. WHYTE. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to say to him that every amendment made to the bankrupt law in the session of 1873–'74 was a concession to the debtor.

Mr. WHYTE. A concession to the rascally debtor but not to the honest one. It was a cunningly devised contrivance by which dishonest creditors and dishonest debtors could combine and form a conspiracy against honest creditors and honest debtors, by which men could pay thirty cents on the dollar when they were able to pay one hundred, and begin business anew with the seventy as a capital.

Mr. MERRIMON. I should be glad if my honorable friend from Maryland would point out the clause of the bankrupt law which tolerates such proceedings.

Mr. WHYTE. The settlement on 30 per cent.

Mr. MERRIMON. That is only in case the assets yield 30 per cent.

Mr. WHYTE. Only in case the assets returned pay 30 per cent.

Mr. MERRIMON. The amplest means are provided in case there is a fraudulent bankrupt of compelling him to return everything he has.

Mr. WHYTE. How many fraudulent bankrupts are compelled to return what they have hid away in the coffers of some creditor's pocket?

Mr. MERRIMON. Then it is because the courts will not do their duty.

Mr. WHYTE. Because the courts cannot find it.

Mr. MERRIMON. Because they will not find it.

Mr. WHYTE. The rogue knows where to hide his money to keep it for future use.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. WHYTE. Certainly.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Where will he find a remedy for that state of things when he gets the bankrupt act repealed?

Mr. WHYTE. I will find it in the State laws putting all men on an equality and allowing an honest man to divide his property fairly among all his creditors and not allow a few to combine together and for the payment of a certain sum to cut all the rest out.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Will not the Senator from Maryland admit that there are many States in this Union whose laws now permit the very preferences which the bankrupt act refuses?

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, and they are honest preferences. A man who is in trouble, a man who is in difficulty, who can be aided to-day to tide him over his financial embarrassments if he could protect the kind creditor who would loan him the money to go on with his business and pass the crisis of his trial—if that lender could be protected many an honest debtor could be enabled to pay all his debts dollar for dollar. But now, with this cloud hanging like the sword of Damocles over the head of a lender, that he may be deprived of security, that he may never get his money back, or be compelled to share with others, many an honest man is prevented from borrowing money and being enabled to carry on his business until he can pay off all his liabilities.

Mr. President, the people asked for the repeal of this law. They clamored for its repeal. They were answered merely by amendments, which have done them no good, and made the law more hateful in its character. Therefore, Mr. President, the debtor class have ceased to appeal to Congress. They found no friends to support and sustain them here. They have ceased to apply to us and ask us to repeal this law, and put every man upon an equality in his own State. Still we are asked through a few people yet, that this law may be repealed. The proposition to postpone the operation of the repeal comes from the enemies of repeal. No man who is in favor of an absolute repeal can want to delay the operation of it one moment beyond the approval by the President of the bill as it passes the two Houses of Congress. It is precisely the old route. When the act of 1843 was presented to Congress repealing the bankrupt law of 1841, the same proposition was made then. It was in February, 1843. The same proposition to postpone the operation of that law repealing the old bankrupt law until the 1st day of April was made by the enemies of repeal just as it is made to-day. The friends of repeal voted it down; and I hope the friends of the repeal will here to-day vote this proposition down.

Mr. President, if I saw the way clear, the pathway open to aid our friends from North Carolina after the appeal which they have made to us to give them more time that they may be saved from the operation of a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, if I could see that there was relief opening for them, I should be inclined to give them the time and vote for a day later than the day when this bill shall be approved for it to take effect; if there is no clause put in with regard to the time of its operation. But, Mr. President, they cannot be helped; they cannot be aided; the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States reversing the decision of their own State court and deciding that the exemption in their constitution is unconstitutional precludes them from obtaining any benefit under the act of Congress of 1873; because that act cannot make operative any State law which is so construed to be unconstitutional. The Chief-Justice of the United States at Richmond, in the case of In re Deckert, so decided in express terms. It is reported in 10 National Bankruptcy Register Reports, and is the very first case in the volume.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to ask my honorable friend if that was not on circuit, and whether there are not two other decisions directly the reverse of that?

Mr. WHYTE. Not directly the reverse. There are two old decisions, one by Mr. Justice Miller and one a decision in Georgia, but not directly the reverse. This is the construction placed upon the act of Congress of 1873, and is the latest decision, and emanating from the Chief-Justice of the United States, whose opinion I respect not only because of the source whence it comes, but because of the reasoning upon which the opinion itself is based. Now, see what he says on page 4:

> Congress has power to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States. (Constitution, article 1, section 8.) A bankrupt law, therefore, to be constitutional must be uniform. Whatever rules it prescribes for one it must for all. It must be uniform in its operations, not only within a State, but within and among all the States. If it provides that property exempt from execution shall be exempt from assignment in one State, it must in all. If it specially sets apart for the use of the bankrupt certain property, or certain amounts of property in one State, without regard to exemption laws, it must do the same in all. If it provides that certain kinds of property shall not be assets under the law in one place, it must make the same provision for every other place within which it is to have effect.

And then he goes on to declare, referring to Virginia, that inasmuch as a certain law is declared to be unconstitutional in the State Congress cannot by any act make that constitutional which is declared in the State to be unconstitutional. Congress has no such power, and therefore an exemption of that character in North Carolina being declared to be unconstitutional cannot be made operative and constitutional by the act of 1873, curious, most remarkable act that it is, and indeed it is worth reading so that the country may understand the character of this bankrupt legislation:

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it was the true intent and meaning of an act approved June 8, 1872, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' approved March 2, 1867," that the exemptions allowed the bankrupt by the said amendatory act should, and it is hereby enacted that they shall, be the amount allowed by the constitution and the laws of each State, respectively, as existing in the year 1871; and that such exemptions be valid against debts contracted before the adoption and passage of such State constitution and laws, as well as those contracted after the same, and against liens by judgment or decree of any State court, any decision of any such court rendered since the adoption and passage of such constitution and laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

So that Congress passed a law declaring that a law of a State construed by a State as unconstitutional shall be constitutional notwithstanding the construction of the highest court of the State! Chief-Justice Waite says that that law will not hold water.

Now, Mr. President, to delay this action is only to produce, as my friend from Kentucky says, uncertainty; it is only to make men, who might by a struggle pass through the dangers surrounding them of financial distress, halt and hesitate in the discharge of their duty, and while so halting and hesitating to plunge into the bankrupt court in the next few weeks to relieve themselves by an act of bankruptcy of all their past debts, when if they saw before them the path of duty clearly, if they had no such temptation as will thus be held out to them, they would march straight on to the discharge of their honest obligations and to the maintenance of their credit.

Mr. President, I ask the friends of repeal to listen to me a moment longer. I say that the true course for us to take, those who are in favor of the immediate repeal of this law, is to vote down all amendments of the Senate committee and adopt the amendment of the House of Representatives and make this bill a law to-day. Of course, according to parliamentary custom, we must vote first upon the amendments of the Senate committee, and we cannot, therefore, get at the question of concurrence with the House amendment until we have voted down these propositions; but, if we vote them down and adopt the amendment of the House, the bill will be as perfect, in my judgment, as it will be if you put these amendments of the Senate committee into it.

Now, let me show the friends of immediate repeal that such is the fact. I think the bill was good enough when it went from the Senate. I do not think that the House has improved it much; on the contrary I think whoever prepared the amendments of the House was rather hypercritical. I think that he relied too much upon language. He was not satisfied with substance, but wanted to ornate the bill with a little extra verbiage. The bill itself was ample; it repealed the act of 1867 and every other act that has been passed amendatory of or supplementary to it, and reserved in general words all that was necessary to save and protect parties who had already gone into bankruptcy, and to punish parties who had violated the bankrupt law. And all the House did was this: they proposed to repeal "Title 61 of the Revised Statutes" and an act entitled "An act to amend and supplement an act," &c., describing the act, "and all acts in amendment or supplementary thereto or in explanation thereof." And then came the proviso:

> Provided, however, That such repeal shall in no manner invalidate or affect any case in bankruptcy instituted and pending in any court prior to the day when this act shall take effect; but as to all such pending cases and all future proceedings therein—

This was our bill, to which they added—> and all penal actions or criminal proceedings arising thereunder—

Our bill continues—

> the acts hereby repealed shall continue, &c.

That is all we want. Why, look at what the framers of the act of 1843 said. It is not one inch broader; it is not in the smallest degree wider in its scope than the act we passed and sent to the House. I will read it:

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved on the 19th day of August, 1841, be, and the same hereby is, repealed: Provided, That this act shall not affect any case or proceeding in bankruptcy commenced before the passage of this act, or any pains, penalties, or forfeitures incurred under the said act; but every such proceeding may be continued to its final consummation in like manner as if this act had not been passed.

The House of Representatives covers that whole case and goes further because it reserves all the penal actions or criminal proceedings arising thereunder. We want no more, and I appeal to our friends who desire the repeal of this law and that it shall take effect immediately to vote down all the Senate committee amendments and to concur in the House amendment, and make this thing final to-day.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I hope that we shall pass the bill, voting down all amendments to make it take effect at a future day, and let it take effect on the day of its approval by the President. I do not urge this on my own judgment alone; I have in various ways, by letters, by telegrams, by conversation with the people in my own State, in cities and in the country, learned that there is a very general sentiment among those whom you may call men of property and those who are destitute of property, debtors and creditors, that this law should be repealed, and repealed now. Sir, can we doubt that the opinion of the intelligent business men of the country is in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt law? Think of it a moment. In January or early in February, 1876, the other House, by a vote nearly unanimous, passed and sent here a bill for the immediate repeal of the bankrupt act. It was referred by the Senate to the Committee on the Judiciary. It will be remembered that subsequently during the session there was a bill pending in the Senate to amend the bankrupt act in one particular, and a Senator moved to add to that a section repealing the law, as we had no report from the committee. The committee very properly said, "We are considering the House bill to repeal the law; do not do it by a single section like that, making no provision for pending cases;" and the friends of repeal desisted, and there was no vote on repeal in the Senate during that session. Now, I think the entire country understood that the other House had and that this body would when it came to a vote repeal the law. Has there been any manifestation of opinion by the country against the repeal?

That Congress dissolved; another House was elected; they during this session passed this bill to repeal the law and to take effect immediately. They had been home to their constituents; their action before was well known; it was a subject talked about in all business circles; and they came back after a new election, and by a vote of 205 against a small minority, if I remember aright, passed this bill to repeal the bankrupt law and to take effect immediately.

The Senate some weeks ago, I do not remember exactly how many, by a decided vote, only six voting against it of those who voted, passed a bill for its immediate and unconditional repeal. This went to the other House. They have passed that bill with some amendments, not on the subject of postponing the time when it is to take effect, but to make it more perfect as they thought. They passed it by a large vote. I therefore assume that the intelligent business men of the country, that all classes who are interested in the prosperity of business, are in favor of having this law repealed. My friend from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] puts in my hand the House bill to repeal the bankrupt law passed in 1876. It was passed by the House in February, 1876, by an overwhelming majority, and sent here. We hear no remonstrance against this. I assume, therefore, that it is the settled conviction of those interested in the business of the country that the law should be repealed; that it has proved a failure; that it has not been satisfactory to either creditors or debtors, and that it is now a hinderance to the restoration of confidence and the revival of business. The experience of business men is that under the bankrupt law the estates of insolvents pay little more than the fees of officers and the expenses of the proceedings.

I am satisfied that it is the conviction of the country that this law should be repealed. I am daily receiving telegrams and letters urging its unconditional repeal. I read one from H. B. Claflin & Co., merchants, of New York City, dated May 1. This is a firm which buys and sells largely. They say:

> All legitimate mercantile interests will be grateful if you will lend your assistance to repeal the bankrupt act. Our honest customers can't continue long to pay one hundred cents on the dollar while their neighbors pay nothing.

While this law stands dishonest debtors, as experience shows, fix their property so that they pay nothing. One of the petitions I presented here some months since, signed by a thousand business men and firms in New York, stated that the average dividends on insolvents' estates before the bankrupt law were about 33 per cent., and the average dividends under the bankrupt law amounted to only 11 per cent.

Now, what good reason is there why it should not be repealed at once? The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] says men should have notice that the law is to be repealed. Have they not had notice? Have there not been votes weeks ago by the House, and by the Senate by large majorities showing that it was to be repealed? Two years ago there was the same vote in the House; and if there was anything that men ought to do legitimately and honestly before the law was repealed they have had time to do it, and they have done it. I hold in my hand a petition signed by twenty-six firms. It is dated the 3d instant. I beg leave to read a few words from it. It is signed by Van Valkenburgh & Leavitt and others, of the city of New York. In the letter inclosing it they say it was drawn and signed that morning when they saw there was a disposition to postpone the day when the repealing act should take effect. The petition states:

> We respectfully urge upon you that if the bill to repeal the bankrupt law is to pass it should take effect immediately. The postponement as proposed, to December 31st, or even October 1st, will work irreparable injury to the business community. A repeal of the law to take effect months hence will enable persons so desiring to prepare themselves to take advantage of the act by dishonest disposition of their stock and preparation of their books to defraud creditors. Therefore, realizing as merchants the danger threatened by the proposed amendment delaying the effect of the repeal to some future time, we beg your earnest efforts in our behalf.

I have other communications from men in the country, written since the bill was referred to the committee this last time, urging that the bill that repeals the law take effect at once. I can conceive no good reason why the repealing act should not take effect at once. If it is wise to repeal it on the 1st of September, it is wise to repeal it now. This relieves everybody from apprehension and uncertainty, and prevents dishonest men from preparing to go into bankruptcy at a future day. Now, sir, all our people, the creditor class and debtor class, are interested and deeply interested in the restoration of confidence and the revival of business. This will give employment to labor. This bankrupt law while it remains in force will prevent the restoration of confidence and the revival of business. This seems to be the universal opinion of business men. The proposed immediate repeal of the law has been well known to the country for months; there have been no remonstrances against it; there have been no petitions that the date of the repeal should be fixed at a future day.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me one moment? As early as 1873, on the 16th day of December, Mr. Tremain, of New York, reported a bill with one section proposing a repeal and others providing long details. I moved then to substitute for the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh sections of the bill the following:

> SEC. 2. That all suits and proceedings now pending in the courts of the United States, wherein adjudication for bankruptcy has been made, shall be proceeded with and governed by the provisions of existing law, which are hereby continued in force only for the purpose of closing up suits and proceedings now pending: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act fees, commissions, and charges of the officers and agents of the court in bankrupt cases shall be reduced to one-half of the fees, commissions, and charges heretofore allowed.

The yeas and nays were called, and the House of Representatives on a call of the yeas and nays by a vote of 219 to 44, as early as December, 1873, voted to repeal the law.

Mr. KERNAN. And the repeal then was only prevented by a delusive hope that the law could be amended so as to make it better, and all my observation is that the present amended law is more unpopular with all classes than the old one was. This allows the debtor to propose a compromise, and if he can get a certain number in value and a certain number in amount of his creditors to accept it, the others are compelled to accept it. We hear complaints of this. There are claims manufactured with a view to force real creditors to compromise against their real interest and against their will.

I think with the Senator from Maryland that the bill as it passed the House protects all the rights that need to be protected as to winding up proceedings in bankruptcy commenced before the bill becomes a law, and that we should vote down all amendments making the law take effect at a future day. If we pass the bill as it came from the House it will become a law when signed by the President.

In my judgment the sooner the bankrupt law is repealed the better it will be for all honest business men; and I trust we will reject all amendments postponing the time when the law shall take effect to any future day, and pass the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. President, I did not intend to prolong this debate. I expected that by a concurrence almost unanimous, the Senate would agree to the proposition made by way of amendment in the report of the Committee on the Judiciary offered by my colleague, that it would be accepted, both by those who had originally favored the immediate and unconditional repeal of the bankrupt act and by those who had hoped for something better. When the proposition to postpone the operation of the repealing act to the 1st of January, 1879, was originally introduced, one of the influential reasons which operated upon my mind in its favor was, that inasmuch as in the intervening time there would be one month in which Congress would be in session from the 1st of next December, we should have the opportunity, if not the will, to endeavor, in the spirit of a wise statesmanship, to frame an acceptable substitute. Therefore, in agreeing to vote in favor of the repealing act taking effect before Congress can meet, I waive one of the considerations which seemed to me to be weightiest in favor of the longest time.

The reasons for postponing the taking effect of this repeal until the 1st of September are not as strong in my mind as would be reasons for its taking effect on the 1st of January, 1879, for the consideration of which I have already urged; but the reasons that remain why it should not take effect immediately and unconditionally, and why therefore the Senate should prefer to postpone the operation of the repeal until the 1st day of September, are still, in my judgment, not only weighty but conclusive.

I am sorry to disagree with gentlemen who express themselves on the opposite side of this opinion with so much confidence and zeal, because the earnestness of their manner furnishes a prima facie presumption that they are right; and yet I have not found in what they have urged any sufficient motives for their zeal, and have been at a loss to comprehend on what basis of understanding and judgment their warmth rests.

I have been under temptations, as some other Senators have been, to change my course in respect to this vote. I have no doubt I should please a large number of my most influential friends, personal and political, if I should unite with gentlemen, by reversing my vote, in supporting the immediate taking effect of this repealing law. Merchants and bankers—and I sympathize entirely with my colleague in the discovery—seem suddenly to have found a new thing under the sun; and that is, that it was not contraction, that it was not the resumption of specie payments, that it was not inflation, that it was not war and the destruction and loss of capital engendered by it, that it was not that course of ill-advised legislation described by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] the other day as the source of all our woes, which at present is destroying the property and burdening and weighing down all the energies of the country. It is the bankrupt act; that, and that alone. According to them, and the Senators from Kentucky and the Senator from Maryland, and the other Senators on this floor who are now urging and pressing this matter with so much vehemence, repeal the bankrupt act and we shall have not only a free but a prosperous and a happy nation.

I am pleased, Mr. President, to hear of these happy vaticinations of future good; but I am inclined, after all, to criticise the substance of the prediction, and learn something of the grounds on which it rests. If these gentlemen, by reason of their business associations or political positions, are in a situation to know more of human nature, of the springs of its action, and of the course of human events still hidden from the eyes of ordinary mortals than we who are not able to see as they do, and are thus gifted with some divine afflatus and inspiration to know the things which shall be and the causes which shall make them thus and not otherwise, then we must bow to that authority; but here in this body of deliberate debate we meet on the plane of common judgment and reason. Let us understand the ground on which these gentlemen make these prophecies.

Mr. President, in the first place, the very principle of all such legislation is vicious. I ask the attention of Senators to that which probably they have overlooked, that we are engaged by the repeal of this act in the work of retrospective legislation. We are passing a new rule for past things. We are setting up a principle for the adjudication of the conduct of men, which is now irreversible and irrevocable, but which at the time they were engaged in its performance did not exist. It is as if you were trying a man for a crime under a statute which made that an offense which when he committed it was not a guilty thing. You are making a new rule to upset and invalidate and reverse the prior transactions and contracts of private parties. You are passing such a law as that, if it were passed by a State jurisdiction, it would be treated by the Supreme Court of the United States as unconstitutional and void. It is a part of the interpretation of every contract that you incorporate into the contract the law which was in force when the contract was made; and if you subsequently, after the execution of the contract, when rights have been vested under it, change that law so as to change those rights, you take away from a man a right or a remedy, and in either way you violate the fundamental principle of natural and abstract justice.

It is only because Congress is not hampered by that principle, it is only because Congress is not limited in its power in that respect, that you have a right even to entertain the proposition of repealing this act in such a way as to deprive those who contracted in reference to it of the rights which they secured by their contracts when they were made. Everywhere, by every writer on jurisprudence, by every enlightened tribunal of justice, retrospective legislati n, even where it is upheld as not in violation of constitutional law, is denounced as unjust and contrary to the principles of natural right.

Mr. WHYTE. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MATTHEWS. With great pleasure.

Mr. WHYTE. Was not the passage of the bankrupt law itself retroactive legislation?

Mr. MATTHEWS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHYTE. Did it not operate upon past contracts?

Mr. MATTHEWS. It did.

Mr. WHYTE. What is the difficulty, then, of repealing the same law in the same particular?

Mr. MATTHEWS. There is no difficulty, if the majority of the votes so determine. I am only arguing that it is wrong, not that you have not the power to do it.

Mr. WHYTE. May I ask the Senator, then, was it wrong to pass the bankrupt law?

Mr. MATTHEWS. Wrong in the sense in which it deprived a man of right, yes.

But, Mr. President, there are other considerations. The gentleman who has just taken his seat argues in favor of this repeal on the ground that the bankrupt act itself is wrong in producing equality of the distribution of the assets of an insolvent debtor among his creditors. The gentleman shakes his head as if I misinterpreted him. The language he used in the debate which goes upon the record will vindicate what I say. He argued here at some length in favor of the propriety of permitting preferences. Preferences to whom? To lenders of money that came in to bolster an insolvent debtor, and in that way secure a lien upon his assets, and when the general grab comes, comes in to swoop them away from all the general creditors; a thing that has happened thousands upon thousands of times, and which will happen again the moment the bankrupt act is wiped off the statute-book. And there are laws in several of the States of this Union—in New York, I assume, in Maryland, in Rhode Island, I believe in Connecticut, though perhaps not so—whereby it is made lawful for a debtor to prefer any creditors that he sees fit.

It may be morally right in peculiar circumstances for an insolvent and failing debtor to prefer some of his creditors over others; but what an unassailable protection and refuge that is for fraud! Under the pretense of preferring one creditor to another, we know as a part of the judicial history of this country that the general practice was to make conveyances to people who pretended to be creditors but were falsely such, and as to whom you had no means of proving the want of a consideration.

Gentlemen argue as if the repeal of the bankrupt act, and its instantaneous repeal, would have the effect of either annihilating all the dishonest men in this country who owe money, or of converting them from their dishonesty and making honest men of them. Do gentlemen lay that flattering unction to their souls? Do they believe that under the operation and in the administration of State systems of insolvency there will be any less fraud, either in the number of its instances or in the magnitude of its operations than under the bankrupt act? Certainly there is no ground for any such belief.

Now, what is the burden of the cry which comes here day by day and hour by hour, by telegraph and letter, from wholesale dealers in large cities and bankers and lenders of money? That it is paralyzing business; it is stopping the motion of the wheels of industry; it is suspending every industrial enterprise; nobody will lend money to anybody. Why? Because the bankrupt act is to be continued in force until the 1st day of next September. Will any intelligent gentleman explain to me the connection between that cause and the assumed effect? How will it paralyze industry? How will it stop credit? Is credit between the merchant and his customer based on the idea that he will not, because he cannot, take the benefit of the bankrupt act? Then why has there been any credit; why has there been any industrial enterprise and energy during the whole period of the time since the bankrupt act has been in operation? This bankrupt law was passed in 1867. It has only been within the last two or three years that there has been any desire to have it repealed. A cry did come in 1873, but from whom? Not from the creditors, but from the debtors, and it was in their interest that amendments were made, in order that it might, by way of concession to them, make it easier for them to get through with the operations of the bankrupt law and get their discharges. But up to the panic of 1873 there was no complaint of a general nature and of a serious kind from the creditor class of the community. Why then should the continuance in effect of this law for a few months longer suddenly come to have such a specific and peculiar effect upon the business of the country? Will some gentleman condescend to explain? Will some gentleman enlighten us on that point? It is too much to ask of a Senator, but will some gentleman who measures cloth by the yard come forward and give us that explanation of the philosophy of human affairs which will enable us to understand how it is that a law which has been beneficial for ten years in its operation shall for three months have the effect described?

I had a letter this morning from a person in Indiana denouncing myself and those who like me were opposed to the immediate and unconditional repeal of this act, upon the ground that nobody wanted it to continue in force except thieves! That is the style of the argument! That is about the modicum of sense and reason which there is in this clamor.

I wish to call the specific and special attention of some Senators on this floor to another question. There are gentlemen here who entertain the belief, I have no doubt with great sincerity, that a monstrous national injustice has been perpetrated upon the great mass and body of the community by a certain course of national legislation, dating I do not know how far back, certainly as far back as 1875, I think some go as far back as 1869, when by a statute the faith of this Government was pledged to the payment of its national indebtedness in coin and the payment of its non-interest-bearing debt in coin, followed up by successive steps in legislation, which it is said have had the effect of bringing about such a contraction of the currency of the country as that all values, except the value of coin and greenbacks, have been depreciated to the extent of fifty cents on the dollar, and, on the other hand, gold and greenbacks have been appreciated, so that a hundred dollars to-day will buy as much of every other description of property as $200 would have done three years ago. The injustice which is complained of is that it operates with signal hardship upon the great mass of the debtors of the country; that they contracted obligations measured in the extent of their burden by a currency at that time the volume of which was large and ample, and that now by this action of the National Government, by this course of legislation, without any fault on their part, without any imprudence, without any improvidence, without any of this dishonesty which now seems to be charged by the wholesale against every man unfortunate enough to have more of debt than he has of property, the measure of his obligations has been changed to his disadvantage, by which the burden of his debt has been increased, by which the means of payment have been abstracted from him. These are the people from whom you propose to-day to take away one of the terms of their contract, which was, at the time it was made, that if perchance it should turn out by any of the casualties and misfortunes of business and of life that they should not be able to pay in full they should have the right to go into a bankrupt court and on surrender of all their assets for equal distribution among all their creditors they should go free and discharged.

Oh, sir, we have had eloquent appeals in behalf of the toiling masses, the horny-handed millions who work for their labor and for their life, who have been in this debate a victim of an oppressive policy on the part of the money power of the country! Where are their champions to-day? Where are the Senators from Kentucky? Where are the Senators from Indiana? Where is the Senator from Georgia? On whose side are they to-day? "O Consistency, thou art a jewel." And now, in the very middle of the crisis of their fate, when that in which they are to pay has been increased in value to the very last notch, when gold itself no longer bears a premium appreciable, and when property has been swept out of valuable existence, wages diminished, all active industry stopped, it is said, by this other cause of paralysis, you come in, and in the midst of this general bankruptcy and ruin, which you say has been the inevitable consequence and result of the legislation for which you and yours and your predecessors are responsible, you add the very last thing that they can bear to their sufferings by taking away that which remains when all other things are gone—the hope of recovery. Do the Senators who are so confident of the correctness of their judgments in this particular think upon reflection that they can meet "the sober second thought" of the enlightened judgment of the American people? They may be carried away, as thousands of others are in the large cities, by the appearance of a temporary interest to do the thing which ought not to be done; but when the great body of the people come to understand the principle and this application of it, I think, gentlemen, you will wish that you had been on the other side.

Senators seem to think that the great preponderance of votes in this body and the other branch of the National Legislature is strong proof of the correctness of the legislation; and they cite the overwhelming vote in this body, when only six votes were found recorded against the immediate and unconditional repeal of this act and the large corresponding vote in the House. Yet the Senator from Maryland undertook to denounce the act of 1873 in the most unmeasured and unconditional language as a contrivance of some kind which he characterized as bad as bad could be, when that passed this body by a vote of 43 to 11. If that approach to unanimity the other day is a sign of infallibility, how is it that the Senate of 1873 and 1874 was not as infallible?

Mr. RANSOM. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to make a suggestion for a second?

Mr. MATTHEWS. Certainly.

Mr. RANSOM. I have the Journal showing the recorded vote of the Senate upon the amendatory act of 1873—a vote of 43 to 11. I will not consume enough of the Senator's time to read the report of the committee of conference on the later act of 1874. The report of the committee of conference was agreed to unanimously by the Senate. It was signed by "GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, George G. Wright, A. G. THURMAN, managers on the part of the Senate," and "Lyman Tremain and BENJAMIN F. BUTLER, managers on the part of the House." But as that act met also the criticism of the Senator from Kentucky, it may not perhaps be out of the way for me to remind the Senator from Ohio that that same report of the committee of conference passed the House also unanimously.

Mr. BECK. Did the Senator from North Carolina call my attention to the point?

Mr. RANSOM. I called the attention of the Senator from Ohio to this fact.

Mr. BECK. I understood the Senator to say that he would remind the Senator from Kentucky of something.

Mr. RANSOM. Yes, sir; I understood the Senator from Kentucky to share in the criticism made by the Senator from Maryland upon the amendatory act of June, 1874, to the bankrupt act. Am I mistaken in that respect?

Mr. BECK. I have read from the RECORD of December 16, 1873.

Mr. RANSOM. The same act.

Mr. BECK. Where I introduced an amendment striking out all of the sections of the bill that continued the law and providing for its unconditional repeal except so far as to suits then pending. That amendment was carried by a vote of 219 to 44; the yeas and nays were called; and I voted for it. That is what I said.

Mr. RANSOM. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me another moment?

Mr. MATTHEWS. Certainly.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, that repeal bill as passed by the House then came to this body. The amendment, in substance, that is now a part of the act known as the amendment of 1874 was substituted in that bill for the repealing clause. It went back to the House; and to brighten the memory of the Senator, as the expression is, I read on page 1073 of the Journal that upon the motion to disagree to that amendment there were no yeas and nays called; and then on page 1199 I see that the conference committee's report, embodying the words and the letters of that amendment, was passed unanimously by the House without a call of the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. Was the Senator from Kentucky a member of the House then?

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from Kentucky has informed the Senate not thirty minutes ago that he was the author of the repeal bill, when a few pages afterward we find him recorded with the unanimous majority, if I may say that of the House, in favor of this unhappy amendment.

Mr. BECK. Does the Senator find that the yeas and nays were called in the House?

Mr. RANSOM. I do not.

Mr. BECK. The Senator will find that like all other conference reports it had to be taken as a whole and agreed to.

Mr. RANSOM. It was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. The report, like all other conference reports, contained all sorts of provisions and amendments with no opportunity for separate votes; and that is called the unanimous action of the House!

Mr. RANSOM. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will take time on this matter and give it a little reflection.

Mr. MATTHEWS. The Senator from Kentucky will hardly deny that he did not dissent to that action.

Mr. BECK. I will only say to the Senator from Ohio that the RECORD shows that upon my motion a bill introduced by Mr. Tremain to continue the law was repelled by the House of Representatives by the vote I have indicated. It was patched up in some way in the Senate, and as all conference reports have to be agreed to as a whole and there is no chance to object to them at all, but they must be voted on as a whole, I suppose it was allowed to pass, and that is all there is of it.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Then, while the Senator from Kentucky did not affirmatively assist in the passage of it, he graciously allowed it to be done.

There is one other topic alone on which I desire to say a few words. There was a very earnest appeal made to the Senate the other day on this question by both the Senators from North Carolina, based upon a peculiarity in the situation of the people of that State, growing out of a constitutional provision of the State and its effect as declared by a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. They begged that this bankrupt act might be allowed to continue in force long enough to enable a new one to be prepared which should save the rights of that people, because their rights were saved under the existing statute, and could only be by congressional action; and that is met by the citation by the Senator from Maryland of a decision of Chief-Justice Waite upon the circuit, in which it is held, as it is claimed, that no such relief can be expected or lawfully obtained by means of an act of Congress.

If I understand the situation it is this: the constitution of North Carolina makes certain exemptions in regard to homesteads and from execution applicable not only to debts contracted in the future after its passage but applicable to existing debts at the time of its adoption. In respect to those debts contracted before the adoption of the State constitution, the Supreme Court of the United States have held, and rightly I have no doubt, that that provision of the constitution of North Carolina was in contravention of the Federal Constitution which prohibited the passage by any State of a law impairing the obligation of a contract. It is argued that, inasmuch as a bankrupt act adopts the provisions of the State in respect to homesteads and exemptions, the present bankrupt law and any substitute for it, acting upon the same principle, would give to the citizens of North Carolina that relief which has been denied to them by that decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Chief-Justice Waite, in the decision on circuit cited, held that that could not be, for the reason that any act of Congress such as a bankrupt act, in adopting the State exemptions, only adopted those which were valid and lawful in the State, and that, inasmuch as these exemptions in North Carolina had been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, they could not be given any force to by being in an act of Congress.

Mr. President, the provision of the constitution in North Carolina was not void in North Carolina by reason of any law in North Carolina other than the operation of that principle of the Federal Constitution protecting the obligation of contracts. Now, then, when an act of Congress incorporates those exemptions into its own body, they cease to have force as the law of North Carolina and take effect as the law of the United States; and the constitutional prohibition against the impairment of the obligation of contracts does not apply to any legislation of Congress. So the conclusion does not follow from the premises. The act of Congress makes good everything which it incorporates into itself, and by reference to the rule of exemption in the constitution of North Carolina it makes that good, as against the Federal prohibition, which without that would not happen. So that, the opinion of the Chief-Justice in the case cited to the contrary notwithstanding, we have a right to argue that the passage of an act such as this and the continuance of this in force will, as long as it remains on the statute-book, furnish the reason to the Senators from North Carolina which they allege why they oppose its repeal.

Now, Mr. President, I have done. I do not propose to take any further part in this discussion. The matter is with Senators; they must act, each one for himself, upon such considerations of law and right and justice and public policy as seem to him best, taking counsel from his constituency or from the general public opinion of the land, as he may deem it his right to do. I stand for my own convictions. I shall vote as I have voted, because I believe it is for the good of the whole people of the country, because I believe it right, because I believe it is just. I impugn the motives of no man and no set of men, nor will I allow my own to be drawn into question. Let every man stand or fall according to his own course, as may be dictated by his own judgment.

In these matters I know that not one of us can fully have his own way, and that the result as a general thing of the comparison of our views is mutual concession, resulting in that generally which not one perhaps considers the best, but which the body believes to be the best attainable. In that view, Mr. President, while I would greatly prefer the taking effect of this act of repeal, which I perceive to be foreordained, postponed to a late date, as late as the 1st of January, 1879, so as to give the opportunity of which I spoke to substitute a better for the imperfect system now in force, nevertheless I believe it to be the wisest course under all the circumstances for those who think the repeal ought not to be immediate and instantaneous to unite upon the proposition of my colleague in amendment of the proposition of the Judiciary Committee, and I shall so vote.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Texas to give way. I do not think it is possible to finish this bill to-night.

Mr. MAXEY. I shall not take exceeding fifteen minutes.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to suggest an adjournment.

Mr. THURMAN. We can finish this bill to-night.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask permission to say a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to say this——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable. Is there objection to the Senator proceeding? ["Yes."] The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island, that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. BECK. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Allison,	Conkling,	Lamar,	Spencer,
Anthony,	Eustis,	Matthews,	Voorhees,

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish simply to say that I believe if we come to an understanding now that we shall finish this bill to-day, it can be finished in half an hour.

Several SENATORS. That is right.

Mr. THURMAN. And I hope the Senate will finish it to-day and get it out of the way.

Several SENATORS. And then adjourn to Monday.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I shall have no objection to adjourning to Monday.

Mr. SARGENT. Some of the rest of us may.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 29, noes 26.

Mr. THURMAN and Mr. WHYTE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allison,	Conkling,	Lamar,	Sargent,

Cameron of Pa.,	Garland,	McPherson,	Windom.
Chaffee,	Gordon,	Mitchell,
Christiancy,	Grover,	Oglesby,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I have taken no part in the discussion of this very important question heretofore and shall now occupy the attention of the Senate but a very few minutes, contenting myself with giving plainly the reasons which actuate me in voting against all amendments of every character and description and for the House bill as it came to us.

I was surprised, Mr. President, at a proposition, as I understood it, from the Senator from Ohio who has just closed, [Mr. MATTHEWS,] deduced from what has come to be a maxim: that the law in force at the time and place when and where a contract is entered into enters into and constitutes a part of that contract. From that, as I understood him, he deduced the conclusion that as the bankrupt law was in force it thereby entered into the contract and constituted a part of it, and hence the repeal of the bankrupt law would be the impairing of the obligation of a contract and thus unconstitutional. That I understood to be the necessary deduction from the premises which he laid down.

Mr. President, I have never understood statutes of limitation, statutes of repose, statutes of relief, remedial statutes of any character, as having anything whatever to do with the law of contract. An examination of the various plans which were presented to the convention that framed the Constitution of the United States will show, I think, that there is no provision in any one of them granting to Congress the power to pass uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy or laws on the subject of bankruptcy of any kind.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Will the Senator from Texas give way for a minute? I am satisfied now that the Senate is too tired to listen to this debate longer. Gentlemen are going off, first one and then another, and we might as well adjourn until to-morrow. I do not believe the Senator from Texas can be heard as he deserves to be in the Senate this evening, and I make the motion to adjourn if he will yield to it.

Mr. MAXEY. I understood the Senator from Ohio who has charge of the bill [Mr. THURMAN] to desire a vote this evening.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I just went to him and told him it was folly to insist on it. If the Senator from Texas will give way, I move an adjournment.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope that motion will not prevail.

Mr. MAXEY. I should prefer personally to finish to-morrow what I have to say; but I was endeavoring to follow the wishes of the Senator from Ohio who has charge of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Here are half a dozen Senators who want to pair off and go away, and others have already gone.

Mr. PADDOCK. I wish the Senator from Illinois would consent to let this matter be brought to a conclusion to-day. The condition of the country is such that there ought to be a determination of the question.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. If the Senator from Texas will allow me I will make the motion to adjourn.

Mr. MAXEY. I yield to let the Senate decide the question.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 9, 1878.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. S. DOMER, D. D., St. Paul's English Lutheran church, Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.

Mr. BACON. I desire to make a personal explanation. During the week in which action was taken on the river and harbor bill, I was absent from the House by leave asked and obtained; the RECORD makes an omission of that fact, and it would appear that I have been absent without leave.

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to a personal explanation. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read what I have marked in pencil in to-day's RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. Upon the statement the gentleman has just made the Chair will submit his motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to make the time two hours.

Mr. CONGER. I accept that amendment.

Mr. WOOD. If I am in order I move to amend by making the time one week. Until all the members of the committee are heard upon this question I shall resist any motion to limit debate.

Mr. BURCHARD. I am informed that the arrangement is that to-day the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] shall speak, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] intending to address the committee to-morrow. I hope there will be no motion that will cut off the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ROBBINS. I desire to say one word.

Mr. GARFIELD. My understanding was that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] should first have the floor and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.]

Mr. ROBBINS. I desire to say that I have never addressed this House for one hour. I have not been absent from one of its sessions nor missed a single vote. I think it would be ungracious to deny me this privilege.

Mr. WOOD. I withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is to limit the debate to two hours.

Mr. BURCHARD. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

The question was on ordering the main question.

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the previous question cut off the power of amendment from the bill?

The SPEAKER. Not from the bill, but from the motion.

The main question was ordered.

Mr. MILLS. I rise to a parliamentary question. I ask whether the previous question operates on the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] has withdrawn his amendment. It operates on the motion to limit the debate to two hours.

Mr WILSON. Would it be competent now to move to limit debate to two days?

The SPEAKER. It would not. The main question has been ordered.

Mr. CONGER. If it would be competent for me to do so I would accept an amendment making the time four hours.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent.

Several members objected.

Mr. WOOD. I object to any limitation.

Mr. FORT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion limiting debate to two hours is voted down, will it not be in order to amend the original motion by making it four hours?

Mr CONGER. That is pending now.

The SPEAKER. It is not. Unanimous consent was not given.

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to a point of order. When the gentleman from Michigan made his motion for two hours the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] moved to amend by making it four hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio did not make that motion. That may have been uttered in a colloquy between gentlemen. The original motion of the gentleman from Michigan was not as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It was for ten minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then there was a proposition to make the time two hours, which the gentleman from Michigan accepted. Pending that a motion was made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to make the time four hours.

The SPEAKER. Not till after the gentleman from Illinois had demanded the previous question.

Mr. THOMPSON. It was before that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks otherwise.

Mr. THOMPSON. I know it was not otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated a moment ago that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan was to limit the debate to two hours, while his motion was to limit it to ten minutes. The RECORD will show whether the gentleman's memory is correct or not.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, for the first time during my brief service here I have felt called upon to make a personal explanation this morning for the reason that the colloquy between the Speaker and myself yesterday placed me in a position that was unwarranted by the facts of the case, as I understood them then and as I understand them now. The Speaker, in response to my proposition that I rose to a question of order, when I said that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan was to limit debate to two hours, and that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] had offerd an amendment to make it four hours, replied that the original motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] was not as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The specification, or what the particular motion made by the gentleman from Michigan was, was the specification of the Chair himself. I said nothing about the original motion nor the first motion. I used neither word. I said that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan was to limit debate to two hours. The RECORD shows that, and it is a fact. The order of motions was simply this: on taking the floor, the gentleman from Michigan moved that debate be limited to ten minutes. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] moved to amend by making it two hours. Thereupon, and instantly, the gentleman from Michigan accepted the amendment, adopted it and made his own motion, and thereafter the motion to limit debate to ten minutes had no existence in point of fact nor in point of parliamentary law. The motion, therefore, of the gentleman from Michigan, then pending, was to limit debate to two hours, not to ten minutes.

In answer to the declaration that I made that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan was to limit debate to two hours, the answer of the Chair, saying that the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the original motion of the gentleman from Michigan was to limit debate to two hours, was not warranted either by what I said or by the facts of the case as they then existed. On that point I wish to be distinct and understood. The Chair had misapprehended, in the excitement and confusion of the moment, I doubt not, the position of the question, and overlooked the fact that although the original motion of the gentleman from Michigan was for ten minutes, yet when he accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, as he had a right to accept and did accept it, fixing the time at two hours, the motion of the gentleman from Michigan was then to limit debate to two hours, and not to ten minutes. I then stated that that was his motion. It was his motion, and it was upon that motion, and that motion alone, that the vote was subsequently taken. The vote could have been taken upon no other motion, because there was subsisting no other motion made by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] Therefore the statement I made was not only accurate as to fact but it was accurate according to law. The motion of the gentleman from Michigan was to limit debate to two hours, he having accepted the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

I stated further, and my point of order was directed to that, that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] had made a further motion that debate be limited to four hours. The Speaker answered me that the gentleman from Ohio had not made that motion; that he may have said so in colloquy with other gentlemen. And subsequently, when I further called the attention of the Chair to the matter, the Chair said to me and to the House that if the gentleman from Ohio had made that motion it was after the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] had called the previous question. The Chair, however, then said to me that the RECORD would show it. The RECORD does not show it.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD as published this morning does show it.

Mr. THOMPSON. This RECORD?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not so understand it.

The SPEAKER. Then you do not read it.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have had it read by the Clerk. The RECORD does not show that the gentleman from Ohio made the motion at all to limit debate to four hours.

The SPEAKER. It shows that immediately upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to limit debate to two hours being accepted by the gentleman from Michigan the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] demanded the previous question; that there was immediately a second of the previous question, and that the further proceeding of ordering the main question was delayed by interlocutory suggestions.

Mr. THOMPSON. The RECORD, in order either to carry out the views of the Chair or the views of those who objected to the statement of the Chair, should have shown that the motion if made was made after the demand for the previous question. The gentleman from Ohio did make a motion to extend the time for debate for four hours; there can be no question about that. No one denies it. But the RECORD does not show it; the RECORD does not show that the gentleman from Ohio at any time or at any point of the proceeding said "four hours" or thought "four hours."

The truth of it is merely this: in the excitement and confusion which was then prevailing I doubt not the Speaker did not hear the motion; I did. I doubt not the gentleman who was at the time reporting the proceedings did not hear the motion. I believe that he heard the gentleman from Ohio making some remarks, but it was probably at the very moment when the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] was also speaking; and probably my colleague from Philadelphia [Mr. O'NEILL] was also trying to speak.

But the gentleman from Ohio, on the withdrawal of the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] to extend the time for general debate to one week, moved or suggested to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to make it four hours. The gentleman from Michigan neither accepted that suggestion nor refused to accept it.

And thereupon in a distinct tone, heard by many in this Hall, the gentleman from Ohio made the formal motion that the time for general debate be extended to four hours. And then, and not until then, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] demanded the previous question.

Mr. BURCHARD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. THOMPSON. This is a matter of probably little importance, but a matter in which I desire to be right. Without objecting to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] making his statement, I will ask that the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] whom I heard make the motion, be permitted to make his statement as when he did make it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not conceive this to be a matter of any special importance. It is true that I made the suggestion to limit debate to two hours, because I supposed that, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] were to speak, two hours would be enough. I afterward heard the statement by somebody here that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] were to speak yesterday; and therefore my motion to limit debate to two hours, or rather my suggestion which was accepted by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] would cut off the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I then rose saying that I had understood that two hours would cover the time desired by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] but that I had not intended to cut off the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which would be the result probably if the time was limited to two hours to be occupied by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] and the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. ROBBINS.] I then turned to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] and suggested that he make the time four hours.

While I was doing that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] came down in front and addressed the Chair. I turned and did move formally that the time for general debate be made four hours. But at that moment the gentleman from North Carolina was talking, and the Chair did not recognize me, and I do not think he was bound to do so, for he was being addressed by some one nearer to him than I.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] was entitled to be recognized of course.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am not complaining; I am simply stating the fact. The reporters, when two members were talking at the same moment, doubtless took down the remarks of the one nearest to them, and in that way what I said does not appear in the RECORD. I do not blame the reporters; they took the remarks of the one nearest them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the motion and the RECORD sustains the position taken by the Chair yesterday.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am not complaining; I state the fact that I did formally address the Chair.

The SPEAKER. There were six or seven gentlemen addressing the Chair; but the Chair was bound to recognize the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. GARFIELD. And then the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] made the motion for the previous question.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I remember distinctly what occurred. The motion was made to limit the debate to ten minutes; then, at the instance of several gentlemen, the gentleman from Michigan modified the motion so as to fix two hours as the limit. There was considerable parleying; I was in it; I tried to make a motion myself; I was beside my colleague, [Mr. THOMPSON;] and the Chair, after endeavoring to restore order, finally put the question on the call for the previous question upon the motion to fix two hours. When that was put or immediately upon the result being ascertained, before it was announced possibly, the suggestion was made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that the debate be limited to four hours. Then and not until the result was announced or about to be announced upon the call for the previous question, was the suggestion made for four hours. Now I submit, in fairness to the Chair, that the Chair is entirely correct in this matter; for I was standing there and was a part of the proceeding myself. [Cries of "Regular order."]

Mr. THOMPSON. I have said that I did not believe the Chair heard the motion.

The SPEAKER. After the statement of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] who does not pretend to say that he was recognized to make the motion, and after the very honorable statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the left, [Mr. WHITE,] the Chair thinks it not obligatory on him to make any reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. THOMPSON.]

Mr. THOMPSON. I said distinctly that I did not believe the Chair or the reporter heard the motion. But the statement of my colleague [Mr. WHITE] puts the gentleman from Ohio in the absurd position of making an amendment to a proposition while the previous question was operating.

Mr. BURCHARD. I desire to say that immediately after the proceedings which have been referred to I asked the reporters to read to me their notes; and there has been no change; the reporters had taken down the proceedings identically as they are reported in the RECORD.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is no doubt about that. But the RECORD does not report all of the proceedings.

Mr. BURCHARD. I wished to ascertain to what the demand for the previous question applied; and standing immediately by the side of the gentleman from Ohio and not understanding that he had formally made a motion for four hours, and the Chair stating that the question was upon the motion to limit debate to two hours, I demanded the previous question on that.

The SPEAKER. That is just as the Chair recollects the matter. The Chair is generally calm; and when six or seven gentlemen are trying to address the Chair at once, he finds that he has to discriminate between those who with propriety should be recognized, and those who thrust themselves in improperly.

ENFORCEMENT OF EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. GOODE. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Education and Labor for consideration at this time a joint resolution which I think will take but a few moments.

The Clerk read the report of the committee, as follows:

The Committee on Education and Labor, to whom were referred sundry memorials of mechanics and laborers, citizens of the United States, praying for the enforcement of the eight-hour law, have had the same under consideration, and recommend the adoption of the following joint resolution:

Joint resolution to provide for the enforcement of the eight-hour law.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That according to the true intent and meaning of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1868, entitled "An act constituting eight hours a legal day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States," eight hours constitute a day's work for all such laborers, workmen, and mechanics; and while said act remains upon the statute-book no reduction shall be made in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics, on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution? [A pause.] The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) was read a first and second time, and the question was on ordering it to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. REAGAN. If this interferes with the morning hour, I must object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Texas is too late with his objection. This, however, will not interfere with the morning hour, which will come up immediately after this is disposed of.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask consent of my friend from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] to add at the end of this joint resolution the following, which has been agreed upon by the workingmen and their delegates:

And all heads of Departments, officers and agents of the Government, are hereby directed to enforce said law as long as the same is unrepealed.

I offer this at the request of a delegation of the workingmen.

Mr. GOODE. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOODE. I now demand the previous question upon the joint resolution as amended.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, which was upon ordering the joint resolution, as amended, to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] why he does not make this resolution apply to all laborers—not merely those who labor for the Government?

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Speaker, we have no control over any laborers except those employed by the Government, and I will say to my friend that this resolution has been reported by the Committee on Education and Labor in response to memorials and petitions coming from a large number of laborers, mechanics, and workingmen employed throughout the United States.

On the 25th of June, 1868, Congress passed an act providing "that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workingmen, and mechanics now employed or who may hereafter be employed by the Government of the United States." And after that the President in proclamation directed the heads of Departments to execute and enforce this law. And again, in May, 1872, the Congress interpreted and construed the law by requiring the proper officers of the Government to settle with these employés without making any reduction whatever in their pay on account of reduction of the hours of labor. And yet, notwithstanding this law, notwithstanding this proclamation, notwithstanding this legislative interpretation contained in this joint resolution, the heads of Departments and officers of the Government have persisted in requiring these men to work ten hours instead of eight, and if they do not work ten hours to submit to the corresponding reduction in their pay.

Mr. BUCKNER. Is it not for the courts to interpret the law?

Mr. EDEN. Ought not all laborers to be treated alike? Why should you not pass a law for the benefit of all laborers and workingmen and mechanics, and not confine it exclusively to the favorites who are employed in the Government service?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is in control of the floor and will say to whom he yields.

Mr. GOODE. I have promised to yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. BEEBE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia what good he expects to inure from the passage of a joint resolution directing the enforcement of a law if we already have a law upon the statute-book?

Mr. GOODE. In answer to that interrogatory I will say that we have reason to believe if an interpretation is put upon the law in this form by the Congress of the United States it will be respected by the heads of all the Departments.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me say one word more on that proposition. I undertake to say, and I have given some examination to this subject—I undertake to say that no gentleman upon this floor, however much we may differ as to the policy and wisdom of the law originally, can read the debates which occurred in Congress at the time this law was passed and entertain for a moment a doubt as to what Congress intended. It was maintained by Senators Sherman and Fessenden, on the one side, there should be a corresponding reduction of pay when there was a reduction of the hours of labor; but Senator Morton, and Senator Hendricks, and Senator Buckalew, and a large number of gentlemen on the other side, combated this idea and based their advocacy of the law upon the broad and distinct proposition that in all mechanical employments men can perform as much work in eight hours as they can in ten; that the rest, the intellectual vigor, and the strength imparted to the operators would enable them to perform as much work in eight hours as in ten; that if the Government gets as much work in eight hours as in ten, it should pay the same price; that in this day of material development the necessities of mankind, when the aggregate of steam-power is equal to twenty-five millions of horses throughout the world, the necessities of mankind do not require now that men shall work as much as they were required to work formerly when the ten-hour law was established by the Government. Such was the view of Congress when the law was enacted. The workingmen understand their rights, and they are here by memorial and petition to assert and maintain them. They ask nothing more than the law guarantees to them. We are bound by every consideration of justice either to repeal the law entirely or require it to be observed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether his attention has been called to the recent decision made by the Supreme Court of the United States upon what is known as "the eight-hour law?"

Mr. GOODE. Yes, sir; we have examined that. That decision does not control the case. That was the case of the United States against Martin. The Supreme Court decided against Martin because he had referred his claim to the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury for pay accruing between June, 1868, and May, 1869, and had accepted $205, covering the whole arrearages of pay he claimed, and given his receipt in full, and the Supreme Court decided that was a bar to any further claim on his part.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. GOODE. I yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word just now, and that is this: I congratulate not only the workingmen but the committee on reporting back my bill here. The original law was presented to this House by the gentleman from Massachusetts who is in my eye. He gave an interpretation to it at the time. We either ought to repeal that law or enforce it. I am told by the Departments that if Congress will give an interpretation to the law they will follow it. There has been much trouble and a great deal of care and anxiety among the laboring-men about the interpretation of the law. There has been a committee here for ten weeks asking Congress to do something in this regard.

I am glad at last to have an opportunity of vindicating the original intention of the law.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Is it the business of Congress to interpret the law?

Mr. COX, of New York. The business of Congress is to enforce laws which Departments are not so very willing to enforce. One-fifth of the hours of labor being cut off will add to the employment of one-fifth more of the workingmen of this country. And there never was a time when Congress could better do a graceful and beneficent act to the workingman than right now, for reasons I will not at this time go into.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman allow me a word?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to make a suggestion.

Mr. COX, of New York. I occupy the floor by the courtesy of the gentleman from Virginia. [Mr. GOODE,] and yield it back to him.

Mr. GOODE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask for a moment the ear of the House in this matter. I voted for this law when it was before Congress and it was voted upon as I understand it upon this theory: the question was agitated in the country whether eight hours were not as long as men could work tending machinery and keep health and spirit and strength to do the daily task. That experiment had not been tried and it was necessary that it should be tried. It could not be tried by any manufacturer because his rivals working ten hours and forcing the labor would undersell him. The Government having a given class of work in its navy-yards and in its arsenals, having exact accounts kept of all the work that had been done under the ten-hour system, could by working its force eight hours and keeping a like account find whether it was practicable within any near percentage for a man to do by machinery in eight hours that which he had done in ten. And you will find some remarks of mine somewhere upon that question and the point that the experiment should be tried.

Now, this House and this Congress have never asked, so far as I know, for any report upon the results of that experiment. I wish the Committee on Education and Labor would do so because I believe it will turn out that upon careful investigation within a near percentage the same amount of work has been done subsequently to the passage of that law in eight hours that was previously done in ten hours.

Mr. DUNNELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNNELL. Am I to understand, then, that this law has been substantially complied with so that a report could be furnished?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNNELL. Then why this resolution?

Mr. BUTLER. I will tell you why. It is complied with in some establishments and it is not in others.

Mr. COX, of New York. That is it precisely.

Mr. BUTLER. It was attempted to be strangled in its birth by the opinion of an Attorney-General, and then the President overrode the opinion of that Attorney-General and ordered that the system should be tried, and it has been tried in the arsenals and in the armories. But owing to the great economy forced upon the Navy I understand the Secretary of the Navy has declared that all the navy-yards must work ten hours, and I do not know how far the report will show the difference between eight hours' work and ten hours' work in the Navy.

Now, then, I think that the law should still remain on the statute-book, and being on the statute-book like every other law, there is no man on earth who ought to disobey it. The difficulty with it is like what it is with almost all the rest of your laws—you have not any penalty attached to it. I would like to put a penalty upon any man who undertakes to set up his will against the will of the legislative power and say he will or he will not execute the law according as his own good judgment dictates. We have got too much of that in this country—a great deal too much—and I will not stop longer to speak of that matter at this time; but I hope this resolution will pass. And make it imperative; provide fine and imprisonment for anybody who will not carry it out. Let us have some powder in our resolution and balls with it so that it will be enforced.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. GOODE. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BANKS. The reason why this resolution does not relate to or provide for all the working people of the country as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois is that we have not jurisdiction over that labor. But if the eight-hour law which the resolution is intended to enforce shall succeed as other efforts of this kind have succeeded it will in the end extend its beneficent and happy influence to labor of every class in every part of the country. In 1840 the President of the United States without any law at all issued an order upon his own authority that the labor in the navy-yards of the United States and their workshops should be limited to ten hours. That was carried out, and the influence of that order was such that in nearly all of the labor establishments of this country wherever it can be applied from the nature of the business the ten hours' system of labor has been adopted, and is applied to men, women, and children. It has been applied to all the corporations and manufacturing and mechanical establishments of Massachusetts, and in most of the other States. No one proposes the re-establishment of the old system of twelve, fourteen hours a day, and even sixteen hours a day, as men, women, and children were worked in England some years since. Now, if the existing eight-hour law when thoroughly tested shall be found to be advantageous to the industries of the Government and the hands engaged therein, the example of the Government will be accepted as it ought to be and applied to the labor of the country generally, wherever it is applicable.

I desire to submit another consideration, Mr. Speaker, of greater importance. We demand that the laboring-men of the country shall obey the laws. A great deal has been said on account of their having in some places some months since resisted the laws. We are setting a most scandalous and criminal example of disregarding the laws of the United States. We allow the agents of the Government to force upon laborers that which the law absolutely and positively forbids. The agents of the Government do not admit it. They say that the law does not require them to pay a mechanic or laborer for a day's labor unless he works ten hours, which they assume without authority and in defiance of law to be a day's work. This resolution will check this practical injustice.

Now let me say that this law makes very little change in regard to the laborers, and entails no loss upon the Government. The average labor in the navy-yards of the country for a year is not over eight hours and a half a day, nor has it been at any time since they were established. They never work after sundown and in winter the days are short in almost all the States where the navy-yards are situated, and the result is that eight hours and a half make the average of a day's work. It was not intended when the eight-hour law was enacted that the reduction in the hours of labor should affect the rate of wages. The rate of wages was fixed by another law, a different law. That law has never been repealed.

It still remains, or ought to remain, upon the statute-book. If it has been dropped out in the revision of the statutes, it was by accident, not by authority. The law which was made by Congress and approved by the President requires that the wages at the navy-yards shall be regulated and established from time to time by the statute relating to the subject of wages alone.

The law of 1869 relates to nothing but the number of hours of labor that shall constitute a legal day's work. The decision of the Supreme Court turned upon other questions, whether the Government could make a contract or not with the persons it employed. It does not affect this question, as the gentleman from Virginia has so well said.

The Government ought to enforce this law. It ought to call for reports from all its Departments as to the effect it has had upon its interests. The law ought either to be enforced or repealed. I shall vote with great satisfaction for the report of the Committee on Education and Labor and the passage of the joint resolution, and I am gratified and I will say grateful to the gentlemen of that committee for having presented it at this time.

Mr. GOODE. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. PHILLIPS.]

Mr. PHILLIPS. In 1868, Congress passed a law which fixed eight hours as a day's labor in Government yards, workshops, and on all Government works. This of course could not fix the hours of labor under private contracts for the laborers of the country, for Congress has no control of that, but it was the example set by the Government in fixing eight hours as a day's labor in all places where it had control. Many persons well qualified to speak declare eight hours' labor as the greatest amount that can be profitably or that ought to be exacted for the health of workmen. In the same law there was a provision that no reduction should be made in the wages of the men on account of the reduction of one-fifth of the hours of labor exacted. The design was not to reduce his condition, but to improve it. Immediately on the passage of the law in the western part of the country a reduction was made by many of the Government officials in charge of labor to the extent of one-fifth of the men's wages, and they were notified that if they would work ten hours instead of eight they would get their old wages, but if they did not their wages would be reduced one-fifth; and they were so reduced, which virtually defeated the spirit and purpose of the law, and I think its plain letter. A bill was passed some time later to pay them for a portion of the amount which had been withheld from them, and it was paid to a portion of them. There is to-day a bill pending in this House introduced by me to pay these men for the money so unjustly and I think illegally withheld from them. That bill was favorably reported in the Forty-fourth Congress, and only failed to become a law for want of time. That bill is again pending in this House and will, I believe, be reported to the House. I have had occasion to correspond with many persons employed on Government works in reference to the persistent evasion of the law, and I know that to-day the law is continually set aside. Some functionaries seem to think they are to be the judges as to what laws they shall execute and what laws they will put their foot through. I do not know why it was that this provision was dropped in the revision of the statutes, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has stated. It is not in the Revised Statutes but the record shows that it never was repealed, and, as has been stated, it is in force; but it is evident that this resolution is in accordance with the law, and for such a declaration there seems unhappily to be a need. The law fixes eight hours a day as the hours of labor on Government works and I hope the resolution will pass, and that when the bill comes before the House to pay the men what is due them for the amounts unjustly deducted from them I hope the House will pass it also and pass it very promptly. I am as anxious as any gentleman in this House for a just economy, but do not believe in saving money by depriving the laborer of what is justly due him, or of stripping the hard-working man of the little time he has for self-improvement and comfort.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to have inserted in my remarks the law of May 18, 1872, to which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] refers. At that time Congress construed the law and made an arrangement by which the men should be paid for their labor. I refer to the Revised Statutes, page 732.

The law is as follows:

> Allowance for reduction of wages under the eight-hour law:
> Of such sum as may be required in the settlement of all accounts for the services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government, between 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work for all such laborers, workmen, and mechanics, and the 19th day of May, 1869, the date of the proclamation of the President concerning such pay, to settle and pay for the same without reduction on account of reduction of hours of labor by said act, when it shall be made to appear that such was the sole cause of the reduction of wages. (See § 3738.)

Mr. BANKS. I beg one minute's time. As I presented this law originally I want to state the reason on which it was presented, and which to some extent at least influenced the Congress by which it was approved and passed. It was based upon the philosophical and scientific fact that upon the most careful and thorough investigation of the amount of labor that can be endured by man or beast, upon the result of which investigation has been rated what is called "horse-power," it was discovered that a sound and strong horse could not be required to perform labor for more than eight hours without diminishing his power, and that the force developed in less than that period of time would be less than his full power. It is on the basis of such experiments, made by the ablest and most careful scientists and engineers, such men as James Watts and other men of different countries, that the forces of all motive power, whether of water or steam, have been and are still calculated. It is a complete vindication of the theory of the present enlightened law of labor; and so far as we have reports of its operation and results, of its practical value also, that as much value can be obtained from laborers, making a proper estimate of incidental expenses attending their employment, in eight hours as in ten. Another fact of some interest in this connection, and worthy our consideration: that enlightened and humane governments in other countries have prohibited by law the working of certain classes of animals more than eight hours in one day. May we not well and wisely apply such a well and thoroughly tested philosophical principle, which has been accepted as the soundest test of animal force and strength, and asserted for the protection of animals in other countries, to the intelligent men employed by the Government of the United States?

Mr. GOODE. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] who is a member of the committee, and then I shall ask for a vote

Mr. SOUTHARD. I desire to state to the House briefly the object of this resolution. The Committee on Education and Labor was memorialized to give an interpretation to this law. Some years ago it was placed upon the statute-book, and has been treated as a dead-letter by the officers of the Government. The laboring-men in certain Departments in this District and elsewhere memorialized the Committee on Education and Labor on this subject. This resolution simply gives interpretation to that law, and is supplementary in that sense to the original act. The question of fixing the hours of labor at eight hours was settled by the original statute, and the question now for the House to determine is, shall the officers of the Government obey the law that was put upon the statute-book. This joint resolution gives interpretation to that statute, about which it seems to me there can be no possible doubt. The law itself fixes eight hours as a day of labor. The Committee on Education and Labor deem it wise and proper to present this resolution at this time to the House giving this interpretation, and as supplementary to the original act.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon seconding the previous question.

The question was taken; and the previous question was seconded.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would ask if there is any ambiguity in the existing law?

Mr. COX, of New York. It is not enforced.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will they obey this joint resolution any more than the original law?

Mr. COX, of New York. The Secretary of the Navy says he will carry out the law if Congress will construe it, interpret it.

Mr. EDEN. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] if he thinks it would be right and proper to pay persons in the employ of the Government in the same cities and at the same kind of labor the same wages for eight hours that private establishments pay for ten hours?

Mr. SOUTHARD. That was a question that was settled here years ago when the statute was passed. The question now is what does that law mean.

Mr. EDEN. I understand that it was not settled by the law at all.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Undoubtedly it has been settled according to the interpretation given by the Committee on Education and Labor. And if my friend from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] will read the statute he will see that it does settle the question. Whether it is expedient or proper now, or not, is not the question under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the main question.

Mr. HAYES. I desire to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. That is not now in order.

Mr. HAYES. I ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] to yield to me.

Many MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. GOODE. I cannot yield.

The main question was then ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. GOODE. I call the previous question on the passage of this joint resolution.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is not now in order.

The previous question was then seconded; upon a division—ayes 120, noes 27.

The main question was then ordered, and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. GOODE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. I now call the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York. I ask unanimous consent——[cries of "Regular order!" "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman to ask unanimous consent; there is objection.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York. I do not think there is objection.

The SPEAKER. There is objection, and the gentleman from Texas is on his feet demanding the regular order. The morning hour now begins at four minutes past twelve o'clock, and the House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3547) to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discrimination by common carriers. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is entitled to the floor for five minutes remaining of his hour.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not propose to continue the discussion upon this bill, but I desire to submit to the House a proposition which will take this bill out of the morning hour and out of the way of other committees. If it will be agreeable to the House I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be taken up after the reading of the Journal on Saturday next and discussed and amendments offered until three o'clock, with the understanding that the previous question shall be called upon the bill at three o'clock on Saturday. In that way we can save the morning hour of to-day and the bill can be disposed of on Saturday. I submit this proposition because I desire, as do the other members of the Committee on Commerce, to get this bill out of the way of other committees who have reports to make.

The SPEAKER. This bill now occupies the morning hour. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] asks that immediately after the reading of the Journal on Saturday next this bill be taken up for consideration, with the understanding that the previous question shall be called at three o'clock.

Mr. REAGAN. It is suggested to me that I make it four o'clock, and I do so.

The SPEAKER. With the understanding that at four o'clock the previous question be called.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Not later than four o'clock.

Mr. REAGAN. Not later than four o'clock.

Mr. WOOD. The proposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] assumes that the whole of Saturday will be consumed in the consideration of this bill. It has already occupied two morning hours.

Mr. REAGAN. Only one morning hour has been taken in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WOOD. Two morning hours have been occupied upon this bill. I think it would be better to have a night session for the consideration of this bill. It is likely that this bill will elicit a vast deal of discussion and opposition.

Mr. REAGAN. This is a very important bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill is a bill of vast importance, and the Chair does not think that it is probable members could be got to attend a night session for the considerationof this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. This bill is of such a character that I feel constrained to insist upon its being considered at a day session. If Saturday is not allowed for that purpose, I must insist upon the bill continuing to occupy the morning hour.

Mr. CARLISLE. This is a very important bill, and I think a very extraordinary one. In my opinion it should be considered in Committee of the Whole, where it can be subject to amendment and discussion under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WOOD. That would be better.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] suggests that this bill be considered in Committee of the Whole on Saturday next.

Mr. REAGAN. That would be equivalent to the defeat of the bill. I cannot consent to anything that will aid in the defeat of the bill at this session. I submitted the proposition to the House to consider this bill on Saturday next immediately after the reading of the Journal, because I desire to get it out of the way of other committees that have reports to make in the morning hour. If it is the pleasure of the House not to give Saturday for its consideration then I must insist upon continuing it in the morning hour.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I object to making this bill a special order for Saturday.

Mr. REAGAN. As there is objection to this arrangement which seeks to facilitate the business of other committees we must proceed with the consideration of this bill in the morning hour.

Mr. PAGE. Do I understand that there is objection to making this bill a special order?

Mr. REAGAN. I yield for a few moments to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who wishes to make an arrangement in regard to the "life-saving bill" which was set as a special order for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York for that purpose after the morning hour. It is not allowable for the morning hour to be consumed in that way.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HEWITT,] I understand, withdraws his objection. I therefore submit the proposition that the House take up this bill immediately after the reading of the Journal on next Saturday, with the understanding that the previous question shall be called not later than half past three o'clock.

Mr. THOMPSON. I object.

Mr. EDEN. Is it in order to make a motion that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole? If it is, I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman has not the floor for that purpose. The Chair is first bound to recognize the gentleman from Texas in charge of the bill, so that he may test the sense of the House on his proposition.

Mr. THOMPSON. At the request of gentlemen around me I withdraw my objection; I will not stand in the way of the arrangement proposed; but I ask the gentleman from Texas to name four o'clock as the hour for calling the previous question, instead of half past three.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again submit the question. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that this bill be taken out of the morning hour and considered immediately after the reading of the Journal on Saturday next, with the understanding that at half past three o'clock——

Mr. THOMPSON. Not before.

The SPEAKER. Not before half past three o'clock he will demand the previous question on the bill and such amendments as may be pending. Is there objection to this arrangement?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Does that cut off amendments?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Texas is willing to have as many amendments pending as the rules will allow. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Yes, sir; I object.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well; I see that gentlemen cannot be satisfied. I propose to have an understanding that amendments may be prepared and offered during the general debate, and that the previous question when called shall operate on the bill and all amendments.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If the gentleman will make a proposition to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole——

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I wish to understand the proposition of the gentleman from Texas. Is it to consider this bill immediately after the reading of the Journal on Saturday or immediately after the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. After the reading of the Journal.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I object, unless the gentleman puts it after the morning hour.

Mr. REAGAN. That I shall not do. If gentlemen desire to keep this bill in the morning hour, it may stay there till they get sick of it.

Mr. BEEBE. Is it in order now to move to lay the bill on the table in order to test the sense of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. BEEBE. I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of the motion of the gentleman from New York——

Mr. DUNNELL. I submit that this is hardly proper or fair treatment of this very important measure.

The SPEAKER. A motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

The question being put, the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. THOMPSON.]

Mr. CONGER. I submit that the gentleman has not ten minutes to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has not control of the floor; but the Chair was not aware what gentlemen desired to speak.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have the floor, then, in my own right, though I shall not probably detain the House myself longer than ten minutes. The gentleman from Texas stated yesterday that this was a very important bill. An examination of its provisions will convince any one that the statement is accurate. The bill, although drawn at considerable length, is very simple in the purposes it proposes to accomplish; and those objects if accomplished are of very great interest to every citizen of this land. The bill does not interfere or attempt to interfere with the transportation of commerce within the States. It undertakes to manage only the interstate commerce of the country.

There are two evils imperatively demanding remedy which have grown up in the transportation of the commerce of the country. One is discrimination against individuals and the other is discrimination against localities. These two points are the main features of this bill, and these are the two evils it is intended mainly to remedy.

The first I have named has grown to be a grievous burden. I may state as illustrating this point what I know in reference to a subject in which I am interested somewhat and with which I am entirely familiar; that is, the transportation of oil from where it is produced in Pennsylvania to the seaboard. I hold in my hand a table which shows that the production of the State of Pennsylvania last season amounted in round numbers to thirteen millions of barrels. The established rates for transportation from the producing regions to the seaboard was $1.50 per barrel, which would have amounted to the sum of $18,750,000. Instead, however, of the railroad companies receiving $18,000,000 for the transportation of this oil under a "ring" arrangement they received nominally $1.50 per barrel, but the men in the "ring" received back in the form of drawbacks ranging from eighty cents to $1.10 for every barrel. Instead, therefore, of the stockholders of the railroads receiving $18,000,000 justly due them, and which the producers of oil are perfectly willing to pay, the stockholders of the railroad companies receive less than five, while thirteen millions of this money are diverted from the stockholders and from the shippers into the pockets of an unscrupulous "ring." This bill proposes to abolish that, and make it not only legally impossible but make it, as it should be, a crime and a misdemeanor.

The next point the bill seeks to correct is this: under an arrangement railroad companies will ship produce from a point one hundred miles east to a given point one hundred miles west for less money than they can ship it for a shorter distance. And in corroboration of that I send to the Clerk, but will not ask him to read now, a statement of the rates on westward-bound freight. I will refer, however, to a single example. From Boston to Chicago first-class freight on the one thousand and nine miles paid forty cents a hundred. From New York to the same point and one hundred and nine miles shorter distance, the same freight paid to the same railroad seventy-five cents, more than fifty cents of discrimination against the one and in favor of the other. The same runs down until I exhibit here twenty different points in which discrimination against particular localities ranges from 33 to 100 per cent. One reason for it, one justification for it is suggested, that at certain points where railroads radiate in different directions and there is great competition and the rates are very low and are destructive to the interest of the railroad, and because they are destructive to the interests of the railroad at these points, they are made up by discriminating against less favored points, which are compelled to pay not only fair and reasonable rates, but rates to make up what has been lost by the railroad in this unwise discrimination in behalf of more favored localities. I call attention to this table:

In order to remedy this evil, this bill is drawn with great care, specifically pointing out the evils to be avoided and remedies to be enforced.

One remedy is this: that every railroad company under the provisions of this bill is compelled to place in its depot, in a prominent place, in plain type, conspicuously posted, a schedule of its rates and the class of rates from one point to another designated on its road, and it is also provided that it shall not charge A for the same service for the same time and over the same road more than it charges B. Why should not that be done? I can instance a case in my own State where, if you want to ship goods to-day to Chicago, Saint Louis, or Omaha, the shipper can ship them one hundred and twenty miles east, pay the freight on them, and then ship them twelve miles west, through the very point from which they shipped originally or to Chicago or Omaha, for less money than he could ship them originally direct. This is corrected in this bill, and it is a remedy which has been long needed and which cannot be provided too soon.

I have said, Mr. Speaker, that it was against the discrimination in the freight of oil to the seaboard which gave rise to this bill.

Now, in order that the country may understand the magnitude of that business and the importance of the traffic, I will simply state this fact orally, and then submit certain tables which will illustrate the point I am making. It is this: this oil is produced in a territory which a man can ride around on horseback in two days. Nine-tenths of all the oil in the world is produced in that isolated district. This is a commodity which was unknown to commerce fifteen years ago. Fifteen years ago not one barrel had been shipped to a foreign country. And yet it appears from the statistics of our Government that of all the articles of export in the year 1877 the second in importance and value was this oil. Cotton stands first on the list, then comes oil. The export is of the value of $61,789,438, bringing back into this country more gold than all the wheat, or flour, or bacon, or beef, or lumber, or tobacco, or any other commodity shipped from this country; and more than all the gold and silver bullion and gold and silver coin combined by $20,000,000.

The experience of these men previously had been such that this business was entirely broken down and prostrated. They ask that this legislation should be made. They have come here for that purpose; but it is not in their interest alone. Every interest, every manufacturer, every man who raises a bushel of grain or feeds a head of stock, meat, grain, lumber, manufactures—all are crushed in various localities by this unjust, illegal, and criminal legislation. It would be in the interest of the railroads to have this law passed. Let a law be passed under which they cannot commit felo de se. Let a law be passed under which they cannot be compelled to ship at ruinous rates. Let competition make its own rates. And this bill does not fix rates; it only fixes the relative value of rates. Railroads would be benefited, manufacturers would spring up in favored localities, its operation would go on from one portion of the country to the other and prosperity would cover the whole land; and in localities where they are now crushed, smothered out by these unjust discriminations, manufactures and productions of various kinds would be produced.

This is a matter in which every man in this land is directly or indirectly interested. And I say here without fear of contradiction that the importance of this bill is not second to any one that has been before this House. If adopted, more than a hundred millions of dollars will be saved to the producers and shippers of this country, and not one dollar will be taken from the coffers of the railroads or common carriers. But it will be taken from the ring; from the combination of thieves who have been permitted by law, as I have previously said, to fatten on the misfortunes of certain classes of the community. I shall print with my remarks certain statistics illustrating the argument I have been making, and will detain the House no longer.

The following are the statistics referred to by Mr. THOMPSON in his speech:

The following statement shows the number of wells in operation May 1, 1878, cost of wells, amount of iron-tankage, capacity of tanks and refineries, their cost, &c.:

Number of wells	9,000
Cost per well, $5,500—amounting to	$49,500,000
Twenty-five hundred miles of pipe lines, costing	7,000,000
Refineries, with 60,000 daily capacity, costing	6,000,000
Six million iron tankage, costing	6,000,000

The following statement shows the amount of oil shipped to the seaboard during the year ending March 1, 1878, and the cost of transportation from wells to the seaboard:

Number of barrels shipped	12,485,563
Pipeage from wells to railroad, twenty-five cents per barrel	$3,121,390 75
Transportation by railroad, at $1.50 per barrel	18,728,294 50
Total	21,849,659 25

The refined oil is shipped in barrels or casks, and for this purpose thirty thousand daily is a fair estimate, costing $1.36 each, and made up of the following items:

24 staves at 2½ cents each	$0 60
10 pounds hoop iron, at 3 cents per pound	30
Glue, 6 cents per pound	6
Labor, paint, &c	40
	1 36
30,000 barrels daily, costing $1.36 each	$40,800
And amounting yearly to the sum of, (counting 360 days a year)	15,668

The following statement shows the value of fifteen of our principal articles of export for the year 1877:

Cotton		$171,118,508
Petroleum		61,789,438
Bacon and hams		49,512,621
Wheat		47,155,562

Mr. BRAGG obtained the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will allow me, I desire to make another proposition to the House.

Mr. BRAGG. I decline to yield the floor if my doing so shall interfere with my retaining it.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not propose to interfere with the gentleman's retaining the floor; but perhaps he would prefer occupying the floor at another time. I propose, if it be agreeable to the House, that it shall be ordered by unanimous consent that at the close of the morning hour on Saturday this bill be considered, and the previous question not called earlier than half past four o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas now proposes that the pending bill be taken out of the morning hour, and that its consideration be assigned for Saturday next immediately after the morning hour, and that debate shall close and a vote be taken on the bill and pending amendments at half past four o'clock instead of half past three, thus allowing more time for debate. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas a question: whether he will not modify his proposition so as to allow the bill to be considered on Saturday in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five minute rule.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection to that. Perhaps in that way we may get more intelligent debate on the bill. But let it be with the understanding that the previous question shall be called at that hour.

Mr. SAMPSON. Is it the understanding that the previous question shall be called at that time?

The SPEAKER. Not necessarily. The proposition is that the previous question shall not be called until then.

Mr. BRAGG. It is understood that if I yield the floor now I shall be entitled to the floor when the consideration of the bill is resumed on Saturday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will so consider. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Texas, as modified?

There was no objection, and the order was made.

TIMBER LANDS.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 20) authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes.

The bill was read. It provides that all citizens of the United States and other persons, bona fide residents of the State of Colorado or Nevada, or either of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, Dakota, Idaho, or Montana, and all other mineral districts of the United States, shall be authorized and permitted to fell and remove, for building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, any timber or other trees growing or being on the public lands, said lands being mineral and not subject to entry under existing laws of the United States except for mineral entry, in either of said States, Territories, or districts of which such citizens or persons may be at the time bona fide residents, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the protection of the undergrowth growing upon such lands.

Section 2 provides that it shall be the duty of the register and the receiver of any local land office in whose district any mineral land may be situated to ascertain from time to time whether any timber is being cut or used upon any of such lands, except for the purposes authorized by this act, within their respective land districts; and, if so, they shall immediately notify the Commissioner of the General Land Office of that fact; and all necessary expenses incurred in making such proper examinations shall be paid and allowed such register and receiver in making up their next quarterly accounts.

Section 3 provides that any person or persons who shall violate the provisions of this act, or any rules and regulations in pursuance thereof made by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500, and to which may be added imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I now ask for the reading of the report of the committee of the Senate.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee have carefully considered the subject of timber and timber lands, and, after mature deliberation, with the view of devising the best methods of preserving, cultivating, and disposing of the same, have come to the conclusion that a distinction should be made between such trees as grow upon the mountains in the mineral districts and the forests of pine, oak, and other timber that grow in the more level portions of the country.

While the lumber of the latter is a regular and important article of commerce and is constantly being cut and transported in large quantities to ready markets, the character of the former renders the timber unfit for commercial purposes. Even were this otherwise, it is usually found in such inaccessible places as to preclude its transportation to market. Consequently it is used by the prospector, the miner, and other members of mining communities for domestic and other practical purposes incidental to the development of mineral districts. The committee do not believe that it would be wise policy on the part of the Government to seek to profit directly by the sale of this kind of timber nor to tax the pioneer by compelling him to purchase it. Except as a source of revenue, by sale to the settler, it never can be of any value to the Government. Should the experiment be tried of requiring payment for it, it would be found that the cost of keeping agents for its sale and officers to prevent or punish infractions of the law at remote and widely separated settlements, would largely consume all sums received for this timber by the Government. Thus, while it is practically of but little value to the Government, it is essential to the settler and indispensable to his occupation and development of the mineral lands. It has been the custom of Congress to encourage the exploration and development of the mineral regions of the United States; and in this connection it should be borne in mind that it is mainly to the indomitable energy, hardihood, and daring of the pioneer that we are indebted for the discovery and development of the rich gold and silver districts of the country. What would be the condition of this country to-day had it not been for our product of gold and silver during the last quarter of a century? The $100,000,000 annually added by the United States to the world's stock of bullion will amply pay for the use of the scattering timber found in those localities. Instead of imposing this timber as a tax upon this important branch of industry, the committee are of opinion that, under the restrictions provided in this bill and on the grounds of equity and public policy, the Government should allow its free use by the actual settler for the purposes alluded to herein.

In 1866 Congress, by express statute, authorized the occupation and use of these mineral lands, as follows:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the mineral lands of the public domain, both surveyed and unsurveyed, are hereby declared to be free and open to exploration and occupation by all citizens of the United States and those who have declared their intention to become citizens, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and subject also to the local customs and rules of miners in the several mining districts, so far as the same may not conflict with the laws of the United States."

This is an express grant by the Government to the people who occupy this portion of the public domain. There was no law by which settlers could purchase either the timber necessary for such occupation or the land upon which that timber is found. It is a well-settled principle applied to grants that the grant carries with it all the incidents necessary to enable the grantee to make the grant available. It is absolutely necessary for settlers to have timber for domestic use in order to enable them to occupy these mineral lands. It would have been a mockery to make this grant without including such use of timber. It cannot be said that it was ever intended the occupants should pay for this timber, since no provision has ever been made for its sale or purchase. The Government is more than paid for its value by the increased wealth added by mining operations to the grand total of taxable property. In view of these considerations, the committee recommend the passage of the substitute, which contains limitations and guards for the protection of undergrowth and such other restrictions as seem just and equitable.

Mr. FORT. I desire to make a point of order upon that bill. It occurs to me that it ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It is liable to the point of order inasmuch as it proposes to dispose of public property. The language of the report clearly indicates that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I desire to say that this is a bill that has already passed the Senate. It was reported by the Senate Committee on Public Lands unanimously. It was discussed in the Senate very fully by gentlemen who have had the subject of public lands and the subject of timber in the Territories called to their attention, and it passed the Senate of the United States also unanimously. It was referred to the Committee on Public Lands of this House, and that committee also took it under consideration and examined it carefully from every stand-point and they also unanimously concluded that it was a proper policy to adopt with reference to the class of people whom it is intended to benefit in the Territories.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman from Colorado is discussing the bill, and not the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I was not speaking exactly to the point of order, but for the purpose of giving the gentleman from Illinois some information as to the deliberate consideration that the bill has received in both branches of Congress.

I will also state that the Delegates from the Territories unanimously presented a petition to the Committee on Public Lands in favor of this bill. I am thoroughly satisfied that if this House had the bill under consideration for any time it would then be passed by the House by an almost unanimous vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon the point of order?

Mr. FORT. I do.

Mr. PAGE. I would appeal to the gentleman from Illinois not to press the point of order on this bill. It is well understood by the House that some law must be passed to relieve the people of the Territories of the United States from the operations of the act of 1831, which makes it a misdemeanor for any person to trespass upon the public lands of the United States. The bill can be as well considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. This legislation is recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and by the Secretary of the Interior, and it is demanded by the people everywhere that Congress should pass some law by which the people shall have the right to obtain some timber from the public lands. I therefore appeal to the gentleman from Illinois to allow the bill to be considered here. There will be abundant opportunity for amendment and discussion, and I ask him not to insist upon the point of order, when it will simply result in doing great injustice to the people of the western Territories.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw the point of order against this bill. In the two last Congresses I had the honor to introduce bills for the disposition of these timber lands. Sometimes we succeeded in securing their passage in one House, sometimes in the other, but have failed to secure the concurrence of both. The subject-matter has been extensively discussed in both Houses this winter, and the debate attracted the attention of the country. I spoke to the House some time ago in favor of a proposition of this kind, upon an appropriation bill. The House without a dissenting voice then sustained the position I assumed. It has already passed on the principles embraced in this bill. It is unnecessary to again go over the ground in Committee of the Whole. I trust the point of order will be withdrawn and the bill considered on its merits.

Mr. FORT. Allow me to say that this bill seems to allow unlimited license to cut timber on the public lands to an unlimited number of persons. It ought to be discussed in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but as the gentlemen who seem to be most interested in the passage of the bill have appealed to me to withdraw the point of order I will do so with the understanding that one or two amendments may be offered, and I will state one of the amendments which I think ought to be adopted. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior may make rules and regulations to protect the undergrowth, but it does not provide that he may make any regulations to protect the timber or to control this unlimited license which is given by the bill to cut timber.

It seems to me that for the public good the Secretary of the Interior ought to be authorized to provide proper rules and regulations to govern this matter of cutting timber on the public lands. Having said this much I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. Then I call the previous question.

Mr. FORT. While undoubtedly the constituents of gentlemen who favor this bill are interested in the subject of cutting timber on the public lands, still all the people of the United States are equally interested, for many of our people contemplate emigrating to and settling in that country. Therefore the timber should be preserved for them as well as for those who are already there.

Mr. PRICE. And they want the benefit of this very bill, or something similar to it.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I call the previous question with the understanding that amendments may be offered afterward.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question would cut off all amendments.

Mr. FORT. I desire to move to amend the bill so that it shall not be open to railroad corporations to cut this timber, and also that the Secretary of the Interior shall make rules and regulations in regard to the cutting of the timber as well as the protection of the undergrowth.

Mr. MAGINNIS. We have no objection to those amendments.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I call the previous question with the understanding that the amendments indicated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] are pending.

The previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered.

The first question was upon the amendment of Mr. FORT to add to section 1 the following:

And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not extend to railroad corporations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next question was upon the amendment of Mr. FORT to amend section 1 preceding the proviso so that it will read as follows:

Subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the protection of the timber and of the undergrowth growing upon such lands, and for other purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORT WAYNE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 613) subjecting the Fort Wayne military reservation, in the State of Arkansas, to entry as other public lands in said State.

The bill provides that all the lands embraced in the Fort Wayne military reservation, in the State of Arkansas, shall be opened and made subject to entry as other public lands in said State under existing laws; provided that all persons owning improvements on said reservation at the time of the passage of this act shall have a prior right to enter the same at any time within six months after this act goes into effect.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is this bill recommended by the Secretary of War?

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. It is.

Mr. DUNNELL. Bills of this character usually come from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. There is a report accompanying the bill, which I ask the Clerk to read, as it will give all the information desired.

Mr. DUNNELL. All right.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. The report is very short.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands report the bill (H. R. No. 613) favorably, and submit the following statement and recommendations from the Commissioner of the General Land Office in support of the passage of the bill and in the nature of a report in favor of the same:

By the sixth section of the act of Congress of June 12, 1858, (Statutes at Large, volume 2, page 336,) lands embraced in abandoned military reservations, except reservations in Florida, are not subject to the operation of the general laws for the disposal of the public lands of the United States, and they can only be disposed of in such manner as may be provided for from time to time by special enactment.

The act of Congress of February 24, 1871, (Statutes at Large, volume 16, page 430,) provided for the disposal of certain useless military reservations therein mentioned, to wit, Fort Wayne, in Arkansas, and others. In accordance with the provisions of said act, the lands covered by the reservations at Fort Lane, in Oregon; Fort Zarah, in Kansas, and Fort Jesup, in Louisiana, have been offered at public sale, with no bidders in the case of Fort Lane and the sale of a few tracts in the case of Fort Zarah and Fort Jesup. The tracts not disposed of at the public sales thereafter became subject to private entry at the appraised price, under the terms of the act. In the case of the other reservations mentioned in said act, (Fort Wayne being one of them,) except the three offered at public sale as above stated, further action of Congress is deemed necessary for the proper disposal of them, and the recommendations made in connection therewith on pages 40, 41, and 42 of my last annual report are respectfully renewed.

The recommendations referred to are as follows: "5. Fort Wayne, Arkansas, contains 11,680 acres per survey. The appraisement was reported at $1.25 per acre as the value of the land, there being no improvements of any kind upon the abandoned reservation. This being the case, it is suggested that the lands be brought into market as other public lands; and to effect this the necessary legislation is recommended."

The whole object of this bill is to bring this useless military reservation into market as other public lands.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. I now call the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RESTORING LANDS IN IOWA TO SETTLEMENT.

Mr. SAPP, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back with an amendment House bill No. 699 to restore certain lands in Iowa to settlement under the homestead law, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to restore to settlement under the homestead law, by published notice, all vacant unappropriated lands heretofore withdrawn for the Mississippi and Missouri Railroad, in the State of Iowa, situated more than twenty miles from the amended line of route as located under the act approved June 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act making a grant of land to the State of Iowa in alternate sections to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State," approved May 15, 1856: Provided, That all actual settlers now residing on said lands shall be permitted to enter not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres for each head of a family or single man over twenty-one years of age, embracing improvements, in preference to any other person, on making proof of such settlement in accordance with rules to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That all actual settlers now residing upon the lands hereinbefore mentioned shall be permitted to make the final proof now required by law, and receive their patents at the expiration of five years from the date of their actual settlement.

SEC. 2. That this act shall not include any lands embraced in the confirmatory act approved January 31, 1873, entitled "An act to quiet title to certain lands in the State of Iowa."

The amendment was, in the first section of the bill, to strike out the word "law," after the word "homestead," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "and pre-emption laws;" so that it will read, "restore to settlement under the homestead and pre-emption laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAPP. I call the previous question on the bill as amended.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAPP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WOOD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the tariff bill.

PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent that the privileges of the floor be extended to Mr. Peter Cooper, of New York.

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I dislike very much to trouble the House upon such a question and should not do so under ordinary circumstances. But the RECORD of yesterday (following as I understand the Journal in this respect) reports me as not voting upon the motion of my colleague [Mr. WOOD] on Tuesday last to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the tariff bill. The fact is, upon that motion I voted "no." The vote stood 108 in the negative and 109 in the affirmative. My recollection is very clear upon this point from the fact that before the vote was announced and before several gentlemen had changed their votes from the negative to the affirmative I was solicited by three of my colleagues from the State of New York to change my vote and vote in the affirmative so that the motion should prevail and the bill come up for consideration. I declined to do so, upon the ground that I believed the country was tired of this discussion and that the best interests and welfare of the people could not be promoted either by the passage of the bill or its further consideration. I dislike to appear in the RECORD or Journal or anywhere else as a dodger upon any question or vote arising in this House. That is not an element that enters into my character. Whatever opinions I entertain upon any question coming before this House or the country I am ready that the country should know them, and am always ready to place myself upon the record.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state in behalf of the gentlemen at the Clerk's desk that the vote of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LOCKWOOD] was not heard at the desk. Besides, the roll was called over in the usual manner, and the opportunity was afforded to any gentleman who was not recorded to record his vote.

Mr. BEEBE. I desire to add my testimony to that of my colleague, [Mr. LOCKWOOD.] I know very well that he did respond when his name was called, although the clerks may not have heard him, owing to the temporary confusion.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I cannot be held responsible for the fact that they did not hear. I usually speak in a tone loud enough to be heard by almost everybody in the Hall; and in this case I spoke sufficiently loud for my colleagues on the farther side of the House to hear me; for they came to me and tried to get me to change my vote, which I declined to do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair remembers distinctly calling the attention of the House during that very roll-call to the noise prevailing in the Hall. The fault in this respect rests with members themselves. It is the duty of each member to watch when his name is called and see that his vote is recorded.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Gentlemen on the other side of the House heard me when I announced my vote.

The SPEAKER. No one is questioning the word of the gentleman; but the mistake arose from the confusion prevailing at the time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WOOD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KNOTT. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Mrs. Ellen Camp, no adverse report having been made.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I object. That can be done at the close of the day.

TARIFF BILL.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WOOD, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. SAYLER in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to impose duties upon foreign imports, to promote trade and commerce and to reduce taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, the most noteworthy portion of the speech of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. WOOD] on the pending bill was its opening sentence. He said:

In opening this discussion I do not propose to enter into any explanation of the details of the bill.

His colleagues and mine, the distinguished gentlemen from Virginia and North Carolina, [Mr. TUCKER and Mr. ROBBINS,] who have since addressed the House in support of the bill, have pursued the same evasive course. For the chancellor of the exchequer, in presenting a budget framed on novel principles, to thus decline to explain its details, set forth reasons for the proposed changes, and offer estimates of the effect they are likely to produce on the trade and revenues of the country, is a new position in the history of legislation. It thus happens that the duty of explaining the budget is remitted to the members of the opposition. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] accepted the extraordinary trust, and at least so far as concerns the important question of cotton and wool and the manufactures thereof executed it very thoroughly and relieved me from the necessity of going beyond what gentlemen may regard as minor questions, the general provisions of the bill.

In adopting this extraordinary course the gentlemen, especially the chairman of the committee, have done themselves great wrong. The people waited with eager expectation for the exposition by its author of the provisions of a bill which was said to threaten the overthrow, in this period of unparalleled and increasing industrial and commercial depression, of a system of import duties to which our industries and commerce had adjusted themselves.

NO CITIZEN HAD ASKED FOR SUCH LEGISLATION.

Doctrinaires and editors of commercial organs have persistently criticised some of the details of our present tariff law and objected to the principles upon which our revenue system is based; but no part of the people have petitioned Congress to engage at this time in a revision of the tariff. From no city or town, county or township, had there come such a petition.

The loom and the spindle stand still. The mine is unwrought and the fires are out in the forge, the furnace, and the rolling-mill. The captains of industry by thousands are passing into bankruptcy and the laboring people of the country by millions into want, if not into absolute pauperism. They are not permitted to endure the primal curse and earn their bread in the sweat of their brows. They implore us to relieve them, but not one of them has suggested that it can be done by a revision of the tariff in the interest of foreign producers and their agents who are supplanting American merchants in New York and elsewhere. They are told by school-men and the organs of these foreign commercial agents that they are suffering from "overproduction;" that they are hungry because they have produced too much food; that they are naked or in rags because they have spun and woven too many fabrics; that they are shoeless and foot-sore because they have produced too many boots and shoes; and that they are houseless "tramps" because they have erected too many homes and constructed too much furniture.

They do not believe these preposterous assertions and ask us to legislate in quite another direction than the revision of the tariff in the interest of the employers of foreign labor.

From my own constituents petitions of this kind have come by scores and hundreds. Let me read this one from the cotton-workers of Manayunk:

We are informed and believe that the House of Representatives has now under consideration a change of the tariff laws which will reduce the duties on foreign goods and which must have an injurious effect upon the industry in which we are employed. The prices of all domestic fabrics are now lower than ever before, wages are at the lowest endurable point, many works are at a stand, and the distress among workingmen is so great that you cannot be ignorant of it. Bad as the situation is here we are advised and believe it is worse in England; the wages are lower there and goods cheaper, and that such a reduction of our tariff duties as will open the American market to their wares is greatly desired by English manufacturers. While we sympathize with foreign workmen we owe a duty to our own families. We do not want charity, we want work, and we claim as a right the home market for the products of home industry. We are advised of the urgency with which salaried English agents in this country are pressing for what they call revenue reform, but we beg you to consider that it will be no gain in the end to favor the foreign traders who want to sell their cheap goods, and to find that protracted idleness has ruined our orderly and industrious workingmen.

For these and other reasons we respectfully remonstrate against any reduction of duties which protect our labor.

THE CHAIRMAN DOES NOT UNDERSTAND HIS BILL.

In determining to avoid the duty of explaining the provisions of his bill the chairman, as I have said, did himself great wrong. The attempt to prepare an exposition of its provisions and their probable effect would have disclosed to him his ignorance of the details and general scope of his bill, the insufficiency of its provisions, their incongruity, the uncertainty in which, if enacted into law, they must involve importers and producers, and the vast amount of litigation such an enactment would inevitably engender. The correctness of this judgment may be shown by considering one brief paragraph of the gentleman's speech. He said:

The bill reported has but one list so called, and that is the dutiable one. It has no compound rates, the duties being either ad valorem or specific, and the latter as far as practicable. It comprises 247 classes of articles, and 575 articles against the large number comprised in the present law. It has no free list as such; all articles not enumerated and specifically named are to be admitted free.

The gentleman will pardon me for saying that it is not true that the bill has but one list, nor that it has in all cases so far as practicable avoided ad valorem duties, as will be seen by the metals schedule; nor that it embraces as dutiable but 247 classes of articles and but 575 articles; nor that it imposes duties on a smaller number of articles than are dutiable under the existing law. Nor is it true, inasmuch as it specifically provides that certain articles shall be free of duty, that it has no free list; nor that all articles not enumerated are to be free, though it is expressly asserted in lines 8 and 9 that all merchandise not herein provided for shall be free of duty. We cannot assume that the gentleman would consciously string together so many misstatements, and I am therefore compelled to believe that, like the creator of Frankenstein, he has produced a monster of the nature of which he was ignorant and the conduct of which he cannot control.

THE BILL IS OPPOSED BY INTELLIGENT FREE-TRADERS.

In response to the gentleman's assertion that none but extreme protectionists oppose the bill, I read the proceedings of a meeting or at least remarks made by gentlemen at a meeting of the New York Chamber of Commerce on Saturday, February 2, which was composed almost exclusively of free-traders and which was addressed among others by J. S. Moore, better known as "Curiosibhoy," the author of the Parsee Letters; also by Mr. Daniel C. Robbins, famous not only in this country but in other lands as a manufacturing chemist, who makes the advocacy of free trade a hobby. This report of the proceedings of that meeting was kindly furnished me by one who participated in it. The proceedings were for prudential reasons not published, but were sent in manuscript to a number of gentlemen. Mr. J. S. Moore is, I believe, the statistician of the Treasury who prepared some of the tables and estimates presented by the chairman of the committee:

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, NEW YORK,
Saturday, February 2, 1878.

Mr. WOOD'S bill was pretty fully discussed by parties representing the shipping interest and the dry goods, grocery, and drug and chemical trades, and was generally condemned by all except the shipping interest, which approved the provisions allowing the purchase of foreign-built vessels and the free importation of materials used in the construction of ships.

Mr. J. S. Moore, the statistician, made the opening address, and his remarks were full, while he was somewhat reserved and cautious in his statements. He expressed regret that the bill had not been more maturely considered before publishing, and made a very strong point against it in the fact that out of the present free list, which comprised an amount of about one hundred and fifty millions of imports, this bill placed over fifty millions under duties again, thereby reducing the present free list very materially. Mr. Moore further stated that, so far as he knew, no advice had been taken from the various trades or customs and revenue experts like himself or Mr. David A. Wells. He also pointed out various inconsistencies in taxing raw materials and leaving manufactures from these materials free of duty as an oversight which no doubt arose from the fact that the proposed list abolished all previous ones and that none of the trades had been consulted. The plan of the committee having been to ask much advice and select what they chose, the imperfections and the inconsistencies in the proposed bill proved the unwisdom of consigning tariff reform to inexperienced hands.

On the part of the drug and chemical trade, Mr. D. C. Robbins said that the proposed Wood bill was a great disappointment, because for some years past, commencing with the legislation of 1869 and 1870, much attention had been paid to the drug and chemical interest, and very important reforms had taken place; so much so that this trade from having been, as D. A. Wells stated in one of his earliest reports after the war, in the most neglected condition of all, it was no doubt at present in as good as any, considering the multiplicity of articles involved and the variety of manufactures connected with it. To particularize these reforms, almost all crude articles or natural products that should be free had been added to the free list, and important reductions had been made in the duties on chemicals and other manufactures, instancing quinine, morphine, &c., as examples; that the present feeling between the commercial and manufacturing interests was for a reduction of duties within fair limits, and there never was a more favorable period for wise reform.

The present bill was not a reform, and would not be accepted by either the commercial or manufacturing interest. The reimposition of duties on crude or raw materials was a very unwise measure, which would interfere with imports and foreign commerce and prevent the exportation of domestic manufactures. Further it would cripple the manufacturing interest at home. At present opium paid a duty of $1 per pound and morphine was allowed a compensating protection of $1 per ounce; but in the proposed bill opium, besides being disallowed the privilege of being bonded, which was a direct blow at foreign commerce, was subjected to a duty of $2 per pound, while morphine, because of the fact that it had not been embraced in the dutiable list, would be admitted free. Sulphate of quinine, which was a very important remedy, and a product of Peruvian bark, the last being free, paid at present a protective duty of 20 per cent; and he believed the manufacturers would consent that it should be reduced to 10 per cent. if bark remained free.

These were only some important examples, and he would not take up the meeting for further illustration. He considered the whole bill in fact as a very crude attempt at tariff reform on the part of a committee without practical experience in such matters or any special knowledge of the various interests involved, and immediate measures should be taken to have the bill modified in the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WOOD'S plan of simplifying the collection of duties and the list of the tariff by substituting for a numerous list of special articles a single line, which imposed a percentage on all vegetable products, the most numerous of the three natural kingdoms, is about as sensible as the imposition of a fixed percentage upon all things visible, which would reduce the tariff to a single line, and dispense with all discrimination, and place American commerce and American manufacture upon a level with some of the smaller South American states where all duties upon all articles are collected by a fixed percentage upon gross weight.

This bill was not a reform; it was a step backward, or at most a very crude beginning. To view it in the most charitable light it is simply as yet a conception not fitted for the light of birth, and any attempt to so obtrude it will prove a misfortune.

All the representatives of the various trades, except the shipping interest, concurred in denouncing the present bill, and a general regret was expressed that a more careful bill had not been matured by a committee which for the first time in many years specially represented in its chairman the commercial interest.

The meeting adjourned to meet again at the call of the chairman.

DOES THE BILL CONTAIN BUT ONE LIST?

I have said it is not true that the bill contains but one list. Here, sir, are seventy lists taken from the bill, and no man, whether he be a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, Secretary of the Treasury, or statistician, can tell what any one of them embraces, or in the progress of science, art, and manufactures, or by ingenious changes of nomenclature, may be made to embrace.

Thus, in lines 78, 79, and 80, we find that on all manufactures of cotton, or of which cotton shall be a component of chief value, not otherwise provided for, a duty of 25 per cent is imposed. On lines 131, 132, &c., we have all articles of glass not otherwise provided for. In lines 145 and 148 china, porcelain, and Parian ware, ornamented or not ornamented, not otherwise provided for. In lines 151 and 152 all earthen, stone, or crockery ware, white, glazed, edged, printed, painted, dipped, or cream-colored, composed of earthy or mineral substances, not herein otherwise provided for.

So through all the schedules run these little vague and indefinite lists until they number seventy. Nor, as I said, is it true that the bill is without a free list, which with the others make seventy-one additions to the gentleman's solitary list. Let me refer gentlemen to the free list. In lines 521 and 522, in the schedule of silk duties, they will find that bolting-cloths are to be free; if they turn to lines 991, 992, and 993, that madder, munjeet or Indian madder, and extracts thereof, and alizarine are to be free; and in lines 583 and 584 they will find the most marvelous item ever put into a tariff bill. It specially provides that shooks for tobacco-boxes shall be free; so as to give Virginia the chance to range the world over, while saving her own timber, to get cheap wood for making the boxes in which, by the gentle force of the hydraulic press, the twisted rolls of cavendish tobacco are flattened into the form in which we northerners learn to know that priceless luxury.

I must ask the committee to pardon a brief digression. I cannot abstain from saying in this connection that I am more than half persuaded that the magnificent denunciations of the protective system uttered yesterday by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] were, notwithstanding his apparent earnestness, only in a Pickwickian sense. In support of this surmise I refer to the facts that while the highest manufactures of the North are stricken at by this bill, the blossoms or leaves of sumac, an indigenous bush which infests the hill-sides of Virginia and which are gathered by old women and children as an amusement, are to be protected by a duty of 10 per cent. and tobacco shooks are made free by special provision.

I do not think it will be suspected that any gentleman outside of Virginia caused those provisions to be inserted in the bill; and from their presence there I infer that the gentleman would accept a little protection if Virginia had any manufacturing industries to be protected. [Laughter.]

I do not complain, Mr. Chairman, that these articles are made free. They ought all to be free except perhaps the shooks. Were competition in that important article possible it might stimulate some stalwart Virginian to cut a few trees and shape them into shooks. But I take no special exception even to that item. What I do complain of is that there is not a full and specific free list. I assert without the fear of plausible contradiction that the absence of such a list is a fatal defect.

No tariff has ever been made by a manufacturing nation that did not embody a specific free list. The commercial and manufacturing nations of the world have agreed that raw materials which cannot be produced within the country of their conversion, especially those which come from tropical or other countries which will take their manufactures in exchange for raw material, should be admitted free of duty. We alone impose duties upon any of them and if we are to manufacture either for home consumption or in the hope of reaching a foreign market we must adopt this part of the policy of other nations which puts us under bonds to maintain a free list embracing all such raw materials.

THE EXAMPLE OF ENGLAND.

Why, sir, England, whose policy stands out in contrast with that of all other nations; England, who boasts that free trade is her policy; England, whose tariff embraces but sixteen heads—I refer to the dutiable list, beer, chiccory, chocolate, cocoa, coffee, essence of spruce, dried fruits, gold or silver plate, spirits, malt, pickles, playing-cards, tea, tobacco, vinegar, and wine, with subdivisions of some of these articles, all of which are specifically named—England still maintains a specific free list.

Remembering how the practical men of the country had been excluded from the committee-room, I have sought, as you will discover as I proceed, the counsel of some of them. It was a mistake to exclude them, as many of them are not only practical men in their respective callings, but are scientific students of international trade and the laws which promote or restrict it. In connection with the question under consideration I appealed to my friend, Mr. A. H. Jones, of Philadelphia, who has the amplest collection of tariffs, present and past, American and foreign, of any gentleman known to me, and who is a philosophic student of their provisions. Let me read an extract from his response:

In the British tariff for 1848-'49 there is one "table of duties of customs," which embraces both dutiable and free goods, as follows:

CHALK, not manufactured—free.
Chalk, prepared or manufactured—10 per cent.
Chalk, prepared or manufactured, of and from British possessions—5 per cent.

This brief extract furnishes a fair illustration of the arrangement of the British tariff of that day, as it shows that free goods as well as those dutiable were specified; that crude materials were free; that manufactured products in very many instances were dutiable, and that a discrimination was made in favor of goods manufactured in the British possessions, which were admitted at lower rates of duty than were imposed on articles manufactured in other countries than British dependencies.

The lists are alphabetically arranged, and in addition to them there are two general clauses, one embracing goods not manufactured, and the other goods manufactured in part or in whole, as follows:

One provides that all goods not being either in part or wholly manufactured, not enumerated or prohibited—duty free.

And the other embracing goods, wares, or merchandise, being either in part or wholly manufactured, and not being enumerated or described, and not otherwise charged with duty and not prohibited to be imported into and used in Great Britain or Ireland, per £100 in value, £10—say 10 per cent.

The arrangement of the tariff of 1858-'59 is the same, and I take from it another illustration, thus:

YARN, namely, cable yarn—free.
camel or mohair—free.
linen, raw—free.
of silk and worsted spun together and not dyed—free.
Woolen or worsted, namely: commonly called Berlin wool, or zephyr yarn, and woolen and worsted yarn of two or more threads:
Scoured, bleached or colored, per pound weight, 6*d*.
Not scoured, bleached or colored, per pound weight, 3*d*.
Raw, for weaving, not dyed or only partially dyed, free.

The paragraphs relating to non-enumerated articles cited from the tariff of 1848 and 1849 remain.

The British tariff of 1862-'63 contains one list for dutiable goods and another for free goods, the free list being simply an enumeration of articles with the quantity or value by which they are severally to be stated in the entries. In the dutiable list I find the following paragraph:

Ships, foreign, built of wood, and ships built of wood in a British possession abroad, on registration as British ships, in Great Britain and Ireland, no deduction to be allowed on account of engine room or otherwise, per ton, 1*s*.
Varnish, containing any quantity of alcohol or spirit, per gallon, 12*s*.
Cologne water, to be charged as perfumed spirits, per gallon, 14*s*.

The tariffs of 1873 and 1876, like those already referred to, contain two lists, designating the innumerable articles that are to be free, and the quantity, measured by the unit of weight or value, the object being to afford the board of trade accurate statistics by which to calculate the increase or decrease of the trade in each article, thus:

FREE LIST.

Albumen, cwt.
Alkali.
Pearl and potashes, cwt.
Alum, cwt.
Bacon, cwt.
Bark, (Peruvian,) cwt.
Baskets, value.
Cameos, (not set,) value, &c.

And this the latest British tariff, as you are aware, imposes countervailing duties on all goods manufactured abroad of which alcohol is a component part, or in the production of which it is used as a solvent or otherwise. Thus under the head of spirits we find the following provisions:

Chloroform, per pound, 3*s*.
Collodion, per gallon, £1 4*s*.
Cologne water, per gallon, 16*s*. 6*d*.
Ether, sulphuric, per gallon, £1 5*s*.
Varnish, containing any quantity of alcohol or spirits, per gallon, 12*s*.

Now, sir, had not the practical men to whom I have referred been excluded from free conference with the committee, had they been allowed to make their own statements and be interrogated by members of the committee, as has been the case when all former tariffs were under consideration, facts like these would have been brought to the attention of the committee, a free list would have been inserted, and the committee been saved, the reproach of having reported a ridiculous abortion.

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS.

A tariff is not a matter of inspiration. It is a thing of slow growth and of adaptation to the extent, resources, and development of a country. Switzerland, with her few miles of territory, her snow-capped mountains, and her lakes, enriched with no native resources in the way of metals, may need free trade. But it is not adapted to a young and sparsely populated country which extends, as ours does, from ocean to ocean, embraces all climates, is more richly endowed than any other country with soil and climate for varied agricultural productions, and is still more richly endowed with minerals, useful and precious, and whose people, having been trained in the industrial centers of all countries, are in the enjoyment of schools of art and science such as the magnificent one founded by the munificence of the venerable man who does me the honor to listen to me, (Mr. Peter Cooper,) which, with its stores of literature, its models, its drawings, its scientific apparatus, and other educational appliances, is open to the poorest child of either sex in the country.

Such a country needs a protective tariff that will enable its people to employ whatever faculties Heaven has endowed them with; the feeble, with a taste for art to embellish our productions and adorn our homes and public halls; the vigorous and enterprising, to explore our mountains and develop their wealth; those with mathematical or mechanical gifts, to advance the arts and industries and carry them forward with the advancing line of civilization into our unpeopled wastes. The inhabitants of such a country develop their faculties and aptitudes by laboring to supply and gratify each other's needs and desires; but to enable them to do this the Government must secure to them at least equal chances with the foreigner in their own markets; and this can only be done by a tariff ample for the purpose of protection. This is all that a judicious tariff is. It is all that the manufacturers of this country ask, and had the Committee of Ways and Means met them they would have indicated reductions of duties that could be made with safety and extensions of the free list which might be made and which when made would justify a further reduction of duties upon the articles derived from such materials. They do not seek to injure their countrymen by the establishment of protected monopolies.

THE EXAMPLE OF FRANCE.

Let me glance hastily at the French tariff, that we may see how its scientific classification of commodities contrasts with the ill-digested and incongruous provisions of the bill under consideration. Let me invite attention to its schedules. But first let me remark that France has two tariffs: a general tariff, applicable to nations which have not made treaties with her; and what school-men falsely call her free-trade or reciprocal tariff, the result of treaties between her and Great Britain, Belgium, Italy, Switzerland, Sweden and Norway, Netherlands, Portugal, Austria, and the Ottoman and German Empires. In both of them she classifies commodities thus:

1. ANIMAL SUBSTANCES: Living animals; products and skins of animals; fishes; substances belonging to medicine and to perfumery; hard materials for cutting.
2. VEGETABLE SUBSTANCES: Farinaceous substances for food; fruits and grains; colonial articles for consumption, (as foods;) vegetable juices; ingredients for medicines; common woods; exotic woods; fruits, stems, and thread for working; dyes and tanning materials; sundry products and residues.
3. MINERAL SUBSTANCES: Stones, earths, and combustible minerals; metals.
4. MANUFACTURES: Chemical products; prepared dyes; colors; sundry compounds; drinks; vitrified wares; threads; tissues; paper and its applications; work in sundry materials.

Under this classification every item known to the commerce of France finds itself under a duty or on a list providing that it shall enter free. But to provide for new productions and the possibility of ingenious changes of name in foreign countries both tariffs contain a general provision that whatever is not enumerated therein shall pay a specific rate of duty much higher than that charged on many dutiable articles.

Thus England by her free list indicating only weight, measure, or value of articles, and France by her well and carefully devised tariff keep records of their commercial transactions which no man disputes. We can have the statistics of those countries, but under a tariff with no recognized free list, with seventy clauses providing for articles not otherwise provided for, the statistics of the United States would not be worth keeping.

The chairman of the committee spoke of the number of suits pending in the courts which have grown out of the tariff, but he failed to tell us how many such actions have been adjudicated and thus removed further litigation on the questions involved.

Our tariff is not found exclusively in the provisions expressed in the enactments of Congress. Many of these were of doubtful construction until by adjudication what was questionable has been settled. As much of the tariff law of this country as of the laws of the States is found in cases decided rather than in the text of statutes, and to pass this bill would by rendering these decisions inapplicable open a flood of litigation. It would also leave every importer free to charge his customers duties on free goods under the allegation of the uncertainty of the law. It would thus impose enormous taxes on the people for the benefit of importers and unscrupulous customs-brokers. Sir, the object or purpose of this bill would give examiners, appraisers, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the judges no assistance in construing it. Indeed it seems to have no special purpose. Yet an English editor seems to have discovered that it has a prevailing purpose.

Capital and Labor, a leading British trade journal, in its issue of March 6 said:

> As the new tariff is to please the South and West, it does not reduce the duties on wines, spirits, or tobacco, and takes good care of the Louisiana sugar-growers; but on almost all other protected articles it makes general reductions, putting many on the free list, and making in the others an average reduction of 25 per cent. Three-fourths of the articles now taxed are made free. Over against this must be placed the ominous fact of some additions to the list of dutiable commodities which seem perversely designed to check the revival of manufacturing industry. What can be the reason for imposing new duties on raw material in a tariff professing to favor free trade? Raw silk, cork-bark, ivory, dyestuffs of various kinds, and gums of all kinds are among the commodities hitherto duty free from which Mr. WOOD'S bill proposes to extract revenue. The fact is that many of the provisions of the bill seem to be directed, not against protection as a false and mischievous doctrine, but against manufacturers as a class hostile alike to the importing merchant and the agricultural producer.

There is unhappily much evidence in the bill as reported by the committee, and there was more in the original bill presented by the chairman, that its aim, as is here suggested, is to prostrate manufacturers as a class. But the blows are often aimed so unskillfully and awkwardly that over the shoulders of the manufacturer they strike the head of the farmer. The truth is, the committee seems to have been moved not by malice against anybody in particular but by malice against manufacturing industry in general. As I sat often a mere listener to the deliberations and conclusions of the committee I could not help thinking of that ugly habit they have in climes that produce spices and other tropical luxuries of "running amuck." In those regions of perpetual summer it is common for a man infuriated with arrack or hasheesh or some other infernal distillation to arm himself with a keenly-sharpened knife and go forth to hack and slay whoever he may meet. He is animated by no hostility toward any individual; but under the influence of the liquid he has taken he runs amuck, as the phrase is, against mankind. I think I can show you that the committee of which I have the honor to be a member, inspired no doubt by the wonderful writings of British free-trade dreamers, determined upon running amuck among the American working people.

INCONGRUOUS PROVISIONS.

The bill is a nondescript. When going over it to make an analysis of its provisions, I could not help thinking of the mule so pathetically described by the witty Senator from Oregon, Mr. Nesmith, and made up my mind that like it this bill was a thing that could have no pride of ancestry, for it was unlike anything that had ever gone before, and could have no hope of posterity as it was not possible that any deliberative body would accept it as a model.

It retains duties which yield little or no revenue, and repeals those which yield large sums. It retains duties on some things and repeals them on other articles identical in character and use. It imposes duties on materials and removes them from the articles into which these materials have been wrought. Let me by referring to a few of these instances present some of its assaults upon the interests of the farmer.

The freight question is almost a primary question for the agricultural producers of this country. To carry one bushel of corn to the eastern market from the great corn-fields of the country demands the price of one bushel or more. But if corn be converted into alcohol the products of one bushel will carry five or six bushels to market. One bushel of corn will not carry another bushel to market. But if converted into glucose one bushel will, as in the case of alcohol, carry five or six to market. I wish gentlemen representing agricultural districts would keep this question of freight in mind while considering the provisions of this bill.

For instance, it retains the duty of 20 cents per bushel on wheat, which yielded $7,496; but it relieves from duty wheat flour, bread, cakes, biscuits, and all other manufactures of wheat, which together paid last year nearly $17,000. While striking off the duty from wheat flour and the products thereof, it carefully retains the duty of 10 per cent. on rye flour, from which in 1875 and 1876 we did not get a cent, and from which in 1877 we got the enormous sum of 45 cents. It keeps the duty on corn-meal, which yielded last year but $169, and strikes off the duty on glucose, which yielded $46,673.

Now, some gentleman may ask me, as doubtless some members of the committee might, what is glucose? [Laughter.] Glucose is the sugar of corn, into which more than 10,000 bushels of corn are manufactured daily in this country. It is made in at least five States—New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, and Missouri. The present duty is 20 per cent.

Mr. PRICE. Add Iowa to the list. There is a large manufactory in that State.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman says there is a large manufactory of glucose in Iowa. Then the consumption of corn in the production of that article is probably 12,000 bushels daily. The price ranges from 6 to 8 cents per pound. It is used by chemists, brewers, wine-makers, confectioners, and in many culinary processes. Its consumption is increasing rapidly, as is shown by the fact that our importations for the last three years were as follows: in 1875 our importations were worth $2,352; in 1876, $65,789; and in 1877, $233,366.

Now, gentlemen, I ask why, if under a duty of 20 per cent. our importation is increasing so largely, shall we take the duty off glucose, at the risk of preventing its manufacture in this country? Why strike down the flouring-mills along our northern border by giving to the Canadian miller a bonus of 20 per cent. upon his wheat flour? New England consumes a million barrels of western flour annually as food or in her manufactures. The wheat fields of Canada lie close upon her borders. Water navigation and well-constructed railroads connect them, and the duty now imposed on wheat flour is the sole means of securing to Minnesota and the other northwestern States the market for that million or more of barrels of flour annually.

Is this done designedly? If so, it is our duty to defeat its purpose. Is it done ignorantly? Then we should dispose of the bill and remit the consideration of the tariff to a future Committee of Ways and Means, who shall either know more about the subject or have humility enough to listen to suggestions from practical men.

It retains a duty of 105 per cent. on rice, the rice of the Carolinas, for which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] spoke so earnestly yesterday. Rice which comes into the country to compete with that produced in the Carolinas or Georgia if cleaned pays a duty of 105 per cent. and a fraction; if uncleaned it pays 104 per cent. and a fraction; but if converted into rice flour by northern energy, machinery, and industry it is to be admitted free of duty, though rice flour last year yielded $2,184. In striking at the rice mills of the North, do not gentlemen see that they hit the rice-growers of the South?

Buckwheat and buckwheat flour are put on the free list. It is true they yielded last year but $466. But that for one year is a great deal more than rye flour gives us; which, as I have said, has been but 45 cents in three years.

Pease, beans, and seeds of other leguminous plants, which last year yielded $26,962, are made free, as are bran, mill-feed, &c., which for the last three years have averaged considerably over $4,000 a year. Canada would rejoice over the passage of this bill. It would give her and her civilization a new impulse, for New England is as great a consumer of bran, mill-feed, and seeds of leguminous plants as she is of wheat.

Vegetables not otherwise specified yielded last year $32,097. They are to be free under this bill; they cannot, by any possibility, be counted in under what the committee familiarly calls an n. o. p.; not otherwise provided. [Laughter.]

This bill proposes to retain existing duties on beef and pork; but mutton, poultry, &c., which yield much more revenue than beef and pork, it will relieve from duty.

POTATOES AND POTATO STARCH.

Potatoes gave us last year $472,918. Yet you cannot find in the seventy n. o. p's. one into which a single potato can be squeezed, even though it had been boiled. [Laughter.] With free potatoes, the duty on potato starch is to be reduced.

Could the committee have brought itself to admit a few members of the House to its counsels, these provisions might have been modified. But it could not hear any of them. One after another, gentlemen who sit with us on this floor requested the privilege of explaining the necessities of some special industry of their respective districts; and if one was admitted to address the full committee, I ask him to rise and disclose the fact.

Why, sir, the provisions relative to potatoes and potato starch will, if enacted into law, utterly destroy the leading industry of the northern counties represented by my friend from New Hampshire, [Mr. BLAIR,] and greatly impair the value of the farms in those counties.

The story is a simple one. It is a hard region of country, far up toward the Canada line—rocky and rough. Its people are full of regular New England "grit." They have the characteristics of the old Green Mountain Boys of revolutionary days. Poets have celebrated the devotion with which mountaineers love their sterile lands, and these New Hampshire people cling to their old family homesteads with an affection which natives of more genial climes cannot understand. Happy in their independence they gather each year from their well-worn soil a slender crop of potatoes; they and their families convert those potatoes into starch, of which they produce annually about 4,000 tons.

This is, as I have said, the main source of the income of these hardy men. Remove the duties from potatoes and reduce that on potato-starch as much as is proposed and they must abandon their cherished homes; the land with all the labor they could bestow upon it would not maintain them. For in the fresh land just beyond the Canada line potatoes can be produced so that a satisfactory Canadian profit—it is small, I grant—is made by selling them at eight cents per bushel, while their production costs about twenty cents in New Hampshire, where the people are burdened with war taxes, where the farmers maintain schools and churches and live as intelligent American citizens should live.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TUCKER. I move that the time of my colleague on the committee be extended.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. I thank my friend and the Committe of the Whole for this courtesy.

Mr. Chairman, so long a succession of such incongruous and contradictory provisions might justify the suspicion that caprice or chance presided over the preparation of the bill containing them.

NITRATE OF SODA AND MURIATE OF POTASH.

A striking illustration of this fact occurs to me, (and I might as well mention it here, for it connects itself with farming.) It is that nitrate of soda and muriate of potash are to be transferred from the free to the dutiable list. These bulky articles contribute to the support of our commercial marine. We send to Germany for potash and to the dry and rainless regions of South America for nitrate of soda, which cannot be obtained from a country in which rain falls. We depend for saltpeter, an article of prime importance in peace or war, upon British India. From nitrate of soda and muriate of potash gunpowder is largely made in New England and elsewhere; and if our supply of saltpeter were cut off and we could still obtain these two ingredients we would be independent of the world for our supply of gunpowder so far as the uses of that explosive are concerned.

But, more than this, it was recently discovered (the discovery was purely empirical) that nitrate of soda is the finest stimulant for grassland that science or accident has yet disclosed. The story of the discovery, which seems to have been unsuspected by science, runs thus: a maker of paper in New England, having purchased as stock a number of bags in which nitrate of soda had been imported, threw them upon his lawn, in order that a coming rain might cleanse them from adhering particles of the nitrate. The threatened rain came, and when the warm sunshine followed the bags were carried to the vat and converted into paper, and in a little while the ground on which the bags had lain sent up a crop of grass unequaled not only by that on any other land owned by the proprietor, but by that grown on land belonging to any of his neighbors. The hint was taken by him and others, and nitrate of soda is now largely imported into New England as a stimulant for grass. Why will not the land-owners of the South also accept this suggestion from nature? Nitrate of soda would doubtless do much to bring up the land there and enable the people, in spite of the heat of their climate, to begin dairy-work. But it and muriate of potash were known to the committee only as elements of manufacture. Both, though now admitted free, were put under duty. Was this done for the purpose of increasing the revenue?

SIMPLIFYING THE TARIFF. THE WAY IT WILL AFFECT FARMERS.

The gentleman said that his bill was going to simplify the tariff; that it was to strike from the dutiable list a great number of articles which yielded but little duty, so little that its collection cost more trouble than it was worth. Yet, as we have it before us, it proposes to put nitrate of soda, muriate of potash, gallic acid, arsenious acid, boracic acid, oxalic acid, bromine, chloride of lime or bleaching-powder, and iodine (crude) each under a duty of 1 per cent.

Now, considering that bromine, though on the free list, has not been imported, how much revenue may we hope to derive from the proposed imposition of a duty of 1 per cent. upon it? Gallic acid will, it is estimated, yield $2.31; arsenious acid, $112, and so on. What a ridiculous mouse is this to be the product of such a mountain of fine promises. But let us not be too hasty. This absurd list embraces chloride of lime, bleaching powder, an essential element in the manufacture of paper, the duties on which are fatally reduced, and it will, it is estimated, take from the manufacturers of that article $7,116; and farmers, makers of gunpowder, and others are expected to pay the Government, under this provision, $13,242 for the privilege of sending ships to Chili for nitrate of soda.

The farmer, though he may be ignorant of the fact, is interested in about an equal degree with the manufacturer in the production of Cologne water, perfumery, cosmetics, and varnishes, because their manufacture secures him a market for his corn, manufactured into alcohol, which he can reach, as I have shown, notwithstanding the charges for transportation.

In the letter from Mr. A. H. Jones, I showed you that chloroform was dutiable in free-trade England at 3*s.* per pound; collodion, at £1 4*s.* per gallon; and Cologne water at 16*s.* 6*d*; sulphuric ether, £1 5*s.*; and that varnish, containing any quantity of alcohol or spirits, pays 12*s.* per gallon.

I bring these provisions of the free-trade British tariff of 1876 to the attention of the committee again because, as England is an importer of grain, they are retained by her for the single purpose of protecting the government's interest in the excise or internal-revenue taxes; but, as we are exporters of grain, similar duties are required to protect our farmers in the enjoyment of the home market for corn for manufacture into alcohol, as well as to protect the revenues of the Government. The oils used in Cologne water and other cosmetics and perfumery and fine soaps are now all free of duty, but this bill proposes to impose a duty of 10 per cent. upon the entire list, embracing oil of almonds; of amber, crude and rectified; of ambergris; of anise or aniseseed, of anthos or rosemary, of bergamot, of cageput, of caraway, of cassia, of cedrat, of chamomile, of cinnamon, of citronella or lemon grass, of civet, of fennel, of jasmine or jessamine, of juglandium, of juniper, of lavender, of mace, oil or attar of roses, oil of poppy, of sesame, or sesamum seed, or bene; of thyme, red, or origanum; of thyme, white; and oil of valerian.

Cologne water is pure alcohol, flavored by one of these oils. Collodion is alcohol, with a slight admixture of gun-cotton. Chloroform is in bulk and weight alcohol. In these forms we not only supply our own people with the essence of American-grown corn, but are exporting it largely. But, as I will show, the provisions of this bill will change all that and compel us to import these articles.

The duty on Cologne water or, as it is sometimes called, perfumed spirit is now $3 per gallon and 50 per cent. ad valorem, which is to be reduced to 75 per cent. ad valorem. Under this change I am assured by experts, some of whom have no connection with the production of or trade in perfumes, Cologne water could not be produced here in competition with that of Germany, whose people not only produce cheap alcohol in connection with the beet-root sugar manufacture, but whose government secures manufacturers a supply of untaxed alcohol.

The same reduction of rate is to be applied to all other perfumery of which alcohol forms the principal ingredient, such as rum essence or oil, bay-rum essence or oil, and all other flavoring extracts.

These provisions may seem to be a blow at feebler branches of manufactures, but, over the shoulders of the manufacturer, they fall upon the head of the farmer; for while he will no longer be able to distill his grain into spirits for the use of manufacturers in the East, he will, if his family uses any of these gentle luxuries, become in so far a consumer of German alcohol.

Like unto this is the treatment of varnish. How widely varnish enters into the practical uses of life few gentlemen know. Some of it is of comparatively little value; other qualities are very high priced, especially those into which alcohol enters. The range is so large that it makes a clear case for compound duties, of which the chairman of the committee seems to have such abhorrence. The present rates are, on varnish valued at $1.50 or less per gallon, 50 cents per gallon and 20 per cent. ad valorem; valued at above $1.50 per gallon, 50 cents per gallon and 25 per cent. ad valorem. The duty proposed for varnish of every grade, whether alcoholic or otherwise, is 50 cents per gallon, which is a reduction to the extent of the ad valorem of 20 or 25 per cent.; but, as if afraid that these provisions might possibly fail to close our market for distilled corn against American farmers, the bill of the committee proposes to transfer all varnish and other gums from the free to the dutiable list. Many of these gums are used in medicinal preparations and others in the mechanic arts. They are in all cases raw material, which cannot be or never have been produced in this country. Alcohol is the solvent of most if not all of them. Gum shellac, which enters very largely into use in the mechanic arts, is to pay the inordinate duty of 5 cents per pound and all other gums 10 per cent.; and lest any gum may be unknown to or have escaped the attention of the committee a provision is inserted that all gums not specifically named are to be dutiable at 10 per cent. The list contains camphor, which the committee expressly determined should be free; and it will be for the courts to decide whether the raw material for India rubber is or is not a gum, and is as follows:

GUMS.—Aloes, amber, Arabic, Australian, Barbary, bdellium, benzoin or benjamin, camphor, cape, copal, Dammar, East India, gamboge, garbanum, guaiacum, Jeddo, kowrie, mastic, myrrh, olebanum, sandarac, Senegal, shellac, and tragacanth.

THE EFFECT OF SIMPLIFICATION ON THE REVENUES AND HONEST IMPORTERS.

But I must hurry on. Let us glance hastily at some other crudities. In the existing free list are included sticks cut to lengths suitable for canes, umbrellas, parasols, and sunshades, and not further advanced than cut to lengths. Not being enumerated or covered by an n. o. p., the committee, it is evident, intended they should continue to be free. But if gentlemen will refer to the duty on umbrellas, on page 45, they will find that by lines 1098, 1099, and 1100 sticks, handles, &c., are to be dutiable at 35 per cent. So that, by way of simplifying the tariff, the examiner and appraiser when opening an invoice of sticks must decide a priori, or by instinct, which of them will be used for umbrellas or sunshades or parasols and assess a duty of 35 per cent. upon them, while those that will be used for canes or other purposes are to be admitted free. Do not such provisions simplify the tariff? Another illustration of this simplification will occur when a cargo of short wool comes up for appraisement. The examiner will report it as "wool for felt-carpeting, for the production of certain kinds of cloth, and for working in with shoddy in other sorts of cloths," and the appraiser will charge it with 35 per cent. under the general provisions for duty on wool. He will in all probability be right, but the importer will indignantly protest that it is to be consumed in the manufacture of hats, and is therefore by a special clause to be admitted at 20 per cent.

Under this beautiful process of simplification we shall import no short wool for use in cloth or carpet; but the figures of the statistical bureau for the next year will show that we will have imported in a single year hatters' wool enough to make hats for our own people and our foreign customers for the next quarter of a century. Fortunately for the importers they need not hold the excess as it can be manufactured into cloths and carpets to the ruin of honest importers who will have paid the higher rate of duty.

Another effort at simplification may possibly embarrass some of the officers. If flaxseed oil be imported it must pay a duty of 30 cents a gallon, and whiting $5 a ton. No difficulty will arise about these articles when imported separately, the duty on each being fixed by the terms of the bill; but with them may come an invoice of putty which is simply whiting, and flaxseed oil advanced in value by the labor which was required to compound them into that article. What shall the appraiser do? Shall he impose the oil duty? No; he cannot measure putty by the gallon, and it would be to impose an inordinate duty on whiting if he could. A careful study of the law, should this bill pass into that condition, will relieve him, for, though both ingredients are dutiable, he will find that when their value has been increased by labor and nicely-adjusted combination of the two articles they are to be admitted free of duty, and his difficult problem will be solved by this delicious system of simplification.

But, Mr. Chairman, let me invite your attention to a part of the bill which will satisfy everybody that the committee knows all about everything and was right in saving its precious time by refusing to be counseled by practical men.

A striking case of simplification arises in the matter of nuts. Nuts are now admitted under specific duties: almonds at 6 cents per pound, other nuts at different rates down to 1 cent per pound, and the cocoa-nut is admitted free. Why make an exception and admit the cocoa-nut free and impose duties on all other nuts? The hull of the cocoa-nut affords a fiber from which heavy door-mats and carpets for offices and depots are made and is a very valuable raw material. Therefore it was deemed proper to admit the cocoa-nut with its hull on free. But in this bill the rate on almonds is 6 cents a pound if they are imported as almonds and 3 cents a pound if imported as nuts. The rate on all nuts is 3 cents a pound. So that the fool who will import his almonds as almonds will by his own folly put them at 6 cents a pound, while the man who with good sense brings them in under the general name of nuts will get them at 3 cents. Cocoa-nuts with the hulls on would by this duty be effectually prohibited and we would have to fall upon some other material for matting for our doors and offices. The manufacture of cocoa mats and carpets is not a leading industry, but its destruction would deprive a few thousand people of employment.

A DISTINCTION WITHOUT A DIFFERENCE.

I have shown you that madder and munjeet or Indian madder and alizarine and all extracts thereof are to be free under an express provision of this bill, which as the chairman of the committee told us has no free list. There are only four fixed colors and all of these every manufacturer of textiles must use. They are madder, indigo, cochineal, and aniline black. There is not a gentleman on this floor, or a page, whose clothes do not show the presence of indigo or aniline black, and there is probably not one of us whose carpets and the clothing of whose wife and children, if fortunate enough to have them, do not show madder, cochineal, indigo, and aniline black. Can any one tell me why it is that madder is to continue duty free, while indigo, cochineal, and aniline black are to be made dutiable at high rates unless it be for the purpose of simplifying the tariff? Yet such is one of the remarkable features of this bill. But as if to make the ruin of our producers of textiles certain beyond a peradventure all dyes and dye-stuffs and the materials for them are transferred from the free to the dutiable list. Thus it occurs that, by the force of provisions the effect of which its author does not seem to understand, this bill, in contradiction of his assurances, embraces more dutiable articles and imposes on the officials of the customs more embarrassing questions than are embraced by or arise under the existing tariff law.

THE IMPORTATION OF GOLD AND SILVER PROHIBITED.

Most of the members of the committee profess to be in haste to resume specie payments, and I do not know whether the provisions to which I am about to call attention were put in for the protection of the bonanza kings of Nevada or in the hope of reviving the working of the abandoned gold mines of Georgia and the Carolinas. Of one thing, however, I am certain, that it was not for the purpose of facilitating the resumption of coin payments, as coin is made dutiable at 40 per cent. and gold and silver bullion at 20 per cent; and so determined has the majority of the committee been to prohibit the importation of foreign gold and silver to compete with the production of our native mines that it has removed from the free list even the sweepings of jewelry and gold-beaters' shops, &c., named on the free list of our tariff as "gold and silver sweepings." It takes them out of that list and makes them dutiable at 20 per cent. I am in favor of protecting American industries and am a good deal of a paper-money man, but I cannot believe that it is wise in the present condition of our finances to thus prohibit the importation of gold and silver by putting a minimum duty of 20 per cent. on them. Under the provisions of this novel bill a curious coin or medal of gold or silver cannot be imported for a museum without paying a duty of 40 per cent. on it.

THE BILL CANNOT BE PERFECTED.

Gentlemen say we can go through this bill in Committee of the Whole and correct these errors. They are mistaken. It is utterly wanting in governing principle, and its provisions are so helter-skelter and incongruous that it would be easier to blot the whole thing out and begin anew. From now until next December would not be long enough for the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, proceeding as rapidly as I have ever seen it proceed with a tariff bill, to correct the blunders, stupidities, incongruities, and absurdities embodied in the committee's bill.

I listened with amazement to the statement of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means as to the decline of wool-growing in this country. I had studied the question through the books of American and foreign writers on the subject, and when in 1871 and 1872 I was compelled to escape from the region of tide-water in order to be able to breathe, I spent the time in our mountain regions among the flocks, and thus studied it practically. I saw how the little Mexican sheep was being transformed into the finest breeds for mutton and wool growing. I once went down the Pacific coast on a steamer that carried more than seventy sheep that had been sent by express under careful attendance from the hills of Vermont to San Francisco. They were on their way to the beautiful valleys of Southern California for the improvement of the immense flocks that feed on the perennial grasses of that country. I could not therefore accept the statements of the gentleman or the columns of figures by which he sought to sustain them, and again determined to invoke the assistance of the practical men who had been excluded from the committee-rooms. I accordingly wrote to my friend, John L. Hays, esq., secretary of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, whom I regard as the best informed man on this subject in this country. His reply was as follows:

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your note in which you call my attention to a statement contained in the speech of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of April 9, the statement being as follows:

"A few figures compiled from the reports of the Department of Agriculture for the years 1865 to 1866 and 1874 to 1876 will serve to show that the present tariff has not proved beneficial to the woolen manufacturers or to the wool-growers, especially to those wool-growers residing in the States on this side of the Mississippi, in whose interest this tariff was supposed to have been especially made:

Name of State.	Number of sheep, February 1, 1867.	Number of sheep, January 1, 1877.
Ohio	7,159,177	3,900,000
Michigan	4,028,767	2,100,000
Pennsylvania	3,456,568	1,607,000
New York	5,373,005	1,897,500
Indiana	3,033,870	1,175,000
Illinois	2,764,072	1,258,500
Wisconsin	1,664,338	1,151,100
Total	27,479,797	13,089,300

"We have in these States a decrease of 52 per cent. since this tariff was enacted. If we include New England, the total decrease in the States east of the Mississippi will be found to be quite as great. The whole number of sheep in the United States in 1867 was 42,000,000, (see Agricultural report for 1871, page 39;) in 1877, 35,804,000; a decrease of 15 per cent."

The statement incorporated in the speech of Mr. WOOD to show the unfavorable influence of the existing tariff upon the production of wool in this country I am compelled to regard as not only fallacious, but willfully deceptive, because while showing the apparent decline of wool-growing in certain of the older States, it omits the increase in the new States and Territories, and makes no reference to the changed character of the sheep husbandry of the older States. While it is true that the total number of sheep in the United States was greater in 1867 than in 1877, the improvement of sheep, the greatly increased weight of the fleeces upon the common or Merino sheep, and the introduction of mutton sheep producing heavier fleeces, in the old States especially, has made the production of wool in 1877 to greatly exceed that grown upon the larger number of sheep in 1867. The estimate for 1867 as given by the Agricultural Department is 147,000,000 pounds. The estimate of Mr. Lynch, accepted as the highest authority on the statistics of wool production, for 1866 is that the clip of the old States was 120,000,000 pounds, and of the Pacific States and Territories 17,000,000; a total of 137,000,000 pounds. He states the production or clip in 1877 to have been in the old States 117,000,000 pounds and of the Pacific States and Territories to have been 91,250,000 pounds, a decrease in the old States of but 3,000,000, and a gain in the Pacific States and Territories of 74,250,000 pounds; a total in the United States of 208,250,000, and a gain in eleven years of 71,250,000 pounds—a result totally different from that indicated by the tables quoted by Mr. WOOD.

Mr. G. W. Bond, a wool-dealer and with no aympathy with high-wool duties, but a thoroughly honest man, says, in quoting these figures of Mr. Lynch:

"This shows to what a wonderful extent the high duties on wool stimulated its growth in the new States and Territories where the wool grown is for the most part from Merino or grade-Merino sheep; while in the old States attention is year by year more given to the growth of combing wools."

The State of New York has very largely substituted the more profitable long combing-wool or mutton sheep for the Merinos generally grown before 1867. From returns furnished by the State commissioners it appears that of about 1,100,000 sheep in Wisconsin about one-qunrter is of the long-wooled or mutton race. Of 8,000,000 pounds of wool produced in Michigan in 1875, about one-quarter is of the same race. In Oregon, of 2,000,000 pounds produced in 1875 the quantity of long combing-wools is in the same proportion.

The encouragement given to wool-growing in the new States by the tariff of 1867 has not been injurious to the old States. It has furnished a profitable market for their surplus sheep. It has encouraged the more profitable business of breeding the more costly, high-blood sheep for improving the stock of sheep in the new States and has made the sheep husbandry of the older States really more profitable even with diminished numbers. It has not destroyed the sheep husbandry of the older States, it has changed its character.

The diminution in the number of our sheep since 1867, when they reached the high number of forty-two millions, is quite erroneously attributed to the tariff of that period. The high number of sheep attained in 1867 was due to a higher protection which had existed for the several preceding years than has existed before or since.

The number of sheep in 1861 was 21,500,000, producing 55,000,0 0 pounds of wool. Under the stimulus of the war demand for clothing for our armies and the protection afforded by the premium on gold the number of sheep nearly doubled in six years. The premium on gold alone made this the highest protective period the wool-growers of this country ever had.

The depression was produced by causes absolutely independent of the actual effect of the tariff of 1867. In anticipation of the increase in custom duties on wool a quantity of manufactured goods had been imported in 1866 equal to about half of the entire importations of the five previous years, namely, $57,115,901, against an annual average importation of $23,208,71. The importation of wool in that year was 67,917,031 pounds, an increase of 24,058,877 over that of 1865, and almost equal to the average of the four years of the war when a double supply was required. In addition an enormous supply of military clothing was thrown on the market at this period, over 2,000,000 of one article (overcoats) having been sold.

These causes had the effect of reducing the price of Ohio fleece wool in the year 1868, in the principal market of the country, Boston, from the high price 60.90 in gold, which it had attained in 1863, to 33.88 in gold, the very lowest point reached in a period of twenty years. It was this ruinously low price, and not the tariff of 1867, which killed off the flocks in Ohio and Michigan. The destruction took place immediately upon the fall of wool. It commenced in the autumn of 1868, and a reduction of over four millions of sheep took place in the following winter. The decrease in Ohio from 7,022,495 to 4,302,904, amounting to 43 per cent., took place in three years. A large part of the decrease was due rather to disease than the knife. Flocks were neglected, foot-rot, scab, and numerous other forms of disease resulted from starvation and want of shelter. It was the tariff of 1867 alone which arrested complete annihilation. It gave hope to the more intelligent wool-growers. Flocks were culled of diseased animals. Inexperienced growers gave up the business. A more careful and economical system of sheep husbandry was pursued, and it is the universal testimony of practical wool-growers that there never has been a period of such healthy progress in the American sheep husbandry, although with but moderate profits, as that which succeeded the destruction of 1868, a progress and stability mainly due to the tariff of 1867.

This charge that the tariff of 1867 killed off our sheep is an old one, and was long ago refuted by men the most competent to speak on the subject. Mr. Samuel Archer, now of Kansas City, formerly the most prominent sheep-breeder in West Virginia, said in 1869:

"I mean to say that in 1867 one-third or about ten millions of the sheep then existing should have been dead; not because there were too many but because they were too worthless, and occupied ground that might and would be filled with better ones. The vast majority of the great number that is now disappearing are of this comparatively worthless class, and it seems that this is preparing the way for improvements in all kinds of sheep."

The italics are Mr. Archer's.

Mr. A. M. Garland, president of the Illinois Wool-Growers' Association, who had 8,000 sheep of his own in 1866, said in 1870, in the Western Rural, published in Chicago:

"The stimulus of paying prices for wool during the war rescued from the shambles a considerable portion of the animals (wethers) ordinarily turned over to the butcher, at two or three years old. That of course added largely to the number thrown upon the market when wool began to decline in price. The same cause, (a good price for wool,) coupled with the demand for sheep at high prices, encouraged an unusual, in some instances, an unnatural increase by breeding. (In several instances within our knowledge ewe lambs were bred.) Every ewe was bred without regard to merits of fleece or constitutional characteristics. Pampered or otherwise worthless rams were bought of peddlers; of whose honesty as little was known as of the antecedents of the animals they sold. The inevitable result of such recklessness was the production of animals worthless for either breeding or shearing. Of these latter, with few exceptions, are made up "whole flocks slaughtered for their pelts or tallow," to which the orators against the wool tariff refer with such gusto. Their destruction is no loss to the country and a gain to their owners. An inferior animal is a poor investment at any price, and a thorough culling will result in an elevation of the general standard of the flocks of the country and go far toward silencing the too prevalent cry of 'sheep won't pay.'"

You may judge of the marvelous improvements made in sheep husbandry and in the wool-bearing capacity of the animal by the following extract from a letter dated April 21, 1878, written to the undersigned by Mr. William G. Markham, president of the New York Sheep-Breeders' and Wool-Growers' Association, who, speaking of improvements made within the last ten years in Merinos, says:

"This additional care has enabled our breeders to attain greater and more valuable fleeces than ever before produced from this variety of sheep. Our flocks are small, usually containing from fifty to one hundred breeding ewes, the clip of which will, in some instances, average upward of fifteen pounds each, while selections of ewes not in breeding often shear as high as eighteen to twenty-two pounds, unwashed; which scour from six to seven and a half pounds. The live weight of these ewes reaches ninety to one hundred and thirty pounds. The stock rams produce from twenty-six pounds to thirty-six pounds; yielding about the same proportion of scoured wool, weight one hundred and fifty pounds to one hundred and ninety pounds."

And these sheep are the direct descendants, without admixture of other blood, of the importations from Spain prior to 1813, which gave three to five pounds unwashed wool from ewes, and seven to nine pounds from rams.

These improvements have been encouraged by the stable legislation which the wool industry of the country has enjoyed for the last ten years.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN L. HAYES,
Secretary of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers.

Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY.

IRON AND STEEL.

Reference has been made by the chairman of the committee and other gentlemen to the iron and steel schedule, and it has been privately asserted on the floor of the House and in the committee-room that the Iron and Steel Association assented to the reductions of duty it proposes. I deny the statement, and am authorized to say that many of the leading iron and steel makers of the country came to Washington by invitation and were assured that the bill that would be reported by the committee would inevitably pass the House. They were told by very high authority that their only chance to have a voice in making the iron and steel tariff was to make a concession and state the lowest rates of duty under which they could live; and even under this pressure as a body they refused to make any terms, but said, "Let us go down with all other industries, if it be the judgment of Congress that the manufacturing power of the country must be prostrated." The Iron and Steel Association has earnestly protested against the mad project of revising the tariff at a time when prices are abnormally low throughout the world. I have the stenographic notes of an interview between Mr. James M. Swank, secretary of the Iron and Steel Association, and myself on that point, with extracts from letters from a number of the leading members of that association in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and other States, showing that eight or ten of their number were entrapped into stating the lowest rates under which they believed the best situated works might be able to live, which admissions were used by the committee to establish rates for the government of the whole iron and steel trades. These notes read as follows:

Stenographic report of a statement made by James M. Swank, secretary of the American Iron and Steel Association, to Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY, April 29, 1878.

The American Iron and Steel Association is composed of over three hundred firms engaged in the manufacture of iron and steel in more than twenty States of the Union. It has at no time in any manner expressed its willingness to accept any part of Mr. WOOD's tariff bill. On the 12th day of February, at a called meeting of the association held at its rooms in Philadelphia, resolutions were formally adopted disapproving of any revision of the tariff at the present time. At this meeting over fifty manufacturers were present, and letters were read from other members of the association, all advocating a policy of resistance to a reduction of duties as contemplated in Mr. WOOD's bill. Again, on the 2d day of April, after the revised bill of Mr. WOOD had been reported from the Committee of Ways and Means to the House, the executive committee of the association was called together to consider the measure. At this meeting of the committee letters were read from many members of the association earnestly urging that it maintain the position originally assumed with regard to tariff legislation by the present Congress. These letters enabled the committee to speak authoritatively and conclusively for the association, and it unanimously resolved, both for itself and for the manufacturers whose letters had been read, that it could not recede from the position originally assumed by the association in February, and a resolution to this effect was adopted.

No one of all the members of the association has written to its executive officers approving of either the original or the revised bill of Mr. WOOD. The Bulletin of the association has, on the contrary, week after week, assigned reasons why the bill should not be adopted, and printed statements, in pamphlet form, elaborating these reasons, have been twice submitted to Congress.

It is not denied that a few iron and steel manufacturers, less than a dozen in number, have made suggestions to Mr. WOOD of rates of duties to be incorporated in his bill. These suggestions were made under the pressure of intimations that, if the iron and steel manufacturers would not accept a small reduction of duties, larger reductions would be insisted upon by the present or the next Congress, in which event the manufacturers would see their business destroyed. For fear that this threatened policy might be carried out, rates of duties were suggested to Mr. WOOD which it was thought would not be destructive to the interests of the manufacturers making them; but none of these manufacturers, if left entirely free to act for themselves, would for one moment have consented to any reduction of duties whatever. The gentlemen would not have made the suggestions to Mr. WOOD which they did, embodying slight reductions of duties on articles competing with their own products, but for implied promises that, if this bill became a law, the tariff would not be altered for several years to come. After these rates of duties were submitted to Mr. WOOD, and his bill was perfected, in his opening speech in advocacy of the bill he plainly absolves these gentlemen from any implied obligations to support it, for he expressly gives them to understand that, when opportunity offers, further reductions of duties will be recommended and insisted upon.

All the iron and steel manufacturers of the country who have submitted schedules or rates of duties to Mr. WOOD will not exceed ten in number, and even their suggestions were not adopted in full by Mr. WOOD, but very important ones were disregarded by him; as, for instance, the suggestion by Mr. James Park, jr., which was earnestly insisted upon, that a definition of steel which would distinguish it from iron should be incorporated in the bill, to avoid erroneous classification by the custom-house officers, and to avoid the admission of steel at rates of duties which should only be applicable to iron. It should be borne in mind that these ten gentlemen at no time assumed to represent any persons but themselves. Since the revised bill has been reported to the House, and they have had an opportunity to study it as a whole, in its bearings not only upon their own industry but upon other industries, they are not satisfied with it, and do not desire its passage.

The following extracts from letters to the secretary from prominent members of the association are given as illustrations of the views entertained of the Wood tariff bill by iron and steel manufacturers generally:

From H. W. Oliver, jr., of Pittsburgh, March 16, 1878:

"Your telegram just received. I inclose the schedule as requested. You will notice the concessions are very slight. Our aim is to induce the committee to quit their ad valorem views and adopt specific duties. This schedule was given by request of members of the committee, and only as the individual views of a few of us, and in no way is binding on our association or on members of Congress."

From A. B. Stone, of Cleveland, March 29, 1878:

"My impression is that the business of the country cannot bear a long discussion upon the tariff question, and that it will be better for all the manufacturing interests to strenuously oppose from the beginning any change in the present tariff, and kill the bill now before Congress at the earliest possible moment."

From J. B. Moorhead, of Philadelphia, March 30, 1878:

"The present duty on pig-iron and scrap-iron is barely sufficient to prevent importations. The proposed reduction to $5 on pig iron and $4 and $6 on scrap, would be a very serious blow to all pig-iron producers."

From William Means, of Cincinnati, April 15, 1878:

"Yours with regard to the Wood tariff bill received. In reply I have to say that Mr. SAYLER, our member in Congress, from the first district, was good enough to advise with me respecting the proposed modifications, and that I and my friends here engaged in the iron business have strongly urged the necessity of making no changes whatever. We will continue to do so at every opportunity."

From James Park, jr., of Pittsburgh, April 27, 1878:

"Before leaving for home this evening I will take time to write to you that I have read carefully the argument against the adoption of the Wood tariff, and pronounce it admirable; I am, in a word, greatly pleased with it."

From W. D. Wood & Co., of Pittsburgh, February 6, 1878:

"We are of course opposed to any reduction of duty on polished or other sheet iron."

From the Collins Company, Collinsville, Connecticut, April 11, 1878:

"We are utterly and entirely opposed to the Wood tariff."

From R. N. Gere, of Syracuse, New York, February 6, 1878:

"I fully concur in the importance of a strong and concerted action in the protest proposed, and authorize you now to sign my name to the paper that may be agreed upon by your meeting."

From Oliver Williams, Catasauqua, Pennsylvania, February 12, 1878:

"I will do all in my power in this valley to further any action taken by the meeting to-day."

From R. E. Blankenship, Richmond, Virginia, February 11, 1878:

"Your circular of 2d instant is to hand. I cannot arrange to attend the meeting to-morrow, but I cordially sympathize with the object and hope the iron-workers, masters and men, will make such a demonstration as will be felt at Washington."

From Charles J. Nourse, Columbia, Pennsylvania, March 29, 1878:

"I would suggest for consideration that the executive committee of the association write a short, plain, strong letter objecting to any changes of the tariff at present."

From Horace L. Brooke, of Baltimore, February 6, 1878:

"Are you watching the new tariff bill? The duty named on scrap, $1 per ton, would be ruinous. The English furnaces would run their iron direct from the furnace into some rough castings, break them up, call them scrap iron, and literally flood our country with pig-iron paying but $1 per ton duty. Iron ore should come in free, but instead of making it free the duty is to be increased 40 per cent., and the duty on pig-iron reduced 30 per cent."

From Hon. D. J. Morrell, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, April 1, 1878:

"I am in favor of opposing the passage of the new tariff bill upon general principles, and because of the features which I regard as extremely injurious. If it is not possible to defeat it as a whole, I advise fighting it in detail; in short, the acceptance of nothing. I regard it as the right policy to protest against any reduction of duties."

From William P. Shinn, of Pittsburgh, April 8, 1878:

"I wish to be understood that I agree with you entirely that this is not the time when a reduction of the tariff should be made, and also that the proper way to revise the tariff is the plan you suggest of having a commission appointed to examine thoroughly into the subject."

From W. E. C. Coxe, Reading, Pennsylvania, February 11, 1878:

"The most dangerous element in the new bill, as it threatens to damage the interests in which I am concerned, is the reduction of the duty on wrought scrap-iron from $8 to $1 per ton. It will cause a depreciation of 33 per cent. in the value of the iron rails now in our roads, and the country will be flooded with old rails from Canada and Europe, to the detriment of our own supply."

From W. C. Cronemeyer, McKeesport, Pennsylvania, November 28, 1877:

"Inclosed we take leave to render you a pamphlet in which we have set forth the importance of introducing the manufacture of tin, terne, and tagger plates in this country, as well as the obstacles which lay in the road of such undertaking. Our firm has now been laboring for several years to gain a foothold in this enterprise, and although we have succeeded to manufacture an article which is equal to any imported, we have not been able to realize a reasonable profit out of it, and have been compelled to manufacture other goods which run against a home competition instead of a foreign. As you are well aware, the only cause for this is the want of a proper protective duty on tin, terne, and tagger plates, and we therefore request you to lay our case before your worthy association with a view of assisting us to induce Congress to increase the duty on these articles to at least 2½ cents per pound, (same as galvanized iron.)"

Before leaving this subject let me say that in the iron and steel schedule as elsewhere higher duties are in many cases put upon the material than on the advanced article produced therefrom. Thus the duty on steel such as is used for files and steel pens is increased, and those on files and steel pens are reduced. What with the increase of duty on the material and the decrease of duty on the product, if there be truth in the theory announced by the friends of the bill, that the duty imposed inevitably adds itself to the price of an article, the changes must ruin the manufacturers of files and steel pens throughout our country.

PAPER.

But, Mr. Chairman, the paper-makers of the country have graver cause of complaint against the committee than the iron and steel men. The most fortunate of these establishments cannot live under the provisions of this bill, though in so far as it proposes to admit rags free it is an improvement on the original bill. On this point I asked the views of several gentlemen largely engaged in the trade, and say what I have said advisedly. One of them, who is well known to me as a diligent student of social science and an experienced and energetic business man, Mr. C. O. Chapin, of Springfield, Massachusetts, responded by sending me a copy of a protest he had handed to the chairman of the committee, but of which I had not heard. I will let Mr. Chapin speak for himself and his trade, by submitting the practical part of his paper, which is as follows:

First, as to paper. The classification of paper and manufactures of, &c., as it stands in the existing tariff, was made after a careful examination of European tariffs in comparison with our own at the time the tariff was made, and was then thought to be an improvement on them all. It was approved by both producers and consumers, the importers themselves offering no objections. With a view to meet as far as possible your own desire to simplify the tariff bill you were making by lessening the number of classes, and to yield in a measure to a call for a general reduction in duties, although no petition for a reduction in the duties on paper have been presented to Congress, the paper manufacturers, through Mr. Russell and myself as their representatives, proposed to you to make but two classes, embracing all paper and manufactures of, &c. The present tariff classification is as follows, namely:

"Paper, sized or unsized, suitable only for printing paper, 25 per cent.; printing, unsized, used for books and newspapers exclusively, 20 per cent.; manufactures of, or of which paper is a component material, not provided for, 35 per cent.; sheathing-paper, 10 per cent. Paper boxes, 35 per cent. Paper envelopes, 35 per cent. Paper hangings and paper for screens or fire-boards; paper, antiquarian, demy, drawing, elephant, foolscap, imperial, letter, and all other paper not provided for, 35 per cent. Papier mâché, manufactures, articles and wares of, 35 per cent."

The classification in the schedule presented for your approval by Mr. Russell and myself, after it had received the approval of manufacturers and consumers of paper, is as follows, namely:

"Paper, sized or unsized, suitable only for printing, 20 per cent. Paper and all manufactures of, or of which paper is the component material of chief value, not otherwise provided for, 30 per cent."

A rigid adherence to the idea that there should be but one rate of duty to apply to all kinds of paper grouped in a single class would be unfair to the manufacturers of the higher-priced paper. The difference in the first cost of the plant necessary to produce equal quantities of the high and low grades of paper, the difference in cost of labor and the time occupied in manipulating and preparing for market and the mode of distributing the two classes of goods all contribute to make them proper subjects for separate treatment in tariff legislation. In your bill you make many classes of textile fabrics of whatever material, of all metals and manufactures, of tobacco, wood, marble, &c. There is a greater variety of paper and manufacturers of, &c., than of most of these materials, and if exceptions to the rule are made in regard to them the same reasons are applicable to paper. Nearly all European countries recognize the distinction and none make so comprehensive a grouping as is done in the schedule presented by us. You take from the better grades of paper 42 per cent. of the present duty, which would be disastrous in the extreme to the manufacturers in this country and to the laborers employed by them. At the same time the revenue would not be so large as under the existing duty. Therefore, as the consumers do not ask for any reduction of the duty, as the revenue will gain nothing, but rather lose by the change you propose, and the manufacturers and their employés will be most seriously injured by so sweeping a reduction, we hope you will review your action in regard to the matter and adopt the schedule offered.

Second. In regard to placing a duty on rags and waste material for making paper, also on hide-cuttings for making sizing for the higher grades of paper, I would say that rags, &c., have been on the free list in this country for many years. No European country, save Switzerland, places an import duty, though nearly all put an export duty on them. This export duty is equivalent to 10 per cent. on their cost to us. Now we are to be subjected to an import duty of 10 per cent. and a still further tax of 10 per cent. on the duty itself by reason of the fact that most of our rags come from countries having discriminating duties against the United States. With this triple burden placed upon us, we can truly say that our burdens are greater than we can bear. The same facts apply to hide-cuttings. These two items alone make from 50 to 60 per cent. of the cost of the cheaper grades of writing-paper. In the belief that these articles were permanently placed on the free list millions of money have been invested in this country in the manufacture of paper. Is it just to jeopard so great an industry by so violent a change of policy?

In looking further at your tariff bill with reference to its bearing on the paper interest, I notice that the old rates of duty are kept intact on the following named materials, all of which are items entering into the cost of making paper:

a Coal,
a Sponges for filters,
a Twine,
a Ultramarine,
b Duties are retained on (though modified:)
b Canvas drier felts,
b Woolen felts,
b Brass wire,
b All colors for coloring paper,
b Rubber and leather belts,
b Soda-ash,
b Vitriol.

Cochineal taken from free-list and charged 50 per cent. besides the general (b) duties on all building material and the metals used in constructing machinery and making repairs which add largely to the cost of the plant and the keeping up of the same. Briefly, the comparative condition of the paper industry under the old and new tariffs would be as follows:

The old rates of duty retained on all articles marked a—modified duties on articles marked b.

Rags taken from free list and charged about 11 per cent.; cochineal taken from free list and charged about 50 per cent.; hide-cuttings taken from free list and charged about 10 per cent.; and the duty on the better kind of printing-paper reduced 20 per cent. and on writing paper reduced 42 per cent. Alum alone of the dutiable articles in the old list as paper-making material is changed to the free list by not being mentioned at all.

In the name of the whole paper interest of the country I must protest against such treatment of an industry so important to the country in its civilization and education.

SILK.

So, too, with silk goods. The duties on silk are reduced, and the coloring matter and other essential elements of the manufacture are transferred from the free dutiable list. A higher rate of duty is imposed on silk goods in the piece than on embroidered articles. There are tens of thousands of women who make a respectable living by embroidering silk for the use of man and woman; and yet this bill proposes to put a higher duty upon the piece goods than it does on the same goods after they shall have been cut and wrought into shapes and elaborately embroidered. Why should poor American women have so pleasant a means of making a living? Why should it not be transferred to those of France and Germany, which will enable foreign consignees who sell only through their agents in New York to accumulate fortunes more rapidly?

LACE.

In submitting this letter I enable one who is engaged in one branch of silk manufacture to speak for himself and his trade, and I think gentlemen will agree with me in thinking he makes a strong case against a committee that proposes to reduce the duty on lace from 60 to 20 per cent.

NEW YORK, February 18, 1878.

To the honorable the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN: Some of the important points in reference to the rate of duties to be imposed on lace goods are, in brief, as follows:

The business of manufacturing laces in this country was commenced, and so far has been continued with gradual success, under a tariff of 60 per cent.

Buildings have been erected; a large amount of expensive machinery imported from England, at a duty cost of 35 to 45 per cent.; skilled designers, draughtsmen, and operators brought over from England and France. Besides the capital invested and all engaged in making lace by machinery, there are also many women making, and others learning to make, lace by hand.

So far, the business has been established in the confident belief that the import duties would not be reduced, or would at least equal the rate imposed on silk dress goods.

There are many reasons why lace goods should have a higher rate of duty than any other textile fabric.

The machines employed are expensive, some of them costing over $5,000 to import, weighing over 10,000 pounds, requiring in their use constant repairs. These machines are intricate and difficult to operate, requiring skilled men who have learned their trade.

The business at the best is hazardous, as is proved by the history of lace manufacturers in Europe.

The article, in respect to value, is perishable; the style, make, figure, and color, all subject to the caprice of fashion.

When it is remembered that lace manufacturers do not spin or throw their yarns, that these yarns, specially made for them, bear a high rate of duty in the old and in the proposed tariff bill, it must be evident that lace should pay a higher rate of duty than any other article of dress, in order to insure the manufacturer a just return on his capital.

There is no other article made where so much of its value is composed of the labor in its manufacture, for it is its chief element of cost.

In the proposed tariff there is no other class of textile goods so reduced in the rate.

Silk goods, with one or two exceptions, pay 50 per cent. They are made on looms very simple and inexpensive, as compared to the lace machine; the former are worked by girls, while the latter require men skilled in the art.

Carpets made on Jacquard looms, requiring less skill, pay 50 per cent.; even cotton and mohair yarns, made by machinery still less costly, are made to pay from 50 to 75 per cent. duty.

In making cotton laces much of the yarn required costs from 70 cents to $1 per pound, which, at the proposed rate, would pay 60 to 75 per cent. duty, while the lace it is made into pays only 20 per cent.

Heretofore we have been unable to make cotton laces under a duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem, owing to this high rate of duty on the yarns.

The production has been confined to silk lace, the raw material of which has been admitted free of duty.

The manufacturers of laces in this country never believed that the Government would impose a less duty than is put on the best class of dress-goods.

If the rate 20 per cent. is to prevail, or any less rate than is imposed on other silk goods, it will deprive many worthy persons of an occupation and a livelihood, cause valuable machinery to rust, capital to be sunk, and, more than that, will destroy a new industry in this country just as it bids fair to be, as in Europe, a source of wealth.

In the past twelve years great progress has been made in the manufacture of laces in our country, in evidence of which we refer you to the samples forwarded to your committee.

The following is an abstract of the award given to American laces at the Centennial: "Product, silk laces; commended as an attractive exhibit of guipure, cashmere, and other laces and trimmings; also for a general assortment of net goods, highly commendable for excellent fabrication. This exhibit is noticeable as illustrative of an important manufacture just introduced into the United States by the exhibitor."

With the raw material free or an equitable adjustment of duties on the material and the product, Americans will yet excel in this industry, and also produce better lace machinery, more simple and more durable.

Laces are often combined and connected with silk dress-goods, cotton, worsted, and mohair yarns, and goods in various kinds of garments, and in many different ways. If silk lace has a different rate of duty, the appraiser has always a difficult task to decide the question of "component material" and "chief value."

It is difficult to tell where lace begins and ends; how fine or coarse shall be the meshes; how much solid, how much open work; whether it shall be made by hand or on what class of machines.

If, then, lace has a less rate of duty than other goods of same material, the importer will invoice such goods as lace, and endeavor to bring them in at the lowest rate.

The appraisers would have the difficult task to decide what is and what is not lace. This would prove a source of litigation, and would require legislation on the part of Congress to define the nature of and limit the bounds of lace fabrics.

Although all lace fabrics should have, as we hold, a higher rate of duty than is imposed on other textile fabrics, yet one uniform rate of duty on dress-goods, laces and embroideries would remove all difficulties of the appraiser, as he would have only the question of invoice value to decide.

The only reason advanced in favor of low rates on laces is that it would prevent smuggling.

The amount of laces smuggled is trifling, and generally for the benefit of the fair smuggler. The amount does not probably equal the proportion of other dress-goods, and is not worthy to be mentioned as a basis of tariff legislation. Fine laces cannot be sold so as to pay the risk; for smugglers know that respectable and wealthy ladies, who buy that class of laces, will not buy of smugglers or any of kin to them.

These buyers would only go to houses of reputation, as one would to a jeweler for a diamond, or a banker of reputation for a bond not forged or stolen.

There is no other fabric that can be so easily undervalued in the invoice of importation, without detection, as laces. It is undervaluation that we should guard against, and for that we must have appraisers experienced, honest and true.

Laces are not a necessity, but a luxury used by the rich. That they will bear the highest rate of duty without being felt a burden, is an important fact for the Government. A duty on lace goods equal to the highest laid upon silk, mohair, worsted, and woolen dress-goods, and on cotton and mohair yarns, will prove a source of great revenue to the Treasury that should not be lost.

Respectfully,

A. G. JENNINGS,
(On behalf of himself and other lace manufacturers.)

Thus, Mr. Chairman, all through the bill you will find provisions which must disturb industry and destroy capital invested in productive pursuits. Sir, in this period of depression its adoption would involve a revolution. Industry stands appalled. The wool-grower of the West can get no price for his wool, because the manufacturer of the East has no remunerative market for his fabrics and does not know what protection he is to have against foreign competition in the future. One thing he does know, which is that if this bill is to prevail his mill must close and add to the millions of people now unemployed. It will entirely close forges, furnaces, and factories, so that all industries will be paralyzed. Who will feed then the hungry working-people and what army will restrain manifestations of their discontent? I say it is a revolutionary measure. The time to revise a tariff and reduce customs duties is when a country is prosperous and prices are advancing. No nation ever undertook such a revision as this bill proposes in a time of such universal depression and despondency.

A QUESTION OF WAGES.

I regard this bill as an iniquitous one. Its provisions all aim at the further prostration of wages and the wage-earning classes. Its theory is that labor and capital so invested as to employ labor have no right to protection against any competition, though it be absolutely destructive. Let us contemplate the results of such legislation. Each day brings us accounts of fresh strikes against further reductions of wages by British workmen. Wages are being forced down below even a living rate in England, and, as I shall presently show, the great capitalists have determined to pursue this policy until they shall in spite of protection be able to undersell us in our own markets. Listen to the paragraphs on this subject which appeared in a single issue of Ryland's Iron Trade Circular, that of April 6:

The coal owners of West Yorkshire have given notice of their intention to reduce the wages of the coal miners 5 per cent.

Between two and three hundred men and boys have been locked out at Mitchell's main colliery, Wombwell in consequence of their refusing to accept a reduction of wages for working coal in a certain part of the mine, besides the general reduction of 5 per cent.

The majority of the smaller slate quarries in North Wales yesterday gave notice of a decrease of wages averaging about 10 per cent.

At Messrs. Samuelson's Newport Iron-Works the men refused to accept the 10 per cent. reduction and the firm at once began to damp down the furnaces. The men, however, after a short interval submitted and resumed work, it being understood that they would pay the extra expense to which the employers had been put in consequence of their unjustifiable conduct. They thus pay the cost of the coke used for damping down.

Reductions of wages 5 per cent. have taken place this week in Dean Forest, where the house-coal trade, as well as the other staple industries, are still depressed.

The reduction in blast-furnace men's wages has generally taken place this week.

Mr. David Dale has accepted the office of arbitrator in the wages case, the employers having, as was reported, refused to accept the 5 per cent. offered by the men. The award is expected to be given next week.

Messrs. Neilson & Co., of the Mossend Iron-Works, have in accordance with the decision of the North of England arbitration board reduced the wages of their puddlers 9*d.* per ton, and those of millmen, forgemen, and others engaged in the manufacture of finished iron, to the extent of 7½ per cent. At the Dalziel Iron-Works, Motherwell, belonging to Mr. Colville, a reduction of 10 per cent. has been made in the wages of mechanics. Despite these facts the strike at the Phœnix Iron-Works, Coatbridge, still continues, but it is not expected that the men will hold out much longer. The reduction made in their case by the Messrs. Spencer was 10 per cent.

There is an extensive strike of colliers in the Avidrie and Slamanan districts, and several mass-meetings of the men have been held, at which they have pledged themselves to resist the "break" in the wages; but as they have no funds to support them during a struggle, it is anticipated that they will yield in the course of the next or following week. In all the other districts the reduction has been accepted without opposition. The coal trade is not in the least degree improved.

On Saturday last a notice which Messrs. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co. had given to reduce the wages of their mechanics, blacksmiths, pattern-makers, and moulders at Middlesbrough and Eaton, 10 per cent. expired. The men agreed to accept 5 per cent. reduction. The firm have continued to employ a portion of the men at that rate and have informed the remainder that their services will not be required.

It is announced that Messrs. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co., of Middlesbrough and elsewhere have seceded as members from the North of England board of arbitration and conciliation, intending to manage their own wages disputes. This state of things explains Messrs. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co.'s dealings in the recent closing of the works at Witton Park, the men requiring an arbitration that was impracticable.

Gentlemen will please bear in mind that the boards of arbitration and conciliation referred to have been heralded to the world as the crowning glory of the industrial system of Britain, and that had concentrated capital continued to be as willing as the working millions have been to abide by the decisions of such boards and maintain the system, it would unquestionably have justified the claim set up for it by its projectors and promoters. But while wages were rising capital availed itself of the system, for then its decisions were sure to be against any excessive demand made by labor; but now when business is paralyzed, and starving laborers are by the million clamoring for the privilege of earning food for themselves and their families, capital spurns the system and demands that labor shall accept what pittance it pleases to bestow.

Who are Messrs. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co., of Middlesbrough and elsewhere, who thus contemptuously spurn the good offices of the boards of arbitration and conciliation, and intend not only as is here said, "to manage their own wages disputes," but to settle those of all England and compel her workmen to accept lower than Belgian wages? Capital and Labor, a London trade journal of the highest standing, in its issue of the 3d of last month thus notices its establishment and operations:

When a dozen years ago the firm was merged into a limited company, its dimensions had become colossal. It had then blast-furnaces at three centers in Cleveland and South Durham, with contributory iron mines among the largest known, as well as coal mines, limestone quarries, rolling-mills, founderies, steel works, steamers, and allied possessions. It produced about a quarter of a million tons of pig-iron yearly, as well as 100,000 tons of finished iron and castings, and other work proportionately. It raised, then, a million tons of coal yearly, three-quarters of a million tons of ironstone, and over 150,000 tons of limestone. It owned hematite iron mines in Spain, farmed thousands of acres of its own land, kept a fleet of steamers, owned and worked thirty or forty miles of railway, and possessed a rolling-stock for minerals such as many railways might envy. At the mines, the works, the coke-ovens, limestone quarries, and other establishments, about 10,000 workmen were employed. Since that time there has been a growth in many departments of this gigantic trading corporation, and it has entered into the business of steel manufacturers, having erected large mills and works. It now employs 12,000 operatives, it pays £1,000,000 yearly in wages, and its subscribed capital is £3,650,000. It has twenty blast-furnaces—a huge smelting plant, in which £400,000 must have been invested; its steel-mills have turned out steel rails at the rate of over 60,000 tons yearly; its coal mines have a capacity of production of probably close upon 2,000,000 tons yearly; and its mining operations in Cleveland, South Durham, and Spain are on a scale of unexampled magnitude.

That the iron trade of England is suffering unparalleled depression is notorious, yet such are the appointments, appliances, and power of this copartnership whose capital is nearly $20,000,000 that in the year of depression referred to it declared and divided a profit of £155,288 or $776,440. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] who derided our infant industries with so much gusto will admit that if this paragraph describes an adult establishment the largest of ours are of but infantile proportions.

Mr. Chairman, I have said that this firm proposes to make the low wages of Belgium the standard by which the wages of the coal-miners and iron-workers of the world shall be regulated. It may not be known to gentlemen that they are lower even than the rates paid; yes, much lower than those paid for labor in the State prisons of this country with which the chairman of the committee has shown that he thinks the taxed and taxable laboring people of this country should be made to compete. In coal and iron mines, forges, furnaces, rolling-mills, glass-works and other such establishments in Belgium women and female children are employed on the rougher work and in attendance as laborers upon men, who perform lighter work requiring greater skill. The spirit of our century has impelled the Belgian people themselves to protest against this degradation of woman as a means of depressing the wages of labor and ask the Belgian Chamber to exclude females from work in coal mines and also to implore it to exclude boys under a certain age from the same character of work; but in the Iron Age for April 25 I find the response of the Chamber to these humane suggestions. Of course it was in the negative. Here is the paragraph:

WOMEN IN BELGIAN MINES.

The Belgian Chamber has rejected the proposal excluding females from work in the coal mines and has adopted the ministerial amendment fixing the minimum age of boys working in the mines at twelve and that of girls at thirteen years. The work performed by women in the Belgian coal mines is usually loading the trams and "putting" or hauling them down into the main roads and attending doors. The work in its nature is wholly unsuited to women, and from the fact that it is performed in the mines it is in the last degree demoralizing.

But in the present depression of trade the giant power of Bolckow, Vaughan & Co., limited, is undaunted by the degradation Belgium inflicts upon her laborers, and by forced reductions of wages has been able to sell and deliver steel rails at $32.50 per ton, which is cheaper than they have yet been sold when produced by the women and girls in Belgium, and the Colliery Guardian in a recent issue celebrates this achievement and makes it the occasion for a short sermon to the workingmen of England and through them to those of the United States, the substance of which embodies the whole gospel of British capital to labor, "Servants, obey your masters." It says:

CHEAP STEEL RAILS.

We wish to preach a short social sermon from the text of the £6 10*s.* per ton tender for steel rails, delivered by the Messrs. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co., limited. It is clear that this great Cleveland firm could never have attained this result had not its management been distinguished by ability and experience of the highest order. An intimate knowledge of continental industry, a careful utilization of the cheapest raw materials, an introduction of the best and most approved mechanical appliances, and a resolute determination to perseveringly face difficulties of every kind, these and these means alone must have enabled Messrs. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co., limited, to undertake the delivery of steel rails at Leghorn at £6 10*s.* per ton. But all the skill, energy, and business experience of Messrs. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co., limited, would, in our judgment, have availed nothing if the successive reductions which have been taking place during the last two years of Cleveland coal miners and iron-makers had not enabled the company to obtain cheaper supplies of raw material. To enable the manufacturing industries of Great Britain of every description to recover and regain its old supremacy, it must produce at a cheap rate, and this cheap production can only be effected with the aid of cheap labor, or at any rate reasonably cheap labor. We have been haunted since 1873 with the phantom of Belgian competition; but why has this phantom ever made its appearance? Because in 1873 and 1874 wages had risen in Great Britain to an impossible level; that is, a level at which competition with foreign firms could not be profitably maintained by British industries. But let wages descend to a reasonable point, and let something like harmonious action be restored between English employers and English employed, and what becomes of this foreign competition of which we hear so much? It vanishes like the baseless fabric of a vision; and old England once more shows that if she is but true to herself she has not much to fear, either as regards iron-making or anything else, from external opponents and external competitors.

A PLAUSIBLE FALLACY EXPOSED.

But time will not permit me to further examine details. Let me, however, hastily consider some of the doctrines of the chairman of the committee. He assumed throughout his speech, and so did the gentleman from Virginia, that duties add themselves to the price not only of imported articles but of like articles produced in this country. Let me ask them do competition in the market and increase of supply increase prices? Are the prices of cotton, woolen, worsted, and silk goods, of locomotives, iron or steel rails, machine tools, agricultural implements, mechanical toys, or any of the thousand other articles we now produce, as high as they were under the free-trade tariff of 1857 or at any time prior to the increase of the rates of duty in 1861? No, sir; all kinds of American goods can be bought cheaper under the higher duties of to-day than they could be under the lowest rates ever fixed by our tariff laws, and it is the very madness of theory to assert, as the gentlemen have done, that duties which stimulate production and add to the world's supply enhance prices.

I was amused by the chairman's expression of sympathy with the overtaxed farmer, and wish he would do me the honor to lend me his ear. I fear that he saw me laughing as he uttered that rhetorical gem with such admirable emphasis, and desire to assure him that I meant no disrespect to him, and only laughed because I could not help it. It was so amusing to note the gravity and pathos with which he started his poor farmer out to buy taxed hardware, shoes, &c., for himself and clothes and medicines for his wife. When I first read that gem of his speech in my youth or earliest manhood, just after Sydney Smith had produced it, it made an impression upon my mind that still lingers. [Laughter.] But I have become so used to hearing it, that when he commenced its delivery with such fine effect I found myself in the condition of Diggory, in She Stoops to Conquer. You remember, sir, that that "fine old English gentleman all of the olden time," Mr. Hardcastle, having planned a good match for his daughter, determined to give a large dinner party as a means of promoting it. His household servants were not numerous enough to wait upon so large a company as he proposed to entertain, and having brought in the farm hands to assist he gave them a lecture on propriety. "Now mind," said he, "you must remember that you are not company and must not engage in the conversation. Diggory you talk too much; you must neither talk nor laugh while attending on this party." "Ecod! Squire," rejoined Diggory, "then you must not tell that story of old Grouse in the gun-room, because I have been so used to laughing at that story for the last twenty years that I am afraid I can't hold myself." [Laughter.]

Sir, for the last twenty years I have been so in the habit of laughing, at least in my sleeve, when hearing gentlemen reproduce that admirable novelty that I could not help doing so when the chairman of my committee startled me by reciting it. I have it before me as uttered by the gentleman, then from Ohio, but who has carpet-bagged to New York, [Mr. COX,] and who is sometimes known by the sobriquet of "Sunset," as he delivered it in 1864. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. What was that?

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, I am only referring to an admirable witticism you perpetrated in the House in 1864. [Laughter.] It was quoted the other evening by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MULDROW] who, unlike the chairman of the committee, also quoted precisely what Sydney Smith had said, which was a great mistake, because anybody could see that my friend from Ohio, as he then was, had said just what Sydney Smith had written so long ago, having only changed the rates and some items, so as to accommodate the rhetorical novelty to the tariff then under consideration.

Subsequently I heard it from my friend the late James Brooks. Then from our friend S. S. Marshall, of Illinois, and there has never been a tariff bill under discussion that I have not heard it three or four times; and I repeat that I could not help laughing when the chairman of the committee got it off with such solemnity.

Mr. COX, of New York. As original?

Mr. KELLEY. He did not indicate that he had ever read Sydney Smith's works or heard of Sam. Marshall or Sam. Cox or any other Sam who has sent the poor farmer out to make purchases? [Laughter.]

I am afraid gentlemen may charge me with exaggeration and think that I laughed at the chairman irreverently, and therefore I propose to read the novelty to them from the British Trade Journal of January 1, 1877, and thus show what an interest the conductors of that enterprising British journal have in our American farmer who is so terribly overtaxed. They foolishly quoted it, not from Sydney Smith, but ascribed it to the Pictorial Tax-Payer, in which the American branch of the Cobden Club, the Revenue Reform Association, had published with illustrative cuts.

The farmer rises in the morning and puts on his flannel shirt taxed 65 per cent., his trousers taxed 60 per cent., his silk vest taxed 60 per cent., his coat (cloth) taxed 60 per cent., buttons taxed 40 per cent., lining taxed 60 per cent., padding taxed 150 per cent. He draws on his boots taxed 35 per cent., sits down to breakfast from a plate taxed 45 per cent., with knives and forks taxed 35 per cent., reads a newspaper taxed 20 per cent., with ink taxed 35 per cent., and type taxed 24 per cent; puts on his slouch hat taxed 70 per cent., hitches his horse, shod with nails taxed 67 per cent., to a plow taxed 45 per cent., with trace-chains taxed 100 per cent., and harness taxed 36 per cent. He goes to the village and buys his wife a handkerchief taxed 35 per cent., shawl (woolen) taxed 200 per cent., silk for a dress taxed 60 per cent., hat taxed 40 per cent., stockings (worsted) taxed 75 per cent., boots taxed 36 per cent., silk cravat taxed 60 per cent., silk umbrella taxed 60 per cent., needles taxed 25 per cent., thread taxed 73 per cent., pins taxed 35 per cent., gloves taxed 50 per cent., steel pens taxed 70 per cent., rice taxed 82 per cent., soap taxed 70 per cent., candles taxed 25 per cent.

By Jupiter! These fellows omitted the asafetida which the gentleman included with such unction! [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to furlough this weary and overtaxed British farmer, who so incessantly obtrudes himself into our discussion of the tariff question. It is about time for him to retire from this Hall.

The theory he attempts to enforce is false. It is that a duty imposed upon any article is, as I have already said, not only added to the price of that article when imported but adds itself to every like article produced in the country of consumption. Now, if this proposition be true, I, in common with most of my countrymen, am like the client who cried in court because he had not known how badly he had been injured until he heard his counsel state the case. If this theory be correct, which I deny, our farmers have been robbing and plundering me and all other dwellers in cities and towns until it is no wonder that we are so poor and depressed. I have prepared a table showing the amount of wheat, barley, oats, potatoes, corn, and rye raised in the country in 1877, the amount exported and the rates of duty on each, and the amount of tax imposed on the country at large by the farmers, if it be true that the import duty increases the price not only upon the imported article but upon the product of the country. On wheat alone they stole $60,591,212.80 from us. Did you know that? Upon barley, $5,162,080.60; on rye, $1,937,300; on potatoes, $21,820,552.50; on oats, $40,214,587.20; and on corn, $126,689,948.20; making in all $256,465,681.35—enough to have paid the duty on all the asafetida taken by farmers' wives since the country was first settled, and upon the annual consumption of all the articles the chairman of the committee supposed Sydney Smith's farmer was going forth to purchase. Here is the table:

Statement of the amount of wheat, barley, potatoes, corn, oats, and rye raised in this country in 1877; the amount exported, the rate of duty on each, and the consequent tax imposed on the people of the country at large by the farmers if it be true that the equivalent of import duties are added to the price not only of imported articles but to those of domestic production.

Products.	Number of bushels in 1877.	Number of bushels exported.	Balance for home consumption.	Duty.	Amount of tax imposed on the consumers of the United States, calculated in accordance with the free-trade dogma propounded by the chairman of the committee.
Wheat	380,000,000	57,043,936	302,956,064	$0 20	$60,591,212 80
Barley	35,600,000	1,186,129	34,413,871	15	5,162,080 60
Potatoes	146,000,000	529,650	145,470,350	15	21,820,552 50
Corn	1,340,000,000	73,100,518	1,266,899,482	10	126,689,948 20
Oats	405,000,000	2,854,128	402,145,872	10	40,214,587 20
Rye	22,100,000	2,227,000	19,873,000	10	1,987,300 00
Total	2,308,700,000	136,941,361	2,171,758,639	.....	256,465,681 35

Take into consideration the other protected agricultural productions and it will appear by this assumption that they have assessed us not less than $600,000,000 a year. Could any theory be more preposterous? The brilliant and logical gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] saw the possibility of this rejoinder and tried to break its force. His effort recalled to my mind an interesting chapter of the political history of the Berks County district. I wish my friend from that district [Mr. CLYMER] were here. It was once represented by a very popular and distinguished gentleman of the county. He was influential in the councils of his party and attained the position of chairmain of the Committee of Ways and Means of this House. But unfortunately for him his party, the democratic, took it into its head to reduce the customs duties. Forgetting his constituents, and dreaming perhaps of foreign missions and of possible reversionary rights to the Presidency, he went with his party against the interests of his people. At the next election some of the people of his district nominated as an independent candidate a simple-minded but worthy farmer by the name of John Swartz, Major John Swartz. He had not served in any war, but had led the militia of Berks County by battalion many a time. [Laughter.] He was for protection, and he beat the distinguished democratic chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means and came to Congress.

Here he was regarded as a very remarkable man, that Major John Swartz, and the free-traders set at him to ascertain the source of his power and, if possible, to convert him. They beset him with all those fine-spun theories which were evolved with such beauty by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER.] They plied him with syllogisms and equations and all sorts of things to which he was a stranger. "Now, Major Swartz," said a distinguished gentleman who had just deluged him with plausible fallacies, "is not that so?" "Well, yes; it does look so." "Then why are you a tariff man?" "Well," said he, "the way you put it, it does look so; but there is one thing I can tell you: it does not work that way with pig-iron." [Laughter.] So the gentleman from Virginia, taking the hint, thought he would put in a caveat and say that it did not work that way with agricultural products, especially with sumac, the proud weed of Virginia, which is safe under a protecting duty of 10 per cent. [Laughter.]

There is a rule on this subject which I will in a few minutes attempt to express. The witty remark of the gentleman from Virginia, that, if Mr. Carey's theory that brings into proximity the producer and the consumer was a sound doctrine, then the man was best off who made everything for himself and consumed all he made, was hardly worthy of him, as it showed that he had not made himself familiar with the principles of the great master of social science. Mr. Carey starts out with the proposition that association is the first and paramount want of a human being. He also teaches that from diversity of employment comes unity of interests and freedom of association.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] propounded a conundrum by premising that he had heard it said the higher the duty the lower would be the price of the commodity. I never heard the proposition except in derision. What I have heard is that a duty, no matter how high it may be, if required to enable an ingenious and industrious people to supply their own wants out of the raw material with which Providence had endowed them, is the proper duty; and being high enough to do that it will so increase production as to reduce prices; and this is in accordance with Mr. Carey's doctrines. Therefore a duty is never too high when in a country of such native resources as ours the supply of the home market may be vitally interfered with by foreign competitors notwithstanding that duty. That question furnishes the measure of a just duty in the mind of an intelligent protectionist.

The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER,] who I am happy to see does me the honor to be present, unconsciously paid me what I shall cherish as the most magnificent tribute received during my now somewhat extended congressional life.

Mr. TUCKER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] will permit me to interrupt him, I will say that if I did it unconsciously I am very willing consciously to pay him any compliment.

Mr. KELLEY. I believe the gentleman and thank him anew. Referring to the tariff of 1870, he said that it had placed on the free list a large number of articles; I am sorry I have not his exact language; and he added that in consequence of the transfer of those articles to the free list our manufactures had grown and our exports had increased, I think he said, from $60,000,000 to $160,000,000 a year. Let the figures be what they may it is undeniable that as a consequent of the changes made by that law our productions and exports increased suddenly and largely.

I had the honor of initiating that enlargement of the free list. It cost me the labors of a whole vacation and correspondence with consumers of raw material in every branch of industry. When Congress reconvened I came here with printed lists of articles which the different manufacturers suggested should be released from duty and of articles which, if the revenues of the Government would not permit them to be put into the free list, should have the duties upon them greatly reduced; and with another indicating corresponding reductions in the rates of duty on all articles derived from those hitherto dutiable articles which were henceforth to be free or from those on which duties had been greatly reduced. By this work and my labors in that Congress I earned the honorable sobriquet of "Old Pig-Iron." Those who hoped by inaugurating what they called revenue reform to destroy the industries of this country saw that to make raw materials free was to enter wisely on the march toward free trade. While by the prevalence of the teaching of British economists they could keep our raw material under heavy duties they could compete with us in our own market and prevent the growth of our foreign trade. Then it was that their well-paid lobby, with its open rooms in every elegant portion of Washington City, set upon my devoted head the scribblers of the nation and bestowed upon me the sobriquet that I now cherish, of "Old Pig-Iron," which is said to be significant of the fact that through good report and ill report I had stood by my intelligent convictions and the interest of the laboring people of the whole country.

A VOICE FROM THE PAST AND THE LOGIC OF RECENT EVENTS.

The very able speech of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] came to me as a voice from the grave, but not as a doleful sound. It revived recollections of days long past when I was a young and enthusiastic student of these subjects; and by the aid of his polished rhetoric and graceful elocution I listened to the teachings of Calhoun, McDuffee and their school of abstractionists as though nothing had happened during the intervening forty-five years.

We were then an agricultural people. Our exports consisted of bulky raw materials—the cereals and provisions. Free trade had been the doctrine of the country, the master section of which would not tolerate the idea of building up towns and cities; and raising agricultural products by the hands of unpaid labor, its leaders believed that the workshops of the nation had better be beyond the seas and in other lands. But for the war we would probably now be in the same condition. But the hair-splitting logic of men, the most perfect syllogisms and systems of equations will not stand against the invincible power of the logic of events. Free trade prevailed as long as the South was contented with her civil supremacy, but when Sumter was fired on and the Government was required to raise the means for maintaining a great and protracted war the dominion of free trade was limited to the territory south of the Potomac, for the exigencies of the war compelled us of the North, whether we believed in high or low duties, to double our duties in order to obtain adequate revenue.

We did not reduce duties to stimulate imports in accordance with the fine-spun theories of the gentleman from Virginia, in the hope of increasing receipts; we piled on duties—100 per cent. by a single resolution, 50 per cent. by another. We thus not only increased our duties but our receipts of revenue; and he who has an open eye can read the effect of the protection thus afforded to labor and capital in ineffaceable characters along the entire line around the confederacy. The gentleman pointed to New England and Pennsylvania as the parts of the country specially enriched by protection. He need not go so far to find evidence most ample of its beneficent effects. Look at the contrast between old Virginia in her poverty and desolation, and her young daughter, West Virginia, that, under the stimulus of the tariff of 1861, and the wool tariff of 1867, and the other tariff laws complained of by the chairman and my colleagues on the committee, has her busy and thriving city of Wheeling and her whole river coast dotted with thrifty workshops and towns built by people who are prosperous even in these times of depression.

Go thence to Kentucky; and as you go cast your eyes on the other side of the river and behold Southern Indiana and Illinois, with their glass-works, their iron-works, their coal-fields, unrecognized twenty years ago but now swarming with busy laborers. See the towns that have sprung, as it were, from the earth, now populous with intelligent and enterprising inhabitants. Visit Lexington and see its workshops and rolling-mills. See how it has grown, although for a long time Kentucky was debatable ground, furnishing about an equal number of soldiers to both armies. Pass beyond and go to Saint Louis and other parts of Missouri and measure her manufacturing powers and the wealth and numbers of her people and compare them with what they were under revenue tariffs. Then pass within the limits of the confederacy and behold the barren and unfenced fields, the ill-clad laborers, the idlers that swarm at every cross-road and at every railway station on the arrival of a train of cars. Travel throughout the free-trade South and you will read, written by the hand of the Almighty upon the face of the earth and in the habits of the people, a terrible contrast to the effects of sixteen years of protective duties upon all that part of our country that derived any share of the compensating blessing which sprung from the necessities of the war.

The gentleman from Virginia and the chairman of the committee support the bill as a free-trade measure. Is it that or something else. Its provisions are so hap-hazard and incongruous that no man can tell whether it most promotes free trade or protection. Mr. Moore, the Parsee merchant, protests against it, because of its violations of free-trade principles, and Mr. D. C. ROBBINS protests with even greater emphasis that it is violative of every principle of free trade; while I and gentlemen around me say that its provisions would prove to be alike destructive to the free-trader and the protectionist.

THE TENDENCY OF THE TIMES IS TOWARD PROTECTION.

But, if it could be shown that it favors free trade, it would simply prove that it is an attempt to resist the tendency and drift of the age. England herself begins to realize the sad mistake she made when she failed to confine freedom of trade with her ports to raw materials and food. Many of the ablest thinkers of that country are now asking that the errors of Cobden and Bright may be corrected. On the 3d of last month, Mr. Ernest Seyd, than whom there is no more proficient statistician in England, addressed the British Society of Arts in London. I clip from his address, in which he reiterates his belief in the abstract doctrine of free trade, the following:

I will admit that the increased imports are due partly to foreigners forcing goods here, but there is this year already a falling off in the imports. I will further admit that our habits are, perhaps, too luxurious. Although I am a thorough free-trader, I am aware that such luxurious habits cannot be checked by mere moral suasion, and I am of the opinion that unless there is soon a better balance between our imports and exports, there is really no other method of effecting this than by a partial return to protection.

Here is a pamphlet with which the British Islands have been flooded within the last few months. It is Lord Bateman's plea for limited protection or for reciprocity in free trade; a letter reprinted from the Times of November 12, 1877, with a preface by the author, in which his lordship takes precisely the ground I have indicated, the free import of raw material and food and the imposition of protective duties upon manufactured articles. Let me read the closing paragraph:

I appeal to the common sense and to the patriotism of my countrymen, and if they are convinced how great has been the fallacy of our free-trade policy without reciprocity it is for them to say, as I believe sincerely they will say, whether a return to a policy of limited protection, so far from being impossible or undesirable, is not the true and simple solution of our present difficulties, and will tend, in a more simple and natural way than any other, to retrieve our losses, increase our revenue, lighten our burdens, bring peace, contentment, and employment to our working classes, and teach them and us to bless the day which restored the old policy and the old watch-word of "protection to native British industry."

The cotton lords of England, as her manufacturers were called, are demanding the protection of their investments against the terrible competition from India to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] alluded the other day. Let me read you some extracts from the London Times, premising that the British Indian government in order to raise an adequate annual revenue has been compelled to impose a duty of 5 per cent. on cotton goods imported into Indian ports and the British manufacturers are demanding the repeal of that duty as an act of justice to them. Why? Because, in their judgment, India now has no more rights than America had when Great Britain by statutory provisions prohibited us from making a nail, erecting a slitting-mill, or making a hat. The principle then was trade for England at the cost of the industries and happiness of every other nation, and that spirit lives in the ruling classes of England to-day.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to go on.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. I read from the London Times:

There was scarcely a town in our cotton manufacturing districts which was not represented. Lancashire en masse had turned out for the occasion, personally or by deputy, and the speakers may be fairly taken as expressing the fixed opinions of some hundreds of thousands of Englishmen. Private disputes were sunk for the moment in the face of a great question in which the earners and payers of wages were equally concerned, and Lancashire, for once in a way, was in perfect harmony in all its sections. * * * Their wish to preserve a foreign market for their goods is natural enough, and, within decent limits, praiseworthy enough. We can scarcely say much for them when they ask not only that Indian finance shall be regulated for their own convenience, but that the export trade of India shall be kept within the bounds they wish to assign to it, and shall be crushed out of existence when it intrudes itself as their rival. It was nothing less than this that the deputation were asking for, and with scarcely a disguise as to their real meaning. It is a strange thing, we cannot help remarking, to observe the new quarters from which proceed, in the case before us, the attack on free trade.

I draw to a close. I have here a slip from the London Saturday Review of about a month ago, although I cannot give the precise date. The article at large was on the French exposition, and the paragraph I propose to read expresses the growing opinion of England and Europe. I pray gentlemen to hear it:

The first exhibition was held at London, and was avowedly intended to be a sort of consecration of free trade. The new exhibition is to be held at Paris, and is a consecration of protection. Conquered France has at last conquered its proud captor. Prince Bismarck has just issued a manifesto through one of his organs, in which he explains his new financial policy. It seems that he has been meditating over the financial system of France, and is lost in admiration at what he finds to be its basis and its method. It is through protection that France pays the interest on the milliards which he carried off. He thought that he had crushed France pecuniarily, and he discovers that apparently she is not crushed at all. Her national and local taxation now amounts to about £150,000,000 a year, and the Chamber is gaily embarking on new and vast schemes for railways, canals, and improved military organization. How this is done is the question which Prince Bismarck has seriously asked himself, and the only answer he can discover is that it is done through a system of wise and bold protection. He therefore invites his countrymen not to be above imitating France. Free trade is only a theory, and theories, as Goethe has taught his countrymen, are apt to get gray and old. The green and golden tree of life is protection, and of that tree sensible, prudent France has eaten freely, and has prospered, while Germany has looked on, cold, miserable, and poor, feeding itself on the wind, and pluming itself on its philosophy. Scientifically, no doubt, France and Prince Bismarck are quite wrong, but if there was one thing which the disciples of Mr. Cobden could never have expected in 1851 to live to see, it was a spectacle of a much grander exhibition than theirs, opened at a moment when the ablest of German statesmen was exhorting his countrymen to follow in the wise paths of protection, by adhering to which France was enabled to produce amid order and prosperity this new wonder of the world.

THE CROWNING GLORY OF OUR FIRST CENTURY.

In characterizing the last quarter of the first century of our existence the chairman of the committee said:

It marked the most extraordinary epoch in our history—distinguished for its extinction of slavery—the greatest civil war of any time, and its consequent demoralization and stimulating effects upon values, and the vicious legislation which of necessity followed. The nation, in consequence, lies weakened and prostrated, and sick almost unto death.

Our great civil war and the extinguishment of slavery were memorable events, but they do not characterize the period alluded to. Slavery caused the war of which its extinguishment was a consequence. But other nations, England, Russia, Brazil, have abolished slavery in obedience to the dictates of philanthropy or sound economic principles; and other nations have had great wars. History is made up of the story of great wars, and though ours may have had distinguishing features, it did not characterize the last quarter of our first century. The crowning glory of that period was a triumph of the arts of peace and the testimony the United States gave to the world of the power of the protective system in developing the resources of a continent and the attributes of a people. The crowning glory of that century of American history centered in the buildings in the shadow of whose magnificent proportions stands my humble home, and to the construction and maintenance of which a niggardly Congress refused to permit the Government to contribute a dollar. It was an illustration of the capacity of a free and self-governing people. We behold it in the display there made of machinery the most wonderful that man had ever beheld; in the products of genius, taste, skill, and industry put forth in the field, the workshop, the mine, the mill, the laboratory, and the studio. It was there in the habits, manners, and apparel of our people who gathered there by millions, and who, thanks to the general principles of the protective system, and especially to the tariff of 1867 on wool and woolens and to the stimulus the additional duties it imposed on ready-made clothing gave to that industry, were clad, the rich and the poor, the capitalist and the laborer, the farmer and the denizens of cities, in garments of the same texture, cut, and make, and presented to foreigners an undistinguishable mass, so that as they loitered through the immense buildings or among the crowds which swarmed in the beautiful grounds, they inquired of their American friends, "Where are the people, the artisans, the paysans, the laborers?" No matter from what country they came, none of them had ever seen the laborer and farmer so clad and, so orderly that they could be crowded together a quarter of a million within a single inclosure without the presence of troops, or gens d'armes, or even the appearance of a palpable police. This exhibit of the developed resources of our country, of the skill and attainments of our people, of the influence of self-government upon the social habits of a people, was the crowning glory of the first century of our history. It came as the result of our challenge to the world to peaceful competition, and it is for this that we are receiving the benedictions of the scholars, statesmen, and thinkers of the world in grateful recognition of the instruction the American people have imparted to all nations by their example.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, at an early period in our national existence the question of raising an adequate revenue to meet the necessities of the Government claimed and received the earnest attention of both the executive and legislative branches of the Government.

The same problems which were so perplexing to the statesmen of that day and so difficult of solution have remained unsettled, and are again presented to us, as they were then, for such determination as shall secure the required revenue to the Government, and at the same time provide as far as possible for the equal distribution of the burden upon all sections and upon all industries.

It is essential that we should inquire into the cause or causes which have prevented the settlement of a question so vital in its character; and it is safe to say that this failure is more largely attributable to the different opinions entertained by those interested in the various industries of the country, as to what should be subjected to taxation and what proportionate share of the burden the several objects should bear, than to any other of the causes which have tended to interfere with the harmonious workings of our own different tariff systems.

Self-interest controls the judgment of men and is the mainspring of human action, and to this principle the conflicting opinions which have been and still are so persistently maintained by the advocates of the different systems of taxation owe their origin. To illustrate this, compare the demand of the agriculturist for free trade in all the manufactured articles which he requires with that of the manufacturer for the protection of these same articles against foreign competition. And it must be borne in mind in this connection that the demand for protection has never failed to secure the listening ear of our Federal councils, and that its exactions have in one form or another been uniformly complied with.

Free trade has been described as "buying where it can be done cheapest, and selling where the best price can be had;" but past experience points us inevitably to the conclusion that we can never enjoy the benefits of such an unrestricted system of trade so long as self-interest overrides patriotism and public honor is subordinated to sectional selfishness. There would, however, be no plausible excuse for this selfish demand on the part of one section, or of one class of industries, to be protected at the expense of others, were it not found in the position we occupy as a debtor nation, and the consequent demand for a revenue, not for governmental purposes, but to pay the debt created by bad government and vicious legislation.

This indebtedness, however, exists, and the committee having in charge this grave and important matter, recognizing this fact, have labored assiduously and continuously for the past six months, with a view of framing such a system of taxation as shall equally distribute the heavy burden to be borne among the different sections and the diversified interests of the country, in order that, none being oppressed, activity and life might once more pervade all our industries.

THE PRESENT CONDITION OF THE COUNTRY.

The industries of the country of every description were never in a more prostrate, unprofitable, and therefore unsatisfactory condition than they are to-day. Two years ago I appealed to this House to take some steps for general relief. The angry cloud which then hung over us auguring destruction and ruin, has increased in size and is now overwhelming those interests which have not already fallen before its fury. Every breeze wafts to our ears the cries of those stricken down by the blasts of this financial tornado. The agriculturist is unremunerated for his labor and the investment of his capital; the manufacturer has seen his ponderous machinery cease from its movements, its mechanism no longer urged to action by the spirit of thrift and enterprise; while the producers of the wealth, the cultivator of the soil, the skilled mechanic and the toiling laborer, deprived of employment and of the opportunity to labor, wander penniless and homeless over the land, receiving at the hands of charity that which in the days of their manhood was the fruit of their honest toil. Yes, sir, in this very Hall the gaunt specters of want and wretchedness gaze down upon us with imploring look, asking that relief which it is within our power to confer; and we cannot, sir, discharge the duty we owe to humanity unless we exert every effort to alleviate by wise and patriotic legislation the destitution, suffering, and want which are spread broadcast over the land.

Was there ever, I ask, sir, a time in all our history when reform in our revenue and financial systems was so imperatively demanded as now?

THE NEW TARIFF BILL.

In what I may say with reference to the bill reported from the committee revising and changing our present tariff system, it is not my purpose to review it in detail. I do not propose to criticize such of its features as are not precisely in accordance with the wishes of my constituents or with my own views, nor do I desire to applaud and express my admiration for such of its provisions as seem to me in more perfect accord with a well-regulated tariff system. It is my intention, Mr. Chairman, to view it as a whole, and in that aspect I regard it as effecting desirable changes in the existing system. I am content that it shall be permitted to accomplish the good of which it is capable, and to leave to a future day that perfect illumination which inevitably follows the admission of the first ray of light into darkness. The necessities of the people demand that there shall be a revision of the present tariff system; it is my purpose to show the pressing character of the demand upon us.

IS THIS THE TIME FOR REVISION?

The opponents of the bill now under consideration assert that it is an unpropitious time to revise and modify our present tariff. Do such men realize the condition of our industrial and commercial interests? Do they stop to inquire how much of the present prostration is attributable to our revenue and financial systems? They do not, or they would not say this was an unpropitious time for the adoption of any measure which promises relief to our languishing industries and distressed people.

If their theories are correct and their opposition to the reforms proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means is well founded, then there can be no time when reforms would be fraught with benefit to the people, and we are therefore as a people in a prosperous condition to-day, and no legislation affecting in any way our great industrial interests should be either sought or demanded, nor would it be justified.

The position of the opponents of this bill is like that which those who opposed the remonetization of silver held before the passage of that bill, when they predicted disaster and derangement of business as the result thereof.

They expressed very grave fears that our whole land would be flooded with the demonetized silver of Germany, France, and every other country which has rejected it as a circulating medium. At no time, Mr. Chairman, did I indulge in any such apprehensions. On the contrary, I say, let it come from the East and the West, from the North and the South, from the highways and hedges wherein it lies hidden away, and still there will be room for its employment through the impetus which it will give to production of every kind.

There is a story told of an English prince which seems to me to so aptly illustrate the proper reply to these carpers and "prophets of evil" that I cannot but recall it, trite as it is: the prince was condemned to die, but as a special boon he was permitted to select the mode and manner of his death. The prince said that there was a certain wine of which he was very fond, and he would prefer to be drowned in that. And I say to you that if we are to suffer a financial death, let us be drowned in a sea of silver.

But their prophecies have failed, and so far are they from being verified that the only practicable and visible relief which has accrued to the general business of the country thus far, from the action of this Congress, has come from the restoration of silver to the currency of the country.

WHAT IS CLAIMED FOR THE BILL.

The most ardent friend of the new tariff bill now under consideration does not claim that it is all that it should be; but that it is a step in the right direction no one can or will deny, except some blind idolater at the shrine erected by believers in the effete system of which a high protective tariff is the corner-stone.

THE NECESSITY FOR REVISION.

To say that no change should be made in our present tariff and revenue laws is to say that the taxes of our people should not be reduced. Why, Mr. Chairman, statistics show that we, the people of the United States, pay a heavier average tax per capita than any of the peoples of the civilized world. According to the census of 1870 the tax paid by every one of our population was $21.83, showing a larger rate of taxation than any nation of modern times has ever been subjected to in a time of peace. Compare these figures in the United States with the tax per capita in England, amounting to only $3.87. These are significant facts; they tell their own story and point their own moral.

In view of this and kindred illustrations is it not our duty as legislators to do all in our power to lighten this burden of taxation by reducing, as far as the necessary demands of the Government for revenue will allow, the present rates of customs duties and internal-revenue taxation?

HOW MANUFACTURES HAVE BEEN FOSTERED AND OTHER INDUSTRIES DWARFED.

Under the present exorbitant tariff our manufacturing industries have increased and developed to such undue proportions, as compared with our other industries, that they far exceed in their products the capacity of our country for consumption.

It follows that a change is imperatively demanded, in order that manufacturers themselves may find relief in an increased home demand and in the creation of foreign markets which will take their surplus stocks. We already manufacture more goods than we can consume, and it is the surplus left on hand which, operating as a dead weight, depresses the manufacturing interests, compelling manufacturers to discharge their operatives and stop their machinery, thus limiting to that extent the demand for the raw material and thereby entailing loss, not only on the manufacturers themselves, but upon the producers of cotton, the growers of wool, and indeed upon all those engaged in agricultural, pastoral, or mining pursuits.

I need not attempt to portray how a blow struck at these industries reaches from the palace to the hovel, and not only destroys prosperity, but threatens as well the structure of society and the principles of free government. A change is therefore demanded by every business interest in the land. With the friends of this bill it is not so much a question of protection or of free trade as of expediency. They claim that it will aid in reviving all of our languishing industries at home, and in extending our commerce abroad with other nations which need American goods and products for consumption, and whose citizens have the means to purchase them whenever the commercial relations between the respective nations is such as to bring them within their reach.

THE TRUE SOURCE OF NATIONAL WEALTH.

I presume that it will not be denied by any one, Mr. Chairman, that production is the foundation of national as well as individual wealth. No matter whether the products are the result of agricultural labor or of the mechanic arts, they are alike valuable and equally dependent on each other. So closely is the one allied to the other that when one productive industry suffers from any of the causes which affect its healthful existence the sympathetic chain which binds all our industries together, making each one dependent on the other, conveys to the heart of each the tidings of the shock and makes each one feel in itself the blow which has struck and paralyzed the other.

Just as in the human body, the head, the hand, or the foot cannot suffer without entailing suffering upon the other members; and should any one of them perish the loss would be either fatal or irreparable; so it is with the relations of our industrial resources as regards their greater or less development. As soon as the stage of development attained by any one is more advanced than that attained by its sister industries, the whole system becomes disordered and deranged. Stimulate agriculture at the expense of the manufacturing industries, or these industries at the expense of agriculture, and the inequality creates and results in deformity of the body-politic as inevitably as does an unnatural growth of any of the members of the human system distort and deform the whole.

This overstimulation is the fruit of what is called a protective tariff. It is impossible to perfect such a system so that it will equally distribute the burdens it imposes upon all industries alike, advancing and developing them with equal step.

Do not understand me, Mr. Chairman, as in any way opposing the development and utilization of the almost limitless resources of our country, whether in field, factory, or foundry. But what I desire is that this development should be, as far as possible, uniform and healthy—not a fungus growth which owes its existence to legislative stimulus and which will wither under the first malign breath; but a firmly rooted tree, with its branches extending to every quarter, drawing its sustenance and its life from the reservoirs of national plenty, and preserving that life by means of the wise provisions of the Government made for the welfare of the whole.

To this policy of fostering and forcing certain industries, while others of equal importance to the prosperity of the nation are ignored and neglected, are largely attributable the troubles which now press so heavily upon us as a people.

In an argument made by Mr. Starrow before the Committee on Patents of this House during the present session of Congress the following startling facts and figures were brought to the attention of the Committee: by the census of 1870 the agricultural products of the country were valued at $2,449,538,638, and the manufactured products at $4,232,325,442. The wages of the farm laborers amounted to $310,286,285, while those paid to operatives amounted to $775,584,343.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, these farm laborers numbered 2,885,000, while only 377,000 persons were employed in the various manufactories; showing that while farm laborers received as wages only an average of $107 per annum, the operative received more than $520 per annum. Now let me ask the friends and advocates of protection, in all candor, should the system which has produced such inequality continue longer in existence? But again, the last census shows that, while our population from 1860 to 1870 increased at the rate of 22 per cent., the products of our manufacturing industries increased 52 per cent.

In 1850 the value of our annual manufactures averaged $44 per capita, in 1860 it averaged $65 per capita, and in 1870 $100 per capita; showing conclusively that the capacity of our country in the production of manufactured articles has led to a production exceeding the demand for home consumption.

HOW TO OBTAIN RELIEF.

There is but one way to relieve the plethora caused by this accumulation of surplus stocks, and that consists in opening the markets of the world to our manufactured goods. To afford this relief is one of the leading objects of the friends of this bill; and its passage will go far toward creating that condition of affairs which will lead to the consummation of a result so essential to our welfare.

Let us, then, remove as rapidly as possible all unnecessary restrictions upon our foreign trade, thereby enabling our producers to supply the demand of other nations as well for our raw material as for our manufactured goods.

EXPORT OF MANUFACTURED COTTONS.

Under the existing tariff we send abroad but a comparatively small quantity of manufactured cotton goods, whereas it is within our power to furnish the world to a large extent with the fabrics manufactured from our great staple. This would relieve alike the producer and the manufacturer, and would prove a source of incalculable wealth to the nation. With an increased demand for our raw cotton and our cotton fabrics, arising from an extended commerce with other nations, the price of our great staple would become remunerative, and increased production being thereby stimulated the immense area of territory in the Southern States adapted to its growth would be rapidly utilized.

Mr. Chairman, to accomplish this and to secure profitable markets for our products at home and abroad, it is evident to my mind that we must change the present systems under which our customs duties and internal-revenue taxes are collected. Just so long as we impose high rates of duties upon certain articles, in order to protect and build up home markets, just so long will we be unable to compete successfully in foreign markets. I do not think there is any business man who will question the fact that the protection which is needed most by our producers and manufacturers is the ability to compete successfully with the producers and manufacturers of other lands in the markets of the world.

So long, Mr. Chairman, as we the legislators of the nation fail to remove this one great cause of our present difficulties and suffer our industries of every class in every section of the Union to hobble about upon a broken pair of protection crutches, just so long may we rest satisfied that we will never see these industries develop with that vigor and energy which give evidence of an activity and ability to keep step with that tide of progress which flows on toward prosperity.

Every measure which in any way cripples or restricts the production of our various industries is one tending to impoverish the people, and renders them the less able to bear the burdens of taxation. And the Representative here who neglects or refuses to do all within his power to foster our industries and to encourage and increase their productive capacity, by bringing within the reach of our producers profitable markets, commits a crime against humanity, and deserves to have meted out to him the fullest measure of public reprobation.

THE PUBLIC CREDIT.

We prate loudly and constantly about the obligation resting upon our people to sustain the public credit. Now, sir, tell me, upon what does that credit rest? No one can deny that it rests solely and absolutely upon the right of taxation. What, sir, constitutes the value of this right? It is the ability of the citizen to pay the taxes levied. And what is the source whence this ability is derived? Plainly the surplus products of the country. We see, then, that this term "public credit" at the last resolves itself into this: have we such a surplus of products as will enable us by disposing of them to extinguish our indebtedness?

Whenever this is the case the puplic credit is an established fact; when it is not it is a mere figurative expression. Beyond this, it must be borne in mind that the value of this surplus product will be utterly destroyed, if we fail to furnish to our producers, through wise tariff regulations, a profitable market in which to sell their products and thereby realize their commercial value.

THE CAUSE OF OUR FINANCIAL DISTRESS.

If I am not mistaken as to the immediate great cause of our financial distress, it will be found in the fact that the farmers of the country—under the operation of our present tariff and the iniquitous policy of contracting the currency which has been pursued—have failed to find profitable markets for their surplus products, and hence, being unable to dispose of them, have been unable to buy the manufactured goods they would otherwise have consumed.

The consequence of this is that both farmers and manufacturers have been compelled to suffer as the victims of vicious and misguided legislation. Millions of bushels of grain have been wasted and destroyed in the West, no market being available at which they could be sold; while the cotton of the South, which constitutes by far the largest item in our list of national exports, has been sold for years past at less than the original cost of production, thereby entailing ruin upon its producers.

Nor have the manufacturers fared any better; with no markets abroad and a lessening demand for home consumption, resulting from the inability of consumers to purchase even the necessaries of life, they have been compelled to suspend their operations, permit their factories to remain idle, and many of their laborers, to whose skill and industry were due the former profits of their mills, are now roaming over the land asking for employment, and, not finding it, are consigned to idleness and want.

OUR RESOURCES.

The resources of our favored land are as boundless and inexhaustible as the beneficence of Providence could make them; and these resources, under the hand of the industrious and skilled laborer, constitute the real wealth of a nation; for, like the widow's cruse of oil, they fail not, and are capable, under the direction of wise and enlightened statesmanship, of endless development.

I think, sir, that the history of the world teaches us that the surest way to depress and impoverish a nation is to neglect and thereby destroy its industrial arts, and especially its agricultural economy. Spain and Mexico present notable illustrations of this truth. At one time they possessed and controlled a large proportion of the wealth of the world. But they neglected their commerce, their internal trade, and public highways, and as the result thereof they are both to-day comparatively insignificant in the catalogue of nations.

So, too, of Turkey and Persia, splendid empires once, whose glory overshadowed the East. In both of these countries for centuries past the agriculturist has been but a serf and the mechanic a mere menial, and as a natural consequence they lie prostrate in the dust, never to rise again.

On the other hand, look at England, where the enlightened yeomanry and scientific artisan are the care and pride of the nation, and you see a people who are not only great, prosperous, and happy at home, but who are contributing more to the cause of Christianity and true liberty everywhere than any of the nations upon the globe.

Even in France, with a government politically bad, oscillating, as it were, between an unlimited despotism and an irrepressible communism, we find her great statesmen directing their efforts to the development of her industrial resources, the improvement of her internal transportation, the general education of her citizens, and the adoption of a financial policy suited to the character and genius of her people. Compare her condition with that of some of her nearest neighbors, who have neglected these great interests and are struggling in penury and want, while she presents a spectacle of unparalleled prosperity. Ought we not, Mr. Chairman, in our efforts here to relieve the wants of our people and to bring back prosperity to our borders, to profit by these illustrious examples?

THE IMMEDIATE EFFECT OF OUR PRESENT TARIFF SYSTEM.

The history of our tariff systems shows conclusively that the effect of the imposition of high rates of customs duties is to enhance the cost of producing the raw material. It being, then, true that the price of manufactured goods to consumers is increased to the extent of the duty levied, the natural effect is to lessen home consumption and to check exportation and to render us as producers of the raw material and of manufactured goods less able to compete with foreign producers in the markets abroad.

THE IMMEDIATE REMEDY.

Let us, so far as the demand of the Government for revenue will allow, remove prohibitory duties, so that we can secure profitable market for our surplus products of raw material and manufactured goods, and by so doing revive production of all kinds. This will enable the agriculturists to receive a fair renumeration for their labor and reasonable interest on their investments of capital. Then, with production (the basis of all prosperity) restored to its legitimate functions, not only will our farmers, but the manufacturers, mechanics, capitalists, and all classes and conditions of our people, be blessed with a restored confidence, prosperity, and peace.

Common justice, to say nothing of philanthropy and the general welfare of the nation, demands an entire change in our present tariff system. Its inequalities and oppressions have been so plainly and fully exhibited by the distinguished chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. WOOD] in his remarks on this floor on the 9th of April that it is unnecessary to repeat them. Still there is one portion of his remarks which comes so directly home to our people, and which is so aptly and truthfully stated, that I desire in this connection to reproduce it.

THE FARMER AND THE TARIFF.

The farmer, whose whole mind is bent on his agricultural pursuits, has neither the time nor opportunity to investigate the influence of the tariff tax on his household expenses; it is a fact, however, that every article he uses is either directly subject to a tariff tax or enhanced by the tariff. Let us enumerate these burdens: the farmer's house in the West, where lumber is scarce, pays either a direct or enhanced tax of 20 per cent. on the lumber his house is built of; a tax of 35 per cent. on the paint it is painted with; of 90 per cent. on his window-glass; of 35 per cent. on the nails; of 53 per cent. on the screws; of 30 per cent. on the door-locks; of from 35 to 40 per cent. on the hinges; of 35 per cent. on the wall-paper; of from 60 to 70 per cent. on his carpet; of 40 per cent. on his crockery; of 38 per cent. on his iron hollow-ware; of 35 per cent. on his cutlery; 40 per cent. on his glassware; of from 35 per cent. to 40 per cent. on the linen he uses in the household; of 51 per cent. on the common castile soap he uses; 48 per cent. on the starch. When he goes into his stable, barn, or workshop he will find that he pays 35 per cent. on the iron he uses; 53 per cent. on the halter-chains; 45 per cent on the files and rasps he may use; 47 per cent. on the backsaw; 49 per cent. on cross-cut saws; 38 per cent. on the handsaw, and 35 per cent. on any sheet-iron he may require. On his medicines he pays 20 per cent.; on the quinine pills he swallows, 20 per cent.; on blue-pills, 40 per cent., and 40 per cent. on any medicinal preparations. The female portion of his house cannot even go into hysteria without paying a tax of 20 per cent. on asafetida that may be required to quiet their excited nerves. On his sugar he pays a tax of at least 60 per cent. As for the clothing he and his family use, let me enumerate the tax separately: on his wool hat he pays from 60 to 80 per cent.; on his fur hat, from 45 to 60 per cent.; on his suit of woolen clothes, some 55 per cent.; on the leather for his boots and shoes, 25 per cent.; on his hosiery, 35 per cent.; on his wife's and daughter's common alpaca dress he pays 65 to 70 per cent.; on spool-thread, 70 per cent., and on the needles, 35 per cent. If I were inclined to pursue these topics further it would take up too much time; suffice it to say that the furnishing of his child's cradle and the coffin in which he is finally buried pay a direct tax or are enhanced in price by our tariff system.

After such a presentation of statistical facts, the truth of which no one can question or deny, what further argument is needed to satisfy this House that a change should be made in our present tariff rates? As they stand they are certainly in the interest of the few as opposed to that of the many; and while under their operation temporary benefits may have accrued to the manufacturers, yet the universal paralysis which exists in all of our industrial interests shows conclusively that the results have been alike disastrous to all. No candid, impartial mind can or will deny the fact that the present business derangement of the country, the enormous bankruptcies of corporations and individuals, and the demoralization of the people are largely, if not exclusively, attributable to the unequal and unjust system of revenue and finance which have obtained since the war.

IT HAS CAUSED A POLITICAL REVOLUTION.

The prime cause which has placed the democratic party in a majority on the floor of this House is the demand on the part of the people for a change from the existing policy. Whatever may be said of the wrongs and oppressions imposed by the republican party upon the country, and especially that portion of it which I have the honor in part to represent, (and they have been both enormous and unpardonable,) the evil effects which have sprung from their bayonet government and miserable reconstruction measures, intended to retard the recuperation and recovery of the business of the Southern and Western States from the sad havoc of war, are surpassed by those resulting from the systems of taxation and finance which that party inaugurated and which as a party they are endeavoring to perpetuate and fasten upon the country.

And the republican party to-day, with here and there an honorable exception, are upholding a system of finance which had its origin in the exigencies of war, which is wholly unsuited to the times of peace, and which was never designed by its authors to be continued as an established policy of the Government. Hence the republican party is responsible for the present enormous burden of taxation which the people are called upon to bear and the antagonisms between labor and capital which to-day keep capital locked up in the vaults of the banks and of a few favored capitalists, while millions of the honest working-people are out of employment, or, if employed, receive such wages as keep them constantly shuddering in anticipation of those privations and sufferings for themselves and their families which follow in the train of want and destitution.

FAILURES AND BANKRUPTCIES.

The extent and character of the ruin which has been entailed upon the country, Mr. Chairman, within the last twelve years, and which can be shown to be almost exclusively attributable to the systems of revenue and finance which have prevailed, are simply appalling. A review of the large number of failures and bankruptcies which have occurred within this period in our commercial and mercantile circles alone gives us only a partial conception of the extent of this widespread disaster and ruin. Carefully compiled statistics, which I here submit, show the following astounding results:

Year.	Number of failures.	Liabilities.
1868	2,608	$63,774,000
1869	2,799	75,054,000
1870	3,551	88,242,000
1871	2,915	85,252,000
1872	4,069	121,056,000
1873	5,183	228,499,000
1874	5,830	155,239,000
1875	7,490	197,210,922
1876	9,092	191,117,786
1877	8,872	190,669,936
Total	52,409	1,396,114,644

This exhibit aggregates 52,409 failures in business since the year 1868, with liabilities amounting to $1,396,114,644. Nor is this all. To this catalogue of disaster must be added the enormous bankruptcies and failures in business which have occurred among private individuals, and also the depreciation in real estate, estimated at not less than 30 per cent. of the census valuation of 1870, the shrinkage in the value of stocks and bonds of our railroads and other corporations, the loss accruing to the wealth of the country on account of its labor being idle, estimated at not less than $5,000,000,000, the aggregate value of the property so lost to the country amounting to the stupendous sum of $10,000,000,000. And to this we must still add the thirty-three hundred and fifty-five failures, with liabilities amounting to $82,078,826 for the first quarter of the year 1878; the whole aggregating an amount equal to one-third of the estimated value of all the wealth, of every kind and description, of the entire country. This immense destruction of values has been the result of the vicious, misguided, and mistaken legislation devised and perpetuated by the republican party, in their systems of revenue and finance, which are altogether unsuited to the exigencies of the times, the development of our industries, and the necessities of the people. And still, with this alarming state of things existing, there are to be found some who, in their lust for power and in their greed for gain, oppose every attempt to remove or even reform the causes which have precipitated these disasters.

THE EFFECT OF CONTRACTION.

Let us for a moment, Mr. Chairman, notice the effect of the contraction policy of the Administration upon the railroad interests of the country. There are over seventy thousand miles of railroad in the United States, completed mainly by private enterprise, representing over ten thousand millions of capital. Most of this vast sum is the accumulated savings of poor and moderately rich men who invested their surplus means in works of internal improvement for the benefit of themselves, while at the same time they developed the commerce of the country.

Now, after three years of contraction, let us see its effects upon these railroads. In 1877, as detailed in the Chicago Railway Age, there were sold, under foreclosure of mortgages, for the benefit of bondholders, fifty-five railroads, aggregating thirty-eight hundred and seventy-five miles of completed railroad, with a capital stock of $79,045,700. Suits that will result in sales were commenced against forty-four other railroads with a length of fifty-four hundred and nine miles, and a capital of $156,108,040. Besides these, sixteen other roads, twenty-three hundred and eighty-eight miles long, with a capital stock of $126,921,900, were ordered to be sold at some future day. Thus we see that in the year 1877 alone there were sold and ordered to be sold 11,672 miles of railroad, aggregating a capital stock of $362,000,000. That is to say, that more than one-seventh of the entire railroads in the United States have been or will be sold for the benefit of the bondholders, and the people who built and owned these roads have lost every dollar invested in them.

While labor and industry are thus robbed of their legitimate profits let us see how the Government has oppressed them by its systems of revenue and taxation. The following table, compiled from official records, shows what the people, and mainly the laboring people, have paid to support the Government during fifteen years:

June 30, 1862	$570,841,700 25
June 30, 1863	714,709,995 58
June 30, 1864	865,234,087 00
June 30, 1865	1,290,312,982 41
June 30, 1866	1,141,072,666 09
June 30, 1867	346,729,124 33
June 30, 1868	337,340,284 00
June 30, 1869	321,490,597 75
June 30, 1870	309,653,560 75
June 30, 1871	292,177,188 25
June 30, 1872	270,559,626 91
June 30, 1873	269,264,216 97
June 30, 1874	302,633,873 76
June 30, 1875	268,447,543 76
June 30, 1876	258,459,797 10
Total to maintain the Government fifteen years	7,591,617,314 76

In addition to this vast sum the people have been taxed to pay the interest on untaxed capital invested in bonds, as the following well-authenticated statistics will show, to the amount of $1,596,854,901.13:

June 30, 1861	$6,112,296 18
June 30, 1862	13,190,524 45

Making a grand total of $9,187,771,215.80, or nearly one-third of the entire value of the property of the country, paid by the few, in support of the Government, within the short space of fifteen years. Is it surprising, Mr. Chairman, that with such a system of oppression and wrong, want and disaster should overspread the land, and that the people should cry for deliverance?

THE RIGHTS OF THE DEBTOR.

But again, Mr. Chairman, is it not the duty of the Government to allow the debtor to pay his debts in the currency in which the debt was contracted? Since to every debt there is a corresponding credit, and as there are more than three debtors to every creditor, have not the debtors rights that are entitled to protection as well as those of, the creditors?

If debts are contracted in gold, require payment in gold; and if contracted in silver, let them be paid in silver; but if in gold and silver let them be paid in either gold or silver; and if contracted in greenbacks, let payment be made in greenbacks. It is nothing more than common justice to both creditors and debtors that the quality as well as the quantity of money of different kinds should be neither changed as to the former nor diminished as to the latter so as to differ from the terms of the contract at the time when the debt was contracted. If you change either the quality or the quantity, you make money harder to obtain, and thereby render the payment of the indebtedness of the country more difficult.

A very large portion of the debts of the country, which now hang as a weighty incubus upon private and public credit and which hinder the return of confidence and prosperity, were created when gold, silver, and greenbacks were legal tenders; and hence we now say, let them be paid in the same way! At the close of the war there was $710,000,000 of greenbacks and fractional currency in circulation; but through the connivance and dictation of the capitalists and bondholders, the policy of the Government has destroyed more than half of this amount, and other currency in the form of bank-notes has been substituted for it.

In other words, the people's money has been withdrawn and bankers' money placed in its stead, and as a consequence the rates of interest which the people have been forced to pay for money necessary to carry on their business has exceeded their profits, and as a result they have been reduced to bankruptcy, while capitalists themselves have steadily grown richer and richer by the operation. Do not understand me as seeking to array one class of citizens against another, for such is neither my wish nor purpose. I would rather, on the other hand, harmonize the interests of all sections and classes by inaugurating a policy of legislation which would preserve and promote alike the interests of all.

THE INTEREST OF THE SECTIONS THE SAME.

I have long since been satisfied in my own mind that if we, as the legislators of the nation, would study more the dependence of the different sections and interests of our common country upon each other, we could to a very great extent allay, yea, banish from this Hall and bury out of sight those unnatural antagonisms which too often usurp the place of patriotism and seem but to engender strife, breed jealousies, and fire sectional animosities.

Let us remember, Mr. Chairman, that we can never have a return of prosperity so long as a line of policy is pursued which renders the people restless and unhappy by forcing idleness upon the masses, and which robs labor of the legitimate remuneration to which the laws of God and the demands of humanity alike entitle it. As the representatives of both capital and labor, let us stop and consider the equities and the dependent relations that exist between the several sections of our country and the different classes of our citizens. Let us rise to the realization of the fact that capital, on the one hand, without labor, finds neither investment nor profit, while labor, on the other hand, without capital, has neither employment nor bread.

OUR APPROPRIATIONS.

Let us, Mr. Chairman, look for a moment at the injustice and inequality of our annual appropriations.

The following table exhibits the amounts of money appropriated to the several Departments of the Government for the fiscal years 1877 and 1878:

Expenditures for 1877 and 1878.

Departments, &c.	1877.	1878.
Department of State	$1,188,797 50	$1,147,660 48
Treasury Department	14,837,337 47	12,784,718 94
War Department	7,337,675 02	1,983,902 73
Military establishments	29,651,769 86
Navy Department	388,588 24	365,966 67
Naval establishments	12,739,790 90	14,536,432 50
Department of the Interior	3,418,432 89	3,450,627 14
Indian affairs	5,147,897 63	4,877,990 00
Post-Office Department	567,860 29	936,549 29
Postal service	5,917,498 00	2,939,725 00
Department of Justice	385,876 20	412,622 65
Department of Agriculture	174,686 96	208,640 00

Here we find only $208,640 appropriated to the Agricultural Department, while nearly $5,000,000 have been given to the Indians and $36,989,444.88 applied to the support of the War Department and military establishments. Why, sir, notwithstanding the almost incalculable amount of taxes paid into the National Treasury annually by the people, the largest proportion of which has been contributed by the unprotected farmers and laboring-men of the country, they have only received in return since the organization of the Government the insignificant sum of $3,216,114.37.

The history of the world furnishes no instance in which government has done so little for the producing interests as in our own country. Is it not time, Mr. Chairman, that we were seeking to repair the neglect and wrong inflicted upon this the greatest of all our industrial interests?

REMEDIAL MEASURES.

We may do much for the relief of our people and the permanent development of our productive resources by the improvement of our routes for internal transportation and our public highways. But this would be a mere primal feature in the great step which must be taken before relief is actually afforded to the suffering masses, and that step is the adoption of such measures as shall restore health to our paralyzed trade.

THE EFFECT OF TRADE UPON OUR CURRENCY.

Why, sir, if we wish to return to a specie basis and maintain our currency upon it, there is but one legitimate instrumentality through which it can be accomplished—that of trade. This is the only conservative and reliable method of attaining that desirable end. You may contract the volume of our currency until only one dollar of it remains, and that single dollar will not have the exchangeable value of gold so long as the balance of trade is against us.

OUR FOREIGN TRADE.

The war between Russia and Turkey having closed the Black Sea and cut off the trade of Western Europe from the great grain emporiums of the East, the result has been an advance in the price of grain and an increased demand for American breadstuffs, so that for a season we have had a small balance of trade in our favor. This has already had the effect of reducing the price of gold until it is very nearly at par with greenbacks. If we can maintain this state of affairs for a definite and lengthened period, a supply of gold commensurate with the necessities of the people will flow to us from abroad. But I ask, does the condition of our business, present and prospective, justify the conclusion that our exports will for any considerable time exceed our imports?

The real truth is, that while the aggregate of our actual exports has increased to a small extent, much the larger portion of the balance of trade in our favor reported by the Secretary of the Treasury is due to a decrease in the amount of our imports, and this is attributable to the fact that our people are too poor to purchase foreign goods; so that the prosperity which it is claimed is indicated by this state of facts is a negative and not a real prosperity.

The restoration of peace between the contending powers, which may occur within a brief period, would, by reopening the Black Sea to the commerce of Europe, remove the causes which have led to the commercial advantages we now enjoy, and force our return to the position we held before. In such an event, what would become of our increased grain and provision trade? The experience of this country at the close of the Crimean war will furnish the answer. The trade which by reason of the existing complications had come to us was almost instantly transferred to the Black Sea provinces, and this same result must inevitably follow the close of the present war and again turn the balance of trade against us.

It is our duty, sir, to look these facts boldly in the face and to endeavor to take proper steps to guard against the evils which seem to threaten us in the future.

COTTON.

There was a time when the cotton of the South constituted the greater part of our foreign exports, exceeding in amount $300,000,000 whereas to-day it does not reach $170,000,000; and more than this, as one of the results growing out of the transitions of the war, instead of producing and exporting the long staple varieties of cotton, we are actually importing them into this country.

Thus we find that instead of controlling, as we should do, the cotton trade of the world, both as to the raw material and manufactured goods, the scepter is rapidly passing from our hands and we are scarcely able to maintain a foothold where we were once sovereign and all-powerful. It is to remedy such evils as this that the committee have reported the bill now under consideration.

The present tariff system owes its existence solely and exclusively to the influence exercised by the manufacturing interests. Its intention is not to provide a revenue nor is it to oppress the agriculturist, but it is simply to build up the manufacturing interest, and of this we should not complain, if its purpose was not achieved at the expense of every other industry and the sacrifice of national progress and development. The agriculturist and the consumers are the direct victims of this pernicious policy.

This country has been built up first by the hardy pioneers who opened the way, through their strong arms and willing labor, for the thousands who were to follow in their footsteps. What has been their recompense?

When these fertile lands were within the control of the husbandman, his hand grasping the implements of labor brought forth from the soil its inexhaustible wealth. Step by step he advanced onward until the rich fields of the South and the boundless plains of the West were filled with hosts of laborers who were making of our new country the greatest grain and cotton producing country of the world.

Their labors were remunerative; nearly $300,000,000 was paid in 1860, to purchase the exports shipped from southern ports, and in later years the golden grain from the store-houses of the West has been transported to Europe in order that the starving thousands there might be fed.

The wealth that has come to our country from these sources has laid the foundation for every enterprise. It has erected the factories of the East and the foundries of Pennsylvania; it has built our railroads and opened up not alone this country, but the markets of the world to our commerce. And again I ask, Mr. Chairman, what has been the recompense of these producers of national wealth? Go among them, sir, and let their destitution answer you!

It costs to-day more to produce a pound of cotton than it can be sold for, and the grain of the West lies heaped up to be used as fuel, while its producer sees his land swept from his ownership under the hammer of the sheriff to satisfy mortgages held by eastern and northern capitalists. It is from this picture, Mr. Chairman, that I deduce my final reason why our present odious system of taxation should be changed; and that is, that the time has come to do justice to an oppressed interest and to those sections of the country whose interests have been hitherto ignored.

If a sense of justice is not sufficient to dictate such a course, then expediency must be, for I assert, and I know that the facts will bear me out in the assertion, that, unless the change is made, you will utterly destroy the agricultural interests of the country, and, with their destruction, your stocks, your bonds, and your credits will dwindle in value, and pauperism will not be confined to the sons of toil, but will spread itself among the ranks of those to whom is due the pernicious policy which has wrought all this ruin.

Since the adoption of the Constitution up to June, 1873, the appropriations made to seventeen southern States for certain purposes amounted to $71,841,581.76.

For the same period the amount appropriated to the twenty-two northern and western States and Territories amounted to $227,886,202.17.

I submit herewith a tabular statement showing the disposition of these sums, which I take from a speech delivered in this House on the 24th day of April, 1878, by Hon. HERNANDO D. MONEY, of Mississippi:

Statement showing the amount of money expended by the Government of the United States from the adoption of the Constitution to the 30th of June, 1873, in each State and Territory of the Union, for navy-yards, custom-houses, court-houses, and other public buildings; for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and for the construction of forts, arsenals, and armories, railroads, canals, and wagon-roads:

Add to this, showing the number of acres of land granted the North and West for public improvements, in round numbers, one hundred and seventy-six million acres. For the Southern States, seventeen million acres.

This table shows that the State of New York with the New England States receive more than the seventeen States which in 1860 produced twelve-thirteenths of the exportable wealth of the country.

Is it not time, I ask, Mr. Chairman, in the face of such figures as these, for us to express our reprobation of a policy which has been so unjust and sectional and which has wrought so much disaster?

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I desire to repeat the language of the honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. WOOD.] He said:

If I had the power to commence de novo I should reduce the duties 50 per cent. instead of less than 15 per cent. upon an average, as now proposed.

I desire to say in this connection that while I cannot permit myself to go so far as to say that the performance of an act of justice should be deferred through a feeling of tenderness for the wrongdoer or as a matter of expediency, still, when a disease may be healed surely and finally by the application of milder remedies, I should be slow to recommend severe and heroic treatment.

This bill, coupled with the declaration which I have just quoted, is a warning to the manufacturers of the land to set their houses in order, to prepare for equality of treatment under the law. It notifies them that while we now reduce these duties but 15 per cent., our next step will be to reduce them to the minimum rate which will provide a revenue for an economical administration of the Government.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I propose to submit a few thoughts on the laudable effort of the House Committee of Ways and Means to revise the present tariff on foreign importations. I do not essay this with the hope of adding further information or stronger inducements to such as are already in the possession of the House, but simply and briefly to place my views on record.

The necessity of government among men is too evident to admit of doubt; and, while it is the duty of such government to protect its citizens in life, liberty, and property, it is the reciprocal duty of its citizens to support and maintain their government. These reciprocal duties and rights should bear some proportion to each other. A tyrannical government, having for it object the oppression of the governed, should not be maintained, but should be destroyed. On the contrary a benign, intelligent, and fostering government should be supported to the extent of supplying all the means and power necessary to the successful execution of all its functions.

The sole object of government among men should be the happiness and prosperity of its citizens, and as long as these objects are sought to be attained by the government all citizens should cheerfully contribute men and money for its maintenance, and when these objects are abandoned this support should be withdrawn.

Of all the forms of government on earth ours is the best adapted to attain these great ends. Ours is essentially a government by the people, administered in their own interest, and so guarded by written constitutions, State and Federal, that even in moments of great passion and excitement sudden changes are impossible and legislation can go to certain well-defined limits and no further. Our State governments provide for local legislation while that of the United States possesses all the attributes of sovereignty drawn from the individual States necessary to furnish us with legislation on national and foreign matters. Our frame of government is admirably adapted to secure the great objects for which it was created. And so attached to the principles and form of our Government is the American mind that even in the late civil war between the National Government and the southern seceding States the form and principles of our Government were sacredly preserved by the States in opposition.

Our republican form of government, State as well as Federal, I maintain is the best known to man, and best adapted to secure his happiness and prosperity, and as such should be supported within constitutional and economical limits with both men and money.

Principal among the aids required by all governments is money; money to maintain the executive, legislative, and judicial departments, to provide for the general defense and promote the general welfare. This money must be raised by taxation, and the people must contribute it. Whether drawn from them directly or indirectly through the means of a tariff, the effect is the same. They supply the revenue. But it matters very little with the citizen how he is taxed so that the advantages of government are enjoyed alike and taxation is so levied as to bear equally on all and with injury to none. It is interesting to know what our resources are now, what they have been in the past, and the amounts and objects of taxation.

Prior to 1861 and as far back as 1836 and 1837 our revenue was principally drawn from duties imposed on foreign goods and the sales of public lands. The receipts from these sources were then as follows:

1836.	From customs	$19,391,310
	From public lands	14,757,600
	Total	34,148,910
1837.	From customs	$23,409,000
	From public lands	24,877,000
	Total	48,286,000

But now observe what a change. From the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury I extract the following:

FISCAL YEAR 1878.

For the present fiscal year the revenues, actual and estimated, will be as follows:

Total ordinary expenditures	70,730,905 55	161,699,738 17

From the actual receipts for the first quarter of the fiscal year and the estimates for the remaining three quarters, based upon existing laws, the total revenues for the current year will amount to $265,500,000 and the expenditures to $232,430,643.72, which will leave a surplus revenue of $33,069,356.28; and as the amount required for the sinking fund is $35,424,804.80, there will be a deficit on this account of $2,355,448.52.

FISCAL YEAR 1879.

The revenues for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, estimated upon existing laws, will be:

From customs	$133,000,000 00
From internal revenue	120,000,000 00
From sales of public lands	1,000,000 00
From tax on circulation and deposits of national banks	7,100,000 00
From repayment of interest by Pacific Railway Companies	1,100,000 00

From profits on coinage, &c	1,000,000 00
From miscellaneous sources	2,750,000 00
Total ordinary receipts	269,250,000 00

The estimates of expenditures, for the same period, received from the several Executive Departments, are as follows:

Legislative	$3,843,256 16
Executive	13,288,462 25
Judicial	391,900 00
Foreign intercourse	1,214,397 50

Navy Department	2,314,231 00
Interior Department	526,244 00
Department of Agriculture	15,750 00

Refunding acts—customs, internal revenue, lands, &c	5,043,000 00
Collecting revenue from customs	6,500,000 00
Miscellaneous	1,161,300 04
Total estimated expenditures	280,688,796 38

From these statements it will be seen that the principal source of our annual revenue has been, and is yet, from duties laid on foreign importations. Receipts from this source have vastly increased, while the receipts from the sales of public lands have greatly fallen off.

The amount of revenue to be raised from customs for the fiscal years 1878 and 1879 is as follows:

For 1878	$129,500,000
For 1879	133,000,000

These vast sums are to be paid into the Treasury by our people. If distributed equally so that each one could contribute an equal amount there would not be either complaint or injustice; but this is impossible under the operation of any tariff, however wisely conceived and perfectly executed.

The existing tariff has not been revised since our late civil war. The House committee of the Forty-fourth Congress, through their chairman, Mr. MORRISON, presented a tariff bill for this purpose; but it was defeated. The same committee of the present Congress, through Mr. WOOD, now attempts the same object. The bill is not such a one as I would prefer, but it is an improvement on the present law and is a step toward the equalization of the burdens of taxation.

If the principles of free trade cannot be carried into practical effect, to which I do not agree, and if the policy of our Government is committed irrevocably to a tariff for revenue, then I insist that in imposing a tariff two considerations should receive attention. First, the duties should be laid so as to produce the required revenue and no more, and without discriminating against any section or class. Second, in its operation the revenue collected should bear equally upon all persons, all classes, all industries, and all sections.

First. A tariff should be laid for revenue and not for protection, and if protection should become an incident, then all should share in this advantage. Revenue collected through the means of a tariff on foreign importations is protective to the extent of the duty imposed. All such tariffs are protective in their nature, operation, and effect. The manufacturer or producer in this country of a similar fabric or production to the one taxed is benefited to this extent, and the consumer of such taxed fabrics and productions is taxed to the same extent. For, although the duty is paid in the first instance by the importer, it is finally paid by the consumer, so that it is the consumer who pays the revenue to the Government, while the producer or manufacturer derives a profit on his goods and produce equal to the duty laid.

It is a tax on home consumption for the benefit of home capital and home industry. It is a tax on one man to benefit another, and this is unequal and unjust. Taxes should be imposed for the benefit of the Government, for nothing else and no more. All are equally interested in maintaining and supporting the Government and to this end all should contribute equally. Equality is equity in everything and everywhere.

When taxes are levied for other purposes than those essential to the administration of the Government or for more than the Government requires for a just and economical administration it becomes oppression, so that when the Government draws from the people more than is necessary to satisfy current expenses and applies the surplus for the benefit of one section over another, or one class over another, or one industry over another, it becomes unjust and oppressive. Mr. WOOD, in his speech on this subject, says:

While unquestionably the power to tax if confined to its legitimate object is restricted to that duty alone, yet if it can be made an instrument so as to combine other objects not inconsistent with just and equal taxation, by which the whole nation, as well the people as individuals, shall be alike advantaged, then is it not our duty to adopt it? To this end we should connect with our system a more enlarged and comprehensive scheme than that which now exists.

And as protection is an incident to the nature and effect of a tariff, this incident should itself be so directed as to benefit all equally: so that, while the burdens of taxation shall be equal, the incidental advantages should also be equal. The tariff for protection is odious to a community composed of consumers. A small portion of our people being interested in producing or manufacturing may look favorably on such a tariff, but the consumer who "protects" by the payment of an unequal burden never will.

At one time in the history of our country manufacturing industries were in their infancy and articles of prime necessity were imported from Europe. Then the protection plan might well have been temporarily enforced, but now it is not required. Our manufacturers have reached a point where they not only compete successfully with European manufacturers but are actually in competition with themselves, and more than this they are producing more goods than they can sell. We do not need a protective tariff now. We have protected and encouraged manufacturing until their fabrics have exceeded all demand. What we need now is less protection and more consumers. We need larger and stronger markets, and for these we are now turning our attention to Mexico and South America, to Japan and to China.

One disastrous effect of the protective policy is that both laborer and manufacturer are now distressed. The one desires labor, and at a higher price; the other less labor at a lower price. The one is a consumer, without the means to supply his necessities; the other is seeking consumers with means of acquisition. The one is knocking at the doors of Congress, asking for a loan of $400,000,000 to aid him in his transit and establishment in the great West; the other is equally clamorous for subsidies for steamship lines, railroads, and other connections with foreign countries, which, they hope, will open up new markets and stronger markets and a better trade.

As we cannot recall the past, we must accept the situation and provide for the future. Let the protective feature in our tariff cease; let the tariffs hereafter be established upon an ad valorem principle, and as soon as practicable put in practice the equitable principles of free trade. Let the world be thrown open to the consumer as well as to the manufacturer.

Secondly. A tariff should be so low as to bear equally upon all classes, all sections, all persons, and all industries.

If taxation should be equal, then the above proposition becomes self-evident; it admits of no dispute, no discussion. If a tariff cannot be devised so as to accomplish this result, then it should be abandoned, because unequal, unjust, and impracticable. My opinion is that it is both unequal and impracticable and should be abandoned. But this is impossible in the present condition of the country and the policy of our people. The nearest approach possible is all that we can now expect. A tariff imposed on ad valorem principles so devised that the element of protection shall be distributed in such a way as to approach equality in its operation, is all that we can at this time hope for.

If the consumers in this country must pay this great tribute, let the amount to be contributed among them and by them at least be equal. Let foreign importations be taxed according to their value, so that the rich and luxurious, those who have large estates and great incomes, may contribute their full proportion of the revenue. Let the humble citizen, too, contribute his share by a tax on the imported goods he may consume, according to their value; then there can be no dispute or discontent among them. The equalization of the protective principle is far more difficult and therefore more onerous.

In some sections our people need no protection and ask none. In others, whether needed or not, they have continually asked for it and have continually received it. If this protection is to be continued, as I fear it will be, let the imposition of duties be so graduated and arranged that the agriculturist, the laborer, and others of like vocations who need but little protection be supplied with necessary articles, machinery and goods useful in their pursuits and occupations, free of duty, and thus set off the protective advantages secured to manufacturers and others. This duty of equalizing the benefits and burdens of a tariff law is, I admit, a most difficult task. But still I hope it is not unattainable. This bill is a great improvement on the existing law, and while it does not meet my expectations, it is one great step in the right direction. It is the best we can get, and in the absence of a better shall receive my support.

Mr. BURCHARD obtained the floor.

Mr. WOOD. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. BURCHARD. I yield for the motion, with the understanding that I am to go on after the morning hour to-morrow.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAYLER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to impose duties upon foreign imports, to promote trade and commerce, to reduce taxation, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to present certain executive communications, if there be no objection, for reference to the appropriate committees.

Mr. MILLS. I object to the presentation of executive communications at this time, and ask that they be withheld, to be presented at the proper time at the expiration of the morning hour when we go to business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. We had a morning hour to-day; and these are executive communications which ought to go to the appropriate committees.

Mr. MILLS. The Chair will understand me. I want these and everything else upon the Speaker's table to remain there so as to have a morning hour to-morrow, when, at the expiration of which, it will be in order to move to go to the business upon the Speaker's table, and if this business remains upon the Speaker's table there will be an inducement on the part of the House to adopt that motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table will be in order to-morrow after the morning hour.

Mr. MILLS. But there will be no object in going to the Speaker's table if these communications which require reference are taken up by unanimous consent and referred at this time. But I withdraw my objection for to-day.

COURT OF CLAIMS JUDGMENTS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting two bills of additional judgments rendered by the Court of Claims; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WRECK OF THE HURON.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, relative to the expenses incurred in relation to the wreck of the steamer Huron; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MOLINE WATER-POWER.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the president of the Moline Water-Power Company, Illinois; which, on motion of Mr. HENDERSON, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF INDIAN TRIBES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting estimate of appropriations for the removal of Pima, Maricopa, and Papago Indians to the Indian Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FULLER, for one week;

To Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey, for two days;

To Mr. EVANS, of Indiana, for two weeks, on account of important business; and

To Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, for two weeks.

MRS. HELEN CAMP.

On motion of Mr. KNOTT, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Mrs. Helen Camp, there being no adverse report thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURCHARD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CONGER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BURCHARD. I call up the bill (H. R. No. 4414) to amend laws relating to internal revenue.

The SPEAKER. That is, the Chair thinks, already unfinished business, having been called up yesterday; but the gentleman did not assert his right this morning by reason of some arrangement unknown to the Chair.

Mr. CONGER. If the order is not taken up it is not unfinished business for to-morrow. I want the morning hour to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds that the bill was not read last night. The Chair stands corrected.

Mr. BURCHARD. I was recognized by the Chair to call up the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was recognized yesterday, and the Chair now recognizes him to call up the bill the title of which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4414) to amend laws relating to internal revenue.

Mr. CONGER. I desired that should not obtain the place of unfinished business and was endeavoring to prevent that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Michigan as moving that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BURCHARD. The gentleman from Michigan had not the floor. The Speaker recognized me. The motion of the gentleman could not take precedence of my calling up this special order and while I had the floor.

The SPEAKER. The bill is still a special order in the House.

Mr. BURCHARD. The gentleman from Michigan certainly could not take me from the floor by the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan was recognized to make the motion to adjourn. The bill loses nothing. It retains its place. Only the gentleman from Illinois wants that it shall have the additional weight of being unfinished business.

Mr. BURCHARD. I make the point of order that, being on the floor to call up this bill that the House may proceed to its consideration, the gentleman cannot take me from the floor by a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. But pending the motion of the gentleman from Illinois the Chair would be bound to recognize the gentleman from Michigan for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. When I made the motion to adjourn my intention was to take the gentleman off the floor.

Mr. BURCHARD. The gentleman from Michigan cannot by a motion to adjourn take a gentleman from the floor who is entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois was recognized and called up the special order; and then the gentleman from Michigan moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. That is not the order in which I desired it. My object was to prevent the gentleman from calling up the order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois was first recognized for that purpose.

Mr. CONGER. While the gentleman was calling up the order I rose to a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER. But you could not cut him off in the middle of his sentence while making his motion. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois was pending. The gentleman from Michigan comes in then with a motion of the highest privilege, a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BURCHARD. It was not necessary I should make any motion. All I had to do was to call for this, which is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman could have demanded the regular order; but pending that the Chair was bound to recognize the motion to adjourn, being a motion of the highest privilege.

Mr. BURCHARD. But the order itself would come before the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill stands precisely where it was, being a special order in the House.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

The question being put, the motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 10, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

A bill (H. R. No. 613) subjecting the Fort Wayne military reservation, in the State of Arkansas, to entry as other public lands in said State; and

A bill (H. R. No. 699) to restore certain lands in Iowa to settlement under the homestead law, and for other purposes.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) to provide for the enforcement of the eight-hour law was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from Charles Atkinson, president of the Moline Water-Power Company, with a report thereon from the Chief of Ordnance, renewing a former recommendation that Congress appropriate $157,330 to complete the development of the water-power at Rock Island arsenal; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 17th ultime, a statement from the Bureau of Statistics showing, so far as data have been obtained, the total consumption within the United States of all manufactured articles to which tariff duties apply; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 17th ultimo, relative to the right of the Indians to impose taxes in the Indian Territory, a copy of a letter of that Department to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the Commissioner's reply thereto, upon the subject of a tax upon cattle driven through the Cherokee country; and also copy of a communication from that Department to F. A. Sears, esq., attorney for the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company, in relation to a tax attempted to be levied upon that road by the authorities of the Cherokee Nation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will lie upon the table, if there be no objection. Shall the papers be printed?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have the impression that that subject has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and under that impression I move that these papers be referred to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall they be printed?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps it is not necessary to make the order to print now. Are they very voluminous?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are voluminous.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let them be referred, without printing.

Mr. DORSEY. I submitted the resolution to which the papers just laid before the Senate are an answer. My object was to have the papers go before the Committee on Territories, who are now investigating this whole question. I should be glad to have them take that reference if the Senator from Vermont has no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection; only, if I am not greatly mistaken, the Senate sent to the Committee on the Judiciary an inquiry into the state of the law on that very point; and therefore I supposed that this information was desirable. I did not know of the reference to which the Senator has alluded. Of course I shall make no objection to sending the papers wherever the Senate like; but, inasmuch as the Senate appears to have instructed two committees to engage in the same work, I must ask that the papers be printed, in order that all may have an opportunity to examine them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be referred to the Committee on Territories, and printed if there be no objection.

COMPLETION OF WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. DAWES. I ask leave, subject to morning business, to take up the joint resolution (H. R. No. 152) to enable the joint commission to carry into effect the act of Congress providing for the completion of the Washington Monument.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAWES. I now yield for morning business.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DORSEY presented the petition of Benjamin Severson and others, citizens of the District of Columbia, suggesting certain improvements of the Potomac River, and praying for the appointment of a commission of engineers for the purpose of considering these plans and making a report to Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUTLER presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Charleston, South Carolina, in favor of the adoption of the plan proposed by General Gillmore for deepening the channel and removing obstructions to the entrance of Charleston Harbor, and in favor of an appropriation by Congress for that purpose; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SARGENT. I present the memorial of Painter & Co., manufacturers of and dealers in type and printing material, of San Francisco, California, protesting against a proposition before the Senate for the remission of a fine imposed upon Miller & Richard of between $3,000 and $4,000 as a penalty for undervaluing a lot of goods passed through the San Francisco custom-house, and giving the reasons therefor at considerable length; the reasons, if true, being very forcible. I have no doubt they are true. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Finance, which, I believe, has the subject before it.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BECK presented the petition of A. H. Cardin and other citizens of Crittenden County, Kentucky, praying for the repeal of the resumption act, for the withdrawal of national-bank currency, and the substitution of greenbacks therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1228) for the relief of Mrs. M. J. Donohoe.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2026) granting a pension to Mrs. Julia S. W. Evans, widow of Henry D. Evans, late first lieutenant of Company B, Thirteenth Missouri Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 553) for the relief of William H. Akins and Jacob D. Felthousen, their heirs and assigns, reported it without recommendation, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1892) for the relief of Mrs. Amanda Rains, of Illinois, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1119) to confirm the title of Benjamin E. Edwards, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, to a certain tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico, reported it without amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 362) granting a pension to A. G. Ege, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3107) granting a pension to Louisa J. Guthrie and others, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 849) for the relief of Abraham Alstead, late a second lieutenant of Company A, of the Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1949) granting a pension to Benjamin C. Webster, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Peter Staub, of Tennessee, praying compensation for the alleged use and occupancy of his property by United States military forces, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GARLAND asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1229) for the relief of F. X. Coincon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1230) for the relief of F. X. Coincon; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. KELLOGG asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1231) granting a pension to Captain Marshal H. Twitchell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1232) to repeal the provision of the act of July 24, 1876, concerning free roads, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. INGALLS. I offer a resolution to amend Rule 43, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Rule 43 be amended by striking out the words "relating to adjournment" and inserting the words "to adjourn."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. KELLOGG and Mr. WHYTE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 4236) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY RAILWAY IN TEXAS.

Mr. COKE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 853) to aid in the construction of a military, commercial, and postal rail highway from the military headquarters of the United States Army at San Antonio, in the State of Texas, to the Rio Grande, at or near the town of Laredo; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. PADDOCK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 1186) amendatory of and supplementary to the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and the several acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

RATES OF PENSION.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted certain amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4422) to amend section 4695 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported by him from the Committee on Pensions on April 30, and moved that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions, and printed together with the amendments; which was agreed to.

BALTIMORE DRY-DOCK.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield a moment that I may ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 1044) granting a site for a dry-dock in the city of Baltimore upon certain conditions. I do not think there will be the slightest objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield for that purpose?

Mr. DAWES. If, as the Senator suggests, it will not cause debate, I will yield to the Senator; but if it is to cause debate I hope the Senator will allow me to proceed with the joint resolution which is regularly before the Senate.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1044) granting a site for a dry-dock in the city of Baltimore upon certain conditions. It directs the Secretary of War to convey to the Baltimore Dry-Dock Company, of Baltimore City, a body-corporate created under the laws of the State of Maryland, for the consideration described in the second section, so much of the land belonging to the United States in that city, known as the Fort McHenry tract as lies between the northwestern boundary line of the tract and a line parallel thereto and distant four hundred and fifty feet therefrom, and between a line two hundred and fifty feet from the northern side of Fort avenue (a street or avenue of that city, extented) and parallel thereto and the northwest branch of the Patapsco River.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in section 2, line 7, before the word "use," to insert "the," and after the word "use" to insert "forever of;" so as to make the section read:

That in consideration of the said conveyance, and as the condition upon which the same is made, the said dry-dock company shall be required to construct, upon the land conveyed as aforesaid, within two years from the date of the conveyance, an efficient Simpson's improved dry-dock four hundred and fifty feet in length, and to accord to the United States the right to the use forever of the said dry-dock, at any time, for the prompt examination and repair of vessels belonging to the United States, free from charge for docking.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to the absence from this bill of any provision for this dry-dock being kept up fit for use, and of any provision for the reverting of the land to the United States in case it should not be kept up for the uses for which it is granted.

Mr. WHYTE. I have no objection to the insertion of such an amendment. The Senator from Vermont can suggest it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. From what I have heard of the subject I am inclined to look with favor upon the proposition; but I think there ought to be a provision that, if at any time the dry-dock shall be abandoned or shall not be kept in proper condition for use for a certain space of time, then the property shall revert to the United States.

Mr. WHYTE. If the Senator will put that suggestion in writing I will assent to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the second section of the bill by striking out the period at the end of the section and inserting a semicolon, and also adding these words:

And if at any time said property hereby conveyed shall be diverted to any other use than that herein named, or if the said dry-dock shall be at any time unfit for use for a period of three months or more, the property hereby conveyed, with all its privileges and appurtenances, shall revert to and become the absolute property of the United States.

Mr. WHYTE. I suggest to the Senator to make the time six months. Three months is a little too short a time in case of accident to the dock.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; I will say six months.

Mr. WHYTE. Then I will accept the amendment without any hesitancy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Six months' time is satisfactory enough.

Mr. WHYTE. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be accepted unanimously.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND CLAIM IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. EATON. I appeal to my friend from Massachusetts also that I may call up a bill which was passed over at my request the other day when it was reached in its order on the Calendar, because the Senator from Oregon [Mr. GROVER] who reported the bill was not present.

Mr. DAWES. Very well.

Mr. EATON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 753) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It confirms the private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico known as the Mesita Juana Lopez grant, made by the Spanish Government January 18, 1782, examined, approved, and recommended for confirmation by the surveyor-general of New Mexico November 29, 1872, designated as private land claim No. 64, and duly surveyed by the United States.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the words "nor shall the United States be liable to make compensation for and part of said land to which there are or may be any adverse rights or claim;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the foregoing confirmation shall only be construed as a quit-claim or relinquishment of all title or claim on the part of the United States in and to said private land claim, and shall not affect the adverse rights of any person or persons to the same; nor shall the United States be liable to make compensation for any part of said land to which there are or may be any adverse rights or claim.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask whether the bill contains the provision that modern experience has shown to be necessary for security against any claim upon the United States in the event of a failure of title to any of this land.

Mr. THURMAN. That is provided in the bill:

Nor shall the United States be liable to make compensation for any part of said land to which there are or may be any adverse rights or claim.

That is the amendment which has just been adopted.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPLETION OF WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. DAWES. For what purpose?

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask the Senate to consider Senate bill No. 532.

Mr. DAWES. I wish the Senator would excuse me. I have yielded two or three times and I have some personal reasons why I should like to proceed with the joint resolution at this time. I ask the Senate now to consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 152) to enable the joint commission to carry into effect the act of Congress providing for the completion of the Washington Monument. It authorizes the joint commission created by the act of Congress entitled "An act providing for the completion of the Washington Monument," approved August 2, 1876, to apply a portion of the money appropriated by that act, not exceeding $36,000, to give greater stability to the foundation, if they deem it advisable.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported an amendment, to add to the joint resolution:

And said commission shall report the result of such expenditure to Congress at the next session, with their opinion of the stability of the foundation after such expenditure: And provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize, until the further action of Congress, the expenditure of any part of said $200,000 otherwise than as herein provided.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts explain this matter to us. Of course we can understand what the resolution says; but a great many people in the United States, of whom I am one, would be very glad to know why this monument to the chief founder of this Republic cannot be finished some time or other, when Congress has been trying so long and so often to get it done.

Mr. DAWES. I will explain to the Senate the reasons why the committee propose to attach this amendment to the House resolution, and I think that if the whole people of the United States, sympathizing, as I have no doubt they do, with the Senator from Vermont, should know exactly the situation of things as they appeared to the committee, they would agree with the committee that this is a wise provision.

The original appropriation of $200,000, made by the act of 1876, contained two conditions precedent to the expenditures of any part of the money, neither of which has been complied with. The first was that the Washington Monument Association should make a conveyance to the United States of the property upon which the monument is now situated, should reconvey it to the United States so that the Government should have jurisdiction and control of it. There is no objection that I know of on the part of the monument association to fulfilling that condition when the other conditions are sufficiently in progress to justify it. There has been so much talk, first, about the site itself, and then about the condition of the foundation of the monument, that the monument association have hesitated; and, being so devotedly attached as they are both to the site and to the form of the structure, they have not been willing—and no one wonders at their present feeling—to let go their jurisdiction until that point is settled. That point has not been settled, and therefore, holding to the original idea upon which the grant was made, there could be no use of the money appropriated for continuing of work until that was done.

The other condition is a more serious one. The second section of the act provided:

That prior to commencing any work on said monument an examination shall be made as to the foundation of the monument in order to thoroughly ascertain whether it is sufficient to sustain the weight of the completed structure, and if the same shall be found insufficient then the further continuance of the work shall not be authorized by anything herein contained until the further action of Congress.

The committee construe that to mean that Congress shall have an opportunity to pass upon the condition of that foundation. The result of the commission's examination is embodied in this paragraph of their report:

The commission is of the opinion that, in view of the reports made by the board of engineers, it must be assumed that the foundation is insufficient to sustain the weight of the completed structure; also that, while it is feasible to bring the foundation to the required stability, under the wording of the law no authority exists for making this expenditure. The subject is therefore submitted to Congress for further action.

They desire the diversion, if I may use that word, of a portion of the $200,000 to the work of making firm and stable the foundation of this monument. I think the country will be surprised to learn that a monument designed to be six hundred feet in height, as was the original plan of this monument, and of the weight of this whole structure, should have a foundation which is sunk only eight feet in the ground and resting eight feet below the surface upon clay and sand. Yet that is the fact in relation to this monument. That the structure has been very thoroughly made from that point, I do not know that there is any doubt among the engineers; but so placed upon clay and sand, only eight feet below the surface, great anxiety has existed for many years about the future of the monument. It is ascertained beyond doubt that the foundation of the monument has inclined six-tenths of an inch, making a deflection from the perpendicular of the monument at its present height of one and six-tenths of an inch. There is a good deal of controversy between the monument association and the engineers and others about the fact whether this foundation is sufficiently firm for the completed structure. The monument association are very sanguine and are very strongly convinced that it is sufficient. The result of the examination of the board of engineers under whose control this $200,000 was placed, is in the paragraph that I have read.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question? Do the board of engineers give any opinion as to whether the foundation can be made sufficient?

Mr. DAWES. I was going to state it. That is stated in the conclusion of the paragraph that I a moment ago read, and I will state it further at length.

The commission is of the opinion—

As I have read—

that, in view of the reports made by the board of engineers, it must be assumed that the foundation is insufficient to sustain the weight of the completed structure; also—

Which is the answer to the Senator from Ohio—

that, while it is feasible to bring the foundation to the required stability under the wording of the law, no authority exists for making this expenditure.

The engineers go into details, and at length and with very complicated mathematical problems, to demonstrate their conclusions, which are unintelligible to me, and therefore I cannot make them intelligible to any one else. Their conclusion, however, I think we have a right to assume, and that is that they feel confident that the foundation can be made firm. They propose one of two methods for making that foundation firm. I will state those two methods, and the Senate will see then the propriety of the amendment proposed to this joint resolution.

The first of these methods is to substitute a new foundation, to take out the present foundation at the bottom of this monument, and put a new one there, taking it out of course in sections. They, however, came to the very wise conclusion that that is not only a very expensive experiment but a very hazardous one, and they do not recommend that. They propose another, which is the only method that they recommend; and that is to first surround the present foundation with piles driven into the ground a great distance, and then surround those piles by a wall which they describe, and from the description it would appear to be a very solid and firm wall, some twenty-two feet below the surface; then take out the earth between the piles and the present existing foundation, taking that out by sections carefully so as not to disturb it, and substitute in the place of it solid masonry, and then place upon the surface inside of the monument and outside of the monument—the monument of course every one knows has a chord inside—a superincumbent weight equal, together with the present structure, to the whole weight of the completed structure in order to compress and make firm the foundation which they propose to substitute for the existing state of things. They suggest that it is possible to so arrange this weight as to bring the monument back to perpendicular. They do not promise that, but suggest the possibility of so doing that, and they rely as a part of this undertaking upon the weight which they propose to pile up around and inside of this monument to make solid the foundation upon which they propose to rest the structure. Seventy-five or eighty feet high they calculate will be necessary to put on a weight which together with the present structure will be equal to the entire weight when it is completed. They speak with great confidence of the success of this method, but they say in reference to it that time will determine how long it will be necessary for this superincumbent weight to remain there before the result they expect will be attained, and therefore before they commence the structure. So the Senate will see at once that if we follow the suggestions of the commission, there can be no commencement of the completed structure this summer or before the meeting of Congress again.

Mr. PADDOCK. What will be the expense of this experiment?

Mr. DAWES. This method they estimate will cost $55,000. This resolution proposes to divert $36,000. I understand that $36,000 was put in in the other branch because there is in the report of the commission, extracted from a report made in 1874 to the other branch, a method of strengthening this foundation submitted by another engineer, which he suggested would cost but $36,000. This is embodied in the report, but the details of it and the character of it are not in the report, and all that can be learned of it is from a drawing which is in this report of the commission that I hold in my hand. Whether it is practicably feasible, or will meet the commendation of the commission, is not known. It has never been submitted to either branch, so far I know. It appears to be a very intelligent and plausible plan of accomplishing the work.

This money is placed under the control of the commission, no one of whom is the gentleman who suggested this method. He suggested that this could be done for $36,000, and the resolution that comes from the House proposes to divert $36,000 to that work, and so I assume that the House proposed to adopt his method, although I do not speak with any authority.

Mr. PADDOCK. I understand from what the Senator says that if they should fail to restore the perpendicular of the shaft this preliminary expenditure would be lost.

Mr. DAWES. Oh, no. They do not propose to abandon the work by any means if the slight deflection from perpendicular of 1.6 inch at the present height is not restored. They do not propose by any means to avoid completing the structure. They propose to cure that in the further progress of the work. It is not proposed by any of the recent plans to carry the work up to its original height of six hundred feet, but a little over four hundred feet is the height.

Mr. INGALLS. Four hundred and eighty-five.

Mr. DAWES. Four hundred and eighty-five feet. That is unfortunately three or four feet below another obelisk, so that it will not be the highest in the world, as I understand. The committee came to the conclusion that it was the original design of Congress before the work was commenced by the money appropriated by Congress that Congress should be made certain that this foundation was perfectly stable. Doubt arising about the different methods, and all these methods requiring for their completion certainly all the time between these sessions of Congress, and in view of the fact that the association had not as yet conveyed the ground to the Government, it was deemed wise to put in this proviso that would prevent any construction of the original provision that would authorize going on with the work until Congress was certain of the foundation.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. Do any of these statements show what the cost would be of taking down the present blocks and making a new and undoubtedly adequate foundation, and piling them up again?

Mr. DAWES. None of them, I believe, contemplate the taking out of the original blocks in estimating what would be the cost, and the committee did not consider that. The committee thought that Congress had gone so far in legislation as to have determined, so far as Congress were concerned, that they would not entertain that idea. The committee may, of course, have been in error; but they would do two things if the two things could be done. They would complete this monument nearly according to the original plan; but before they would do that they would be certain that by no mischance what has been done and what may be done would be involved in the great misfortune, not to say reproach, that would come upon the work and the undertaking if it should fall down in the end.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether it would be competent in Congress to order that monument to be taken down. As I understand, it was built by an association and by private contributions, and not by appropriations from Congress.

Mr. DAWES. I will say in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware, that without the consent of the monument association I do not know that Congress would have any more right to take it down than they would to take down my house. The United States conveyed the land constituting the site to this association under the direction of Congress, by deed signed by the President of the United States with a good deal of formality. The United States conveyed to the association this land and the jurisdiction over it, for the purpose of this monument, and they have a right for aught I can see to exercise exclusive control over it. However, they are willing to co-operate with us. But the Senate can see why they are so tenacious of the hold they have upon it until it can be completed in this way. The ground has some peculiar associations about it. We have in the committee-room the original map of the city of Washington, laid out by a French engineer by the name of L'Enfant, under the direction of General Washington himself, and submitted to Congress for its approval at the time. Upon that map there is laid out from the White House to this very point an avenue four hundred feet wide, from this point turning a right angle to what is called "the Congress House" the same way. He describes the mode of laying out that broad avenue and how it is to be adorned by trees and walks in a style very magnificent; and then he puts in that angle the letter "A" and at the side corresponding to the letter "A" is this:

Site for an equestrian monument of George Washington.

This was submitted by Washington to Congress in 1791 I think, and Congress approved of it. Subsequently, in 1795, there came an Italian artist of great merit to this country, and there was a great deal of effort to secure the erection in this country of a monument to the American Revolution. President Washington selected for the site on which to erect this monument this very identical spot, where they had yet failed to put the equestrian statue of Washington, which was authorized by the Continental Congress in 1783. Those suggestions, derived from the early history of the city, are relied upon by the monument association very strongly for holding to this spot.

Then the monument association have expended some $200,000. They have received, I think, one hundred and twenty memorial tablets from foreign nations and from other states and associations to be placed in this monument with different inscriptions upon them. They have placed in it some forty. The remainder are there on the ground ready to be placed.

Every consideration connected with the mode of progress of the work hitherto, as well as the associations connected with the spot, render it altogether out of the question, the committee believe, to consider whether it is worth while now for us to take down the monument and seek a more desirable spot and a different plan. However we might differ, if it were an original question at this moment, with the monument association as to the spot, or however we might differ with them as to the plan of the monument itself, the idea of taking down stone by stone the work thus far constructed and moving it off to some other place in the city, and beginning a work which may be subject to the contingencies before it is completed that would thus overtake this work, is a spectacle that the committee do not desire to be responsible in suggesting to Congress. The work has gone on thus far, the money obtained by private subscription has been thus far expended; tablets sent here by foreign nations have been placed in this work; and whether we could better it or not, if the foundation can be made certain, it seems to the committee that the work had better go on to completion as it is; and if it had better go on to completion, the sooner it goes on to completion consistent with the safety of the work, the better; and nothing beyond that is sought by the committee in the attachment of this amendment to the House resolution.

Mr. CONKLING. How high is it now?

Mr. DAWES. One hundred and eighty feet including the foundation. I should like to add another proviso to the amendment:

And provided further, That the President may detail an officer of the Engineer Corps to report to said joint commission for duty in carrying out the work herein provided for.

So that whoever has the control of it shall be there by authority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves this amendment to the amendment of the committee. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the joint resolution be reported as it now stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be reported as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the joint commission created by the act of Congress entitled "An act providing for the completion of the Washington Monument," approved August 2, 1876, be, and they are hereby, authorized to apply a portion of the money appropriated by said act, not exceeding $36,000, to give greater stability to the foundation, if they deem it advisable; and said commission shall report the result of such expenditure to Congress at the next session, with their opinion of the stability of the foundation after such expenditure: And provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize, until the further action of Congress, the expenditure of any part of said $200,000 otherwise than as herein provided: And provided further, That the President may detail an officer of the Engineer Corps to report to said joint commission for duty in carrying on the work herein provided for.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts for a moment. I desire to ascertain from him what amount has already been appropriated, and what is the estimate of the cost? I am in sympathy with the finishing of the monument; I believe it ought to be done; but I want the information.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator inquire how much has been expended on it thus far?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No, sir; how much has been appropriated and what is the estimate of the cost?

Mr. DAWES. How much by Congress?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWES. There was appropriated two years ago the sum of $200,000, $50,000 a year for four years, with a section attached that no part of it should be expended if the commission had doubts about the foundation of the monument until further action of Congress. No part of it has been expended at all, for they did not feel that they were authorized to do so by the wording of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now is there an estimate of the cost?

Mr. DAWES. There is no very accurate estimate; but about $250,000 is supposed to be necessary to complete the monument at its present height.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. According to the original plan?

Mr. DAWES. My colleague on the committee [Mr. MORRILL] says it is more than that. He has it more familiarly in his mind than myself.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is it in contemplation to complete it as originally designed?

Mr. DAWES. Not as originally designed. As originally designed there was to be a pantheon about it one hundred feet high that was to cost of itself more than a million dollars, and from its center was to rise this shaft six hundred feet high. The monument association has abandoned the original design and so modified the obelisk as to reduce it to four hundred and eighty-five feet from six hundred feet. There is no other modification that I know of.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, one consideration occurs to me which I hope will not sound like a criticism——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired. Is there objection to the further consideration of this joint resolution? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. THURMAN. I am content to let it go on for fifteen minutes, subject to a call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the understanding.

Mr. CONKLING. I was going to say, Mr. President, that I should dislike to subject myself to the suspicion of being wanting in any of the interest which so properly and naturally attaches to this subject. The object, of course, as indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts, is to do an effectual work and accomplish something which will be not only enduring but creditable. To carry up this monument to two-thirds of the distance originally contemplated, and leave it with a suspicion of being ill-founded, so that even the present generation would dread to see it tumble down and the next generation would expect it to do so, would be I think I might say almost worse than doing nothing, except to abandon the enterprise. I have no right to assume in the presence of the somewhat qualified statements of these engineers that such would be the result of the proposition of the committee; and yet I think nobody listening to the statements and reading these reports can dismiss from his mind such a fear.

Now, very obviously there occurs to me an alternative, and it seems to me it is feasible, and certainly it would be effectual if you assume that ordinary skill would obtain in its application. In the case of this structure, as in that of most structures of stone or ponderous material brought from a long distance, a very considerable part of the cost is in the material and transportation. The material is here; it has been transported from distant places; and it is on the very spot where for reasons referred to by the Senator it should be. Now, to take apart these blocks and rebuild them, involves only one of the elements of cost in piling up a structure; that is, labor merely. I asked the Senator whether anybody had stated the expense of doing that. He said no. I am not able to state it; but suppose it should turn out, as I think it would, that for a sum not very large these blocks could be taken down, the ground entirely denuded, so that as an original matter that foundation could be laid which engineers would insist was the true foundation to support six hundred feet of uplifted stone as was the original design Then every part of this object would be accomplished; the original design would be carried out; the tallest obelisk of this sort extant on the globe would be reared, and something would be done not only creditable, a memorial would be made not only stately, but literally perpetual so far as masonry can be.

Under this bill an experiment is to be tried. If it fails, the money is wasted altogether. If it succeeds, it leaves a problem, which rests in the opinion, how long this will stand, and should it stand perpetually. All that the committee propose to found on the present work is an obelisk four hundred and eighty-five feet high which, instead of carrying out the original design and being a thing peerless of its kind, is to be secondary and inferior to already erected monuments of the same kind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Already erected obelisks?

Mr. CONKLING. So I understand. I heard the Senator from Massachusetts refer to one which is taller than this is to be if it were made four hundred and eighty-five feet.

Mr. DAWES. That is the way I understand it. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] shook his head when I made the statement. I think there is somewhere in these papers a list of the various obelisks.

Mr. MORRILL. It is another monument that is higher, not an obelisk.

Mr. CONKLING. As long as the Senator from Massachusetts utters his voice and some other Senator only shakes his head, I will stand by the Senator from Massachusetts as long as he stands by himself. However that particular point may be, the original design was to make this six hundred feet. That was to out-top all other things of the sort. All that can be done now if we can secure a foundation; and I should like before voting upon this bill to know how much it would take to separate these stones from each other, to lay them aside, and make this ground blank again, to the end that just such a foundation as ought to have been, may be, put there, and the original design executed. If it is a very large sum of money, perhaps there would be very little utility in the suggestion. I presume my friend from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] will not object to my saying that he suggests to me, perhaps as his own opinion merely, that it would cost $100,000. If, as I am told, it will cost $55,000 to try this experiment, and $100,000 will do what I have stated and enable us to execute the original design, until I hear some suggestion to the contrary I should vote without hesitation for the expenditure of $100,000 in order to do effectually and well that which, if it is worth doing at all, is worth doing in the best manner. Considering that we are building for a far futurity and building in the capital of a great nation, a capital not excessively crowded with successful works of art, I would rather make a mistake on the right side than the wrong. I dare not say much about the works of art in this city, having the fear of the Senator from Massachusetts before my eyes. There are works of art here which, if I felt at liberty to do so, I would commend very highly. The Senator alluded to an equestrian statue. There stands an equestrian statue on Sixteenth street and Massachusetts avenue, and I think any member of the Senate will wander far and wide before he will find an equestrian statue which can endure criticism better than that. I would we had more such.

Mr. DAWES. The highest pyramid, the Cheops, is four hundred and eighty feet. That is five feet below this; but the spire of Cologne is five hundred and ten, and the spire of old St. Paul's, in London, which was destroyed by fire in 1661, was five hundred and eight. So far as I am informed, these two were higher than this will be—four hundred and eighty-five feet. The highest of all the pyramids is only four hundred and eighty feet.

The Senator from West Virginia inquired about the expenditure. Upon the seventeenth page of the commission's report is an estimate of the approximate cost of completing the shaft to four hundred feet with a terrace at its base. According to that estimate it would cost $310,685.93 for four hundred feet.

Mr. THURMAN. As I understand the Senator from Massachusetts, the engineers are of the opinion that this foundation can be made perfectly secure. If that be so, where is the necessity of pulling down the structure that has been erected? I think we ought not to pull down when, for a less expense than would be incurred in pulling down, we may make the foundation secure. Therefore, I hope that this resolution without further debate will pass.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, the Senator from New York has admirably stated an idea that I could not have stated nearly as well, though it had occurred to me; and that was that the pulling down and reconstructing was the cheaper method of securing a good foundation. It was thrown out here while he was speaking that the cost of that would not exceed $100,000. I understand the monument as it now stands at one hundred and eighty feet—it is proposed to make it six hundred feet——

Mr. CONKLING. It was proposed——

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend from Wisconsin bear in mind that it is not the cost of pulling down alone? If you pull down you have to build up.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator does not suppose it would cost $100,000 to take those stones down?

Mr. THURMAN. You cannot take them down and put them up for $100,000, because it has cost a great deal more than $100,000 to put them up.

Mr. HOWE. I understand the Senator from Massachusetts that the work is estimated to cost not over $250,000.

Mr. DAWES. I was mistaken and I corrected myself, for the estimate in the commission's report for putting it up to four hundred feet is $310,685.93. That is their estimate for carrying it up to four hundred feet.

Mr. CONKLING. That includes the material?

Mr. DAWES. That includes everything.

Mr. HOWE. I am not so confident as I was about this being the cheapest process; but I still think we ought to remember that the engineers do not undertake to guarantee that we can get sure foundations if we expend $55,000 on that experiment. It certainly would not be a very gratifying circumstance, in addition to what has been laid out there, if we were to spend $55,000 and still be without a proper foundation for the monument.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

TRADE-DOLLAR COINAGE.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish the Senate with a statement of the circumstances under which the receipt of deposits at the different mints for coinage into trade-dollars was suspended in October, 1877, together with copies of all correspondence in relation to the same.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-roads in the several States therein named; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 9th instant, approved and signed the act (S. No. 328) granting a pension to Mrs. Esther A. George.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. PADDOCK, it was Ordered, That B. L. Fletcher have permission to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in his case, the originals being on file in the War Department.

BANKRUPT-LAW REPEAL.

Mr. THURMAN. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the consideration of the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 35) to repeal the bankrupt law. The first amendment has been concurred in. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] to the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary to the second amendment of the House of Representatives, on which the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, when yesterday, owing to the lateness of the hour and the long continuance of the session, I yielded for an adjournment, I was endeavoring to trace the nature, power, and extent of the grant in the Constitution to Congress "to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States." Whatever power Congress has to pass uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States is gathered entirely from that clause of the Constitution. It is not a question before the Senate whether that clause is broad enough and liberal enough, whether that clause ought to be sufficient to include insolvent laws as well as bankrupt laws; but the question, and the only question, for us to inquire into is, what is the grant of power contained in that clause of the Constitution? for it is entirely clear that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

In the case of that question or any other difficult and doubtful question in the Constitution, it is well to refer to the constitutional history from which we are to gather the true intent and meaning of the framers of the Constitution and the meaning of the States and people in adopting the Constitution.

The convention which framed the Constitution met for business on the 25th of May, 1787. On the 29th of May, four days after the session began, Mr. Charles Pinckney, of South Carolina, submitted a draft of a constitution for a Federal government, which was referred to the committee of the whole. On the same day Mr. Edmund Randolph, of Virginia, submitted resolutions amendatory of the Articles of Confederation, which were in like manner referred to the committee of the whole. On the 15th of June Mr. Paterson, of New Jersey, submitted propositions to revise the Articles of Confederation, which had a like reference. These great and well-considered papers, many parts of which now constitute a portion of the Constitution of the United States, were referred to a committee, and that committee, through its chairman, Mr. Rutledge, on the 6th day of August, 1787, reported a draft of a constitution, and subsequently, on the 20th of August, submitted a supplemental report to be added to that which they had made on the 6th of August.

It is a remarkable fact that from the 29th day of May up to the 6th day of August, 1787, not one word was said in the convention, nor was there one word mentioned in any proposition which was submitted to the convention, in respect to a bankrupt law of any nature, character, or description; but the first remark that was made in regard to a bankrupt law at all was a motion made by Mr. Charles Pinckney, of South Carolina, on the 29th day of August, 1787:

To establish uniform laws upon the subject of bankruptcies, and respecting the damages arising on the protest of foreign bills of exchange.

That motion of Mr. Pinckney was referred to the same committee, and on the 1st day of September the committee, through Mr. Rutledge its chairman, made its report in the following language:

Hon. Mr. Rutledge, from the committee to whom sundry propositions entered on the Journal of the 28th ultimo were referred, informed the House that the committee were prepared to report. The following report was then read: That the following additions be made to the report, namely: after the word "States," in the last line on the margin of the third page, add "to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies," and insert the following as the sixteenth article, namely:

That question came up then. This report was made on the 1st of September and was acted on by the convention on the 3d of September, and was by the convention adopted:

On the question to agree to the following clause of the report: "to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies."

It was adopted by a vote of nine States in favor and one against. The report thus adopted was then transferred to the main report, which had been made on the 6th of August, and now constitutes a part of the eighth section of the first article, in the clause "to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States."

Turning from the journal of the convention, from which I have read, to the debates, I find this:

Mr. Pinckney moved to commit article 16, with the following proposition: "to establish uniform laws upon the subject of bankruptcies, and respecting the damages arising on the protest of foreign bills of exchange."

The sixteenth article of the report of the 6th of August, 1787, to which he referred, was this:

Article XVI. Full faith shall be given in each State to the acts of the Legislatures, and to the records and judicial proceedings of the courts and magistrates of every other State.

What ensued?

Mr. Gorham was for agreeing to the article, and committing the proposition.
Mr. Madison was for committing both.

Turning on then to the action taken on the report of the 1st of September, which was on the 3d of September, I find in the debates of the convention:

The clause in the report, "to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies," being taken up—
Mr. Sherman observed that bankruptcies were, in some cases, punishable with death by the laws of England, and he did not choose to grant a power by which that might be done here.
Mr. Gouverneur Morris said this was an extensive and delicate subject. He would agree to it, because he saw no danger of abuse of the power by the legislature of the United States.
On the question to agree to the clause, Connecticut alone was in the negative.

Thus we have in that very short debate the view which was taken by the framers of the Constitution in regard to what a bankrupt law was. Referring now to Blackstone's Commentaries, we find the meaning of what was said by Mr. Sherman when he declared that in some cases bankruptcies were punishable with death by the laws of England, and that he did not choose to grant a power by which that might be done here. We find the definition of "bankruptcies" given in Blackstone, which then was a standard authority, as it now is, and well understood by the convention and evidently well understood by Mr. Sherman, who made the remark which I have just quoted from the debates of the convention.

The eighth and last method whereby lands and tenements may become forfeited is that of bankruptcy, or the act of becoming a bankrupt; which unfortunate person may, from the several descriptions given of him in our statute law, be thus defined: a trader who secretes himself, or does certain other acts, tending to defraud his creditors.

Further on, on the same subject, Blackstone says:

Who may become a bankrupt? A bankrupt was before defined to be "a trader, who secretes himself, or does certain other acts, tending to defraud his creditors." He was formerly considered merely in the light of a criminal or offender, and in this spirit we are told by Sir Edward Coke that we have fetched as well the name as the wickedness of bankrupts from foreign nations. But at present the laws of bankruptcy are considered as laws calculated for the benefit of trade and founded on the principles of humanity as well as justice; and to that end they confer some privileges, not only on the creditors, but also on the bankrupt or debtor himself. On the creditors, by compelling the bankrupt to give up all his effects to their use, without any fraudulent concealment; on the debtor, by exempting him from the rigor of the general law, whereby his person might be confined at the discretion of his creditor, though in reality he has nothing to satisfy the debt: whereas the law of bankrupts, taking into consideration the sudden and unavoidable accidents to which men in trade are liable, has given them the liberty of their persons, and some pecuniary emoluments, upon condition they surrender up their whole estate to be divided among their creditors.

Referring to Bailey's English Dictionary, which was also a standard work at the date of the adoption of the Constitution, we find the word "bankrupt" defined thus:

One who by the laws of the land is obliged by his creditors to yield up his goods, chattels, estate, and debts, &c., for their use, till they are discharged of their respective debts, as far as the said estate, &c., will allow; also a trader that breaks and steps aside with design to defraud his creditors.

It is entirely clear, therefore, that bankrupt laws as understood at the date of the adoption of the Constitution were traders' laws. It is entirely clear that this meaning of "bankrupt" and "bankruptcy" was perfectly understood by the framers of the Constitution. The remark which was made by Mr. Sherman, which evidently referred to the quotation I have made from Blackstone, shows clearly that the framers of our Constitution, when they inserted that clause, had a perfectly clear meaning and understanding of the word "bankruptcy." In not one of the original drafts of the Constitution, in none of the resolutions submitted to the convention, was the word "bankruptcy" contained. It was not in the report of the 6th of August, 1787, made by the committee to the convention nor in the supplemental reports of that committee. Not one word occurs anywhere in any of these papers in regard to bankruptcy at all; and the framer of the draft which was more used in the framing of the Constitution than any other paper that went before that convention, the draft of Mr. Pinckney, of South Carolina, seems never to have thought of this question of bankruptcy until it occurred to him on the 29th of August, 1787, and then he coupled it with the damages resulting from the protest of a foreign bill of exchange, clearly showing that in his mind, when he introduced that clause in the convention, he had in view a traders' law.

It is not for us to determine whether the Constitution should be so broad and liberal as to cover insolvent acts as well as bankrupt acts. The question for us to determine is, what is the power which was conferred on Congress by the Constitution in the clause "to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States?" On that subject I beg to read a clause in the Federalist, in the forty-second number, written by Mr. Madison, and this will show that Mr. Madison himself understood that clause of the Constitution to refer to a trader's law:

The power of establishing uniform laws of bankruptcy is so intimately connected with the regulation of commerce, and will prevent so many frauds where the parties or their property may lie or be removed into different States, that the expediency of it seems not likely to be drawn into question.

Upon the same subject, Mr. Van Buren, in this Chamber on January, 1826, made these remarks:

At the time of the adoption of the Constitution they [bankruptcy and insolvent laws] were known and distinguished both in England and in this country as distinct systems—the one having for its object to afford a summary and speedy remedy for creditors against fraudulent or failing traders, the other affording relief to insolvent debtors of all denominations. The Constitution of the United States, he said, had clothed the national legislature with power to establish the former, and had left the right to pass and the duty of establishing the latter upon the State governments.

* * * * * * *

There was, he said, no middle ground. If the partition wall between bankruptcy and insolvency was once broken down, all State legislation was subjected to the absolute and arbitrary supervision of Congress. He did not believe that such was the design of the framers of the Constitution. He did not believe that such was the Constitution.

Mr. Woodbury said on this subject on the 24th of January, 1827, this:

The gentleman on his right [Mr. Berrien]—

That was in this Chamber also—had said that Congress might legislate without limitation as to the objects or manner of a bankrupt system, because no limitation as to them had been expressed in the Constitution. But the limitation existed in the subject-matter of the grant. The grant was not to legislate on the subject of contracts generally, of descents, of suits at law, but on the subject of bankruptcy. To bankruptcies, and to bankruptcies alone, then, was the power confined. And the word bankruptcies, as used in the Constitution, was never, in his apprehension, intended to extend beyond embarrassments and failures among mercantile men.

Further on Mr. Woodbury said:

The question lay in a very narrow compass. It was whether Congress had been clothed with power to pass laws regulating the insolvencies of persons not traders, and making their operation upon such persons dependent on their consent. The solution of this question rested mainly on the meaning of the word "bankruptcies" as used in the grant of power on this subject, by the States to the General Government, in the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution. It thus became a momentous question of State rights, and hence deserved most deliberate consideration.

Mr. Woodbury was a man of clear, sound judgment, cool, deliberate frame. He was a democrat of the old school who could not find it in his heart to bend the Constitution to suit an emergency; "thus is the Constitution written" was with him the guide, and having traced out clearly what the Constitution was, he stood by it. I apprehend that no constitutional lawyer will deny that however much the word "bankruptcy" may be enlarged in meaning, however much it may have changed in meaning since the Constitution was written, the very meaning that the word had when it was ratified by the States is the meaning that it has to-day. If, then, when the Constitution was ratified by the States in convention assembled and thereby became operative "bankruptcy" had the meaning which is attributed to it by Mr. Madison in the Federalist, by Mr. Van Buren in this body, by Mr. Woodbury in this body, by Mr. Sherman in the convention, then it has the same meaning to-day; and I have shown by reading from Blackstone and by reading from the standard English dictionary of that day that the technical meaning of the word and the meaning of the word "bankruptcy" in its ordinary signification were the same. So that it is not for us because some great emergency has arisen to enlarge the meaning of a word which is fixed in the Constitution.

Under that clause of the Constitution we have had bankrupt acts, one passed on the 4th of April, 1800; one on the 19th of December, 1803; one on the 19th of August, 1841; and then the act of March 2, 1867, with its various amendatory and supplementary acts, which we are now considering. The present law has lasted very much longer than any other law which was ever passed by Congress on the subject of bankruptcies. The act of 1800, the act of 1803, and the act of 1841 were all speedily swept from the statute-book. They were swept from the statute-book at the fiat of the people because the people regarded them as against their interest. Now comes up this act of March 2, 1867. I will admit that at the close of a great internecine war such as we had, when thousands of good men all over the land were broken and bankrupt in fortune without fault of their own, there was a humanity in passing such an act as that; but the great good which that act was designed to accomplish has been accomplished. Those men who were broken up by the war, who desired so to do, have availed themselves of the benefit of the bankrupt act and are to-day free. The great purpose, what was conceived by the law-maker as the overwhelming necessity for the passage of the bankrupt law, has had its day in court; it has discharged its duty; and the people over this land from one end to the other now demand that this act, which has been on the statute-book for eleven years, should sleep with those which heretofore by their fiat have been sent to the tomb of the Capulets.

Mr. President, the practical operation of the law of March 2, 1867, with all its various amendatory and supplemental acts, is well understood by every Senator here, and well understood by the people. It does not work well. It is a cumbersome machinery. It is difficult to comprehend. The bankrupt courts all over this land differ essentially and materially in their construction of it. It has worked evil, and great evil; and while it has worked some good, yet upon the great principle that laws should be made for the greatest good to the greatest number, it has worked in my judgment infinitely more evil than it ever has good. It is now proposed to repeal it, and it seems to be well understood that everybody is in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt law. On that question there seems to be no doubt. It seems to be understood everywhere that this is one of those great causes which have aided most essentially and materially in bringing the country to its present distressed condition; that this is one of the heads of that hydra which Congress is called upon to destroy.

But it is insisted by some that there should be a little more sleep over this, a little more slumber, and that we should not put the knife now and destroy this evil at once, but should temporize with it and extend it. Mr. President, in my deliberate judgment it is one of the great causes in this country of want of confidence, and confidence must be restored before this country can ever again be prosperous. If that be true, then the sooner this is stricken from the statute-book, the better. If it is one of the great evils that have brought the country to its present condition, then the sooner we extirpate this evil the better for the country; and while it may and doubtless does do good in relieving some distressed debtors, yet they are relieved at the expense of hundreds of thousands of honest men all over the country who by virtue of their debtor becoming relieved of his liabilities under the bankrupt law lose what little he has owing to them and for which they have given labor or given substance; so that wherever the bankrupt law does one man good it does many men evil. You may take the most prosperous county in the country; take such a county as that in which I live, giving over four thousand votes; and not exceeding thirty-five or forty men at the outside in all these eleven years have ever taken the benefit of the bankrupt law. The masses of the people are the sufferers, and the few are the beneficiaries; and it is because of this, because the people believe that it is injurious to their best interests, that this loud cry comes up from every section of the country to repeal this bankrupt law.

The question, therefore, is if this law be an evil shall we at once dig it up by the roots, or shall we prolong the evil for special and exceptional purposes? Mr. President, I have always opposed this special and exceptional relief. It is wrong in principle. The question is, is this bankrupt law an evil to the forty-four millions of the American people; do they demand that it should be repealed; will the greatest good to the greatest number be subserved by the repeal of it? If so, then repeal it.

An amendment was originally offered here fixing the date of the repeal to take effect on the 1st day of next January. That has been amended to take effect on the 1st day of next September. The bill as it came from the House was that the repeal should take effect now. So far as the textual changes made in the bill as it came from the House by the Judiciary Committee are concerned, to my mind they are entirely unnecessary. They have not strengthened the bill by these amendments. The bill as it came from the House is a substantial repeal that would hold as such in any court of justice on the face of the earth. Therefore I am opposed to any amendment whatever to the bill, and I have from the beginning of this controversy in every vote which has been taken voted consistently and persistently against all amendments whatever, determined, so far as my vote was concerned, that when this bill left the Senate Chamber, if it received a majority of this Senate, it should be sent not back to the other House, but be sent to the President for his signature of approval or disapproval.

These, sir, are the reasons which I have for voting as I do. I regard this simply as one of the heads of the hydra, of that monster which has brought distress throughout our whole land. I believe that much, very much of the distress of this country to-day is the result of unwise legislation, much of which has been in violation of the Constitution. I believe it to be the bounden and imperative duty of this Congress, and I devoutly hope they will have the strength of purpose and the will to cut off the heads of this hydra until they come to the vital head and inflict upon that a fatal blow. It is only by meeting these questions with nerve, not by temporizing, not by expedients, but where we find a wrong let us correct that wrong at once. I want to go back to honest methods; I want to inculcate the spirit of honesty among the people; I want them to understand the great Bible injunction, "Pay that thou owest;" I want to see confidence restored in the country; I want to do all that is in my power to lift the people up out of their slough of despond and put them on their feet again; and believing that the vote which I cast for this repeal aids in that great purpose I have so voted and shall continue so to vote.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I am not going to make a speech, because, if I understand it, an overwhelming majority of the Senate have expressed a desire to repeal this bankrupt law, and the only issue in this body is whether that repeal shall take immediate effect or whether it shall be postponed to a future day. That question was made some week ago in this body, or more, and since that time I have received resolutions passed by various commercial bodies in Georgia—among them the Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce of Atlanta—and from other persons, and they have unanimously insisted that the repeal should take effect immediately. I have received no request from any source that the repeal should be postponed until a future day. I am satisfied, as far as my information goes, that there is a general desire, almost a universal desire, in the country that this bankrupt law should be repealed, and repealed at once. I shall therefore vote against all amendments, and shall cast that vote which will give the repeal the most immediate effect.

I will say here that I think the amendments of the House were wholly unnecessary. I think the bill as originally passed by the Senate was ample to accomplish the purpose which it sought to accomplish; but, as the House have put some formal amendments on the bill, I am willing to concur in those amendments simply to avoid the necessity of sending the bill back to the House.

Now, sir, on the general subject I have but one remark to make, and it is this: it has been the scarcity of confidence, more than the scarcity of money, which has produced the financial distress of which we have heard so much during the past few weeks. That confidence has been destroyed not by any one cause, not solely by the legislation of the country, nor by any other one cause; it is attributable to many causes. I believe among those causes which have destroyed the confidence of capital are to be placed the existence and especially the fraudulent administration of this bankrupt law. It has been so administered that it has tended to destroy the confidence of capital; it has prevented the dishonest debtor from getting credit, because it multiplied the opportunities for fraud; it has prevented the honest debtor from getting credit, because it has prevented capitalists from crediting the honest debtor with safety. I shall therefore vote to repeal this bankrupt law, believing that I thereby remove one of the causes which have destroyed that confidence the want of which has produced the distress that is upon this country.

As I said the other day, while I favor a general system of bankruptcy well guarded, after having given the subject the maturest consideration, I am thoroughly satisfied that there is no way to establish a proper system, no way to cure the evils which have grown up under the present system, except by the total repeal, immediate and absolute, of the present bankrupt law.

It would delight me, as was said by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE,] if I could concur with the wishes of our friends from North Carolina; but I believe the postponement of this repeal will not do them the good that they expect from it. I believe, therefore, that we should make a mistake by postponing the repeal in every view of the case; and I ask the friends of repeal to unite and vote down all amendments except the amendments of the House, and let us concur in those amendments solely because it is the speediest way to end this controversy and effect the repeal.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.] I have been of opinion, and so expressed it here when the general subject was before the Senate, that it was very desirable to maintain a system of bankruptcy in every commercial nation, especially in this nation situated as we are composed of very many administrations, subject to different rules and different methods, over all of which the Constitution had given to Congress general jurisdiction upon the subject of bankruptcy. I voted, therefore, the other day to postpone until January the taking effect of this repeal. I did so in the hope—and it was a faint hope—that possibly between now and the taking effect of the repeal there might be such a thing as a more simple and a better system of bankruptcy adopted by the nation; but I do not see what service it can be to the country, in the light in which those who favor such a system of bankruptcy look at the subject, to pass a bill repealing the bankrupt law to take effect in September, in the vacation. We have the certainty of the repeal; we have the loss of all expectation of a modified system or of any system, and we have what? We have uncertainty; we have want of confidence; we have the door open to all there is faulty and wrong and pernicious in the administration of the law, and in the effect of that administration upon the business of the country. So far as the honest bankrupt is concerned, he who is a bankrupt to-day, he has had the opportunity of the discussion upon this repeal to avail himself of the provisions of the law. Those who take the benefit of it between now and September, if it continue, will be either those who become bankrupt between now and then or those who have prepared for the benefit of it. I think, sir, that the business of the country will wait till after the taking effect of this measure; it will postpone that energy and effort and confidence in new business which are so necessary to its revival and to prosperity. If men know that for two or three months the door is open for anybody who may make new contracts to make them with the view or with the hope or with the power of relief from them between now and September, the result will be to delay the revival of confidence, which is so necessary to the inauguration of an era of prosperity.

I therefore think that, if the bankrupt law is to go by the board and we are not to have any national system, it would be better that we have the repeal take effect now than to have the certainty of it two or three months hence; and in that view, while, if I could entertain any reasonable hope or expectation that there could be a proper national system of bankruptcy, I for one would do anything by my vote to bring about such a result, yet as no such result comes from postponing the operation of this bill until the middle of the vacation when the law comes to an end, and as it does not seem to me that the postponement of it now gives those who are at this moment honest bankrupts, desirous of taking the benefit of the act, the opportunity so much as it does give those who are least entitled to the benefits of it the opportunity to avail themselves of its provisions, I shall vote against any extension of time. If repeal is to take place, let it occur at once.

Mr. McCREERY. Mr. President, to postpone the operation of the pending bill to the 1st day of January next, to my mind, has very much the appearance of no repeal at all. In this view I am sustained by the leading business men of the country, who by letters and by telegrams have communicated their apprehensions to me that the best-established mercantile houses can scarcely withstand another season of trade followed by the usual number of bankruptcies. These are not the groundless fancies of croakers who see danger in everything, but they are the settled convictions of solid and substantial men, who have given reflection to the subject and whose experience and intelligence add force and weight to their opinions.

It has been frequently asked why we are in such a hurry to repeal the bankrupt law. After an uninterrupted existence of eleven years, it would seem that, if it is ever to have an end, the time has come. The longer it lasts the more difficult it will be to fix the period of its termination. If we are to wait until all pending and prospective cases are disposed of it is clear that the law will last forever. There never will be a time in the future when misfortune will not drive some and when the temptations of avarice will not seduce others into bankruptcy. The session of Congress which intervenes before the 1st day of January will afford another opportunity of postponement, and the pretense of necessity will be as pressing then as now.

The opponents of this bill seem to regard it as designed in an especial manner to favor the creditors and to oppress the debtors of the country. They evidently consider it as class legislation, sustaining one interest to the detriment and destruction of another. All their anxieties and all their sympathies gather around the debtor, and the creditor will have to content himself with their neglect or contempt. If it is class legislation, has not one class held undisputed sway for eleven years, and is it not full time, in all fairness, to give the other class a chance for at least as long a period to assert equal rights? Or is it contended that the authority and the power of the Government may be invoked to invalidate and annul a contract, but never for its enforcement? It would require a savage or a brutal nature to turn with perfect indifference from the sufferings of others; but I have as much feeling for the man who, by industry and economy, has earned a dollar as I have for the man who has borrowed and spent it. I have as much sympathy for the toiling millions, who are diligently engaged in cultivating their farms and in educating their families, as I have for the so-called speculators, who are roaming among them, appropriating their productions, and scattering the seeds of distrust and dissatisfaction wherever they go.

Much has been said upon this floor about the advantages and disadvantages of tariffs for revenues and tariffs for protection. Volumes have been written and spoken upon the evils and benefits of contraction and expansion of the currency. Resumption and anti-resumption have been advocated and condemned as the true financial policy; and the increase or modification of taxation upon necessaries and upon luxuries has been considered. The proper adjustment of these questions may afford some measure of relief to the country; but higher than any or all of them together rises the great inquiry as to the best means of restoring confidence among the people. If a few who have been thoughtless and improvident are left without the benefit of the bankrupt law is it not better than that the welfare and prosperity of forty million people should be held in jeopardy, until convenience shall enable the few to seek and obtain their certificates?

Armies, contending in a great cause, have never been stopped on the march because the hoofs of the cavalry or the wheels of the artillery might crush out and destroy the growing grass of the citizens; and should the politician or the statesman stop in the great work of the restoration of confidence and the re-establishment of prosperity simply because a few hundred or a few thousand insolvents or would-be insolvents have not exactly made up their minds whether to pay their debts in money or in bankrupt certificates?

We are enacting laws for the moral and material advancement of forty million people, and if we are loyal to their interests we will not tell them to stand still until every delinquent has been, by due process of law, discharged from his obligations. The legislation of Congress, wise and prudent as it may be, will be utterly powerless for good as long as the bankrupt law exists.

The people are suffering, actually suffering, for money to meet their daily wants and necessities, while there are millions and millions deposited in the banks and not drawing a cent of interest. Why is this? It is because the men who have worked for the money would rather lose the interest than take the hazard of collecting their debts through the judgment of a bankrupt court. No sensible man wants to keep his capital idle; but he is even more opposed to throwing it away.

Repeal the bankrupt law and confidence will gradually revive; money will leave its depositories and seek remunerative investments; labor will find employment; trade and commerce, relieved of the shackles which have paralyzed them, will be invigorated with renewed life. The people inspired by hope and faith will forget their suspicions and distrust in the enjoyment of wide-spread and general prosperity.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this question is certainly one, if there be any such question, which is fit to be discussed and to be determined by the Senate of the United States. It is a question which has been discussed by lawyers, by statesmen, by writers upon the science of politics for generations. It was one of the subjects most extensively discussed before the American people in the age when the national and State constitutions were formed.

The experience of all commercial and civilized nations is agreed that justice, that the interest of trade, that the interest of the people, concur in demanding a principle of legislation which shall insure the division of a debtor's property equally among his creditors, rather than a principle of legislation which provides for the seizure of it by the first creditor who may undertake to collect a debt. I have listened to this debate for the last few days and I can challenge any Senator to point out in any speech which has been addressed to the Senate the statement of a single reason for the refusal to postpone or prolong the operation of the existing law for a few months. We are told what this board of trade thinks and what that company of merchants in some distant city has telegraphed, and we have been told that wide-spread ruin will take place or continue unless the bankrupt law is at once repealed; but not a single argument, not a single topic has been addressed, so far as I know, to the judgment of the Senate which tends in the least to show any connection between this condition of things and the bankrupt law.

We have a costly, clumsy, and incomplete provision for dividing the property of debtors among their creditors when they cannot pay their debts in full; but what Senator can state any reason whatever for the suggestion that the existence of that incomplete provision tends to create commercial ruin or want of commercial confidence, and that the substitution for it at once of a method by which the nearest creditor, the one most in collusion with the debtor, may seize upon the whole property of an insolvent debtor and apply it to his own debt, leaving the other creditors out in the cold, will tend to restore commercial confidence and commercial prosperity? The debtor class, the men who desire this brief opportunity to turn themselves to escape if they can by negotiation or arrangement with their creditors from the necessity of bankruptcy and to save their business interests and their solvency, are not represented in the meetings of merchants in cities or in the meetings of boards of trade.

I have listened carefully, and it is difficult for me to conceive of any reason why this measure, instead of being precipitated instantly upon an unprepared and astonished community, should not take effect at a time a few months or a few weeks in the future. If the postponement until the 1st of January is too long, you may make the time the 1st of September, or the 1st of October, as is proposed by the Senator from Ohio, but it seems to me you cannot put into legislation a more unjust or a more indefensible provision than to say that a country of forty-five million people occupying this great continent, with its diversified interests, with its business interests interlaced, with the relations between different States, the relations of debtor and creditor existing between persons residing thousands of miles apart, shall without notice, as with a clap of thunder from a clear sky, be prohibited from the further operation of a law which divides the property of debtors equally among the creditors, and from this moment the creditor the most alert, the most intimate of the creditors in his connection with the debtor, shall be entitled to seize and secure the whole of the debtor's property for his own purposes.

For these reasons, though acting in obedience to the sense of the interests of my own State I should be prepared to vote for the repeal of the bankrupt law as I have voted for it heretofore in the other branch, because I believe that the present clumsy and imperfect and costly method of its administration is very much worse for the people that I represent than the similar law which stands upon the statute-book of my own State, I am not prepared to inflict upon the American people the gross injustice of abolishing the bankrupt law at a day's notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] to the amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, which is to strike out "January" and insert "September," and strike out "nine" and insert "eight."

Mr. SARGENT. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, one moment. My friend from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON,] who is not now in his seat, and who has just been occupying the chair, told me that he desired to be heard. He left the chair and went out of the Chamber. I desire that the Senate delay taking the vote for a few moments until he shall come in.

Mr. THURMAN. Speak until he comes in.

Mr. EATON. My friend says "speak until he comes in." That is one way to keep the Senate quiet. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the people whom I in part represent are pretty uniformly in favor of the repeal of this law. So far as I know, I should say seven-eighths of the people of Connecticut are in favor of the repeal of this law. I am in favor of its repeal myself. I will not say that I have not been in favor of its immediate repeal, but under all the circumstances of the case I have concluded to vote for the amendment offered by my friend from Ohio.

I desire to say to certain Senators who suppose that a continuance three months longer of the provisions of this law is to disarrange the business of creditors, that it is impossible to disarrange it any more than it is now disarranged. I desire to say to those Senators that I think there is nothing in a claim of that character. Here is a great law which for eleven years has held in its grasp the credits of the country. Is it too much to say that upon the repeal of a law of this character we should give to the people of the different communities of States three months' time to set their houses in order?

I have no idea that a repeal of the bankrupt law will revive business. It is absurd, in my judgment, to make a claim of that character. I no more believe it than I believed the coining of a few million dollars would revive business. I am not going into a discussion of that matter; it is not necessary at this time and in this place. I believe that this system ought to be destroyed. It is not necessary for me to say what my opinion is with regard to the necessity of some general bankrupt law, but there is one thing I will venture to say, and that is that no bankrupt law that admits of the voluntary principle will ever receive my vote. It is fatal, in my judgment, to honesty and to honest dealing. The very idea of bankruptcy should be involuntary, and not voluntary. The principle of voluntary bankruptcy, in my judgment, is what has brought the law into disrepute, if possible, more than the expenses attending this system.

I see that I have been able to talk long enough to bring back my friend from North Carolina on the floor. That is the only object I had in view, and therefore I will give way to him.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, I listened a few moments ago with great interest to the able constitutional argument made by the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY,] and if the question that he discussed were a new one I might stop to treat his argument with seriousness. It was raised and discussed more than fifty years ago in this body, and the courts have decided, I suppose at least five hundred times, that the existing bankrupt law is and those like it which preceded it were valid under the Constitution of this country. The former laws have embraced most if not all the features that are embraced in the present law, so that the argument which the Senator made upon that point must necessarily go for nothing.

I listened also with infinite pleasure to the elegant diction and finely rounded periods so well delivered of my distinguished friend from Kentucky, [Mr. MCCREERY.] He certainly made a handsome speech. He told us in substance that the present bankrupt law is the substantial evil that is now preying upon the country, and that if we would repeal it in such a way as that it would go forthwith into effect, prosperity and universal happiness would soon again prevail. But, sir, he offered us no facts, no argument, no fact, to sustain this handsome declamation and convince our judgment.

I was struck with a remark made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] a moment ago. He said he had listened to this debate for days, and he had heard it said over and over again that if we were to repeal the bankrupt law forthwith prosperity would revive, but he had not heard any one give any reason for the declaration. I join with him in that expression. I have watched this debate with intense interest, and I undertake to say that I have heard no reason offered to sustain the declaration so often made to which he referred first.

Mr. President, I deprecate the tone and temper manifested by some gentlemen who have spoken in favor of the immediate repeal of the bankrupt law. Time after time, in the most declamatory manner, in the most impassioned way, Senators have said, "Let those who favor immediate repeal stand together and vote down every proposition that looks to a postponement of the repeal." That amounts to saying to everybody, "Close your eyes and your ears to facts and argument and act stubbornly and recklessly in the dark." This it seems to me is a vicious way to legislate, and it is unworthy of this body. The Senate ought to be willing to hear and act upon reason and truth even to the last moment. I take the opportunity of telling these honorable Senators that I for one am not frightened from my propriety; that I cannot be driven; that I believe it is worth while to take time to discuss this subject, and let us see the reason of the thing. Let us see and understand the groundwork of, and the consequences to flow from, the action that we are about to take in repealing this important law.

Mr. President, time and time again we have been told that the bankrupt law is a vast machine for the advancement and enforcement of fraud. No one, however, has proceeded by an examination of the law and the ground upon which it rests to establish so grave an imputation as that. I undertake to say that that declaration is unfounded in fact; and I respectfully challenge him who can show to the contrary to do so, not simply to addressing to us empty declamation and impassioned appeals in favor of repeal, but let him adhere to the reason and arguments which can satisfy the mind of a reasonable man that such is the fact. I undertake to say that in my judgment directly the reverse of this is true, and I call upon the Senate to witness whether I submit considerations tending to show that I am correct.

The bankrupt law is founded upon the principle and the policy that an insolvent debtor shall surrender all the property that he has of every kind, and that it shall go to his creditors to be equally distributed among them all, except where valid and honest liens may have been made according to law in favor of particular creditors, and that then the debtor shall be discharged from all further liability. That is the groundwork of the law. Now, it seems to me, looking to the interests of society, the interest of business, the good order of things, the general prosperity of the people, that this is wise and just and proper. Wherever a man has become honestly insolvent, and it is impossible for him to pay his debts, he does that which is wise and just and prudent when he tells all his creditors alike that they may share what he has among them, and every law to enforce such a purpose, it seems to me, is a wise and proper one. It has been so considered in this country and in the most enlightened countries of the civilized world. And hence the several States, in the absence of a general bankrupt law, has each an insolvent law.

That is the purpose of this statute, which has been denounced over and over again. It is said that the law is a loose one; that it is an imperfect one; that it is a dishonest one; that it promotes fraud and benefits nobody. I shall not say that the present bankrupt law is as perfect at it might be. I will not say that it has been as well administered as it might have been; but I will say, that it is not subject to the denunciation that has been heaped upon it in this debate; and I will say further that I believe the errors imputed to it are greatly magnified and for the purpose of precipitating its repeal here. Any one who will examine that law will find that there is no more stringent and exacting law upon our statute-book. Of all the statutes that I am familiar with—and I believe I have a general knowledge of most of our statutes—it is the most exacting, the most penal, the most inquisitorial of all others. It provides, in the first place, that the creditor shall surrender faithfully all the property of any kind that he has; it then provides, that if he shall by any means, directly or indirectly, do any fraudulent or dishonest act with a view to his insolvency; if he shall give a preference to any creditor, or make any conveyance or gift—in the first place, that he shall be deprived of all right to a discharge from liability to his creditors; and, in the next place, that he shall be subject to be indicted in the proper court and, on conviction, punished it may be in the penitentiary at hard labor for three years.

Not only that, but it provides, further, that if any creditor shall collude with him for the purpose of giving preference to any particular creditor, he shall thereby forfeit his debt, and for such a conspiracy, also, that he shall be indicted. These great ends are secured by the most stringent provisions, I repeat, that I have found in any statute upon our statute-books. Not only that, but the higest possible inquisitorial powers are conferred upon the courts in order to enable them to see that all the property of the bankrupt shall pass to his creditors according to the provisions of this law. The bankrupt himself is subject to be examined, not once, not twice, but as often as it may be deemed necessary, with a view to ascertain whether he has perpetrated any fraud. Not only the bankrupt himself but his wife may be examined, his friends may be examined, and his creditors may be examined, from time to time, until his whole assets are revealed and distributed to his creditors; and finally if the bankrupt has been honest in all respects, and only in that case, he then is entitled to a discharge from his creditors, to whom he may be in debt at that time, of every class, but only on that condition. Let any one who will take up the statute read and understand it and he will find the most stringent provisions all tending to these ends.

I ask, then, how is it that this law has wrought such demoralization among the people? If I am any judge of what is desirable to men, I am very sure that they will not willingly submit themselves to a court of bankruptcy, unless they go through it in strict accordance with law. They are subjected to the strictest scrutiny, if the law shall be faithfully executed; they are subjected to high penalties if they do otherwise than as the law directs, and surely when under this stringent law the creditor gets all that his debtor has he ought to be satisfied and let him go and try fortune again.

Without a law of this sort the insolvent debtor becomes a beggar; he becomes the slave of debt and practically the slave of his creditors for the term of his life. He is cut off from every incentive to acquire and accumulate property, he ceases to be useful to society, he becomes desperate and hopeless. Not only is he so, but this terrible condition operates to darken and destroy the hopes and happiness of his whole family and those who are near and dear to him. In that way society loses hundreds and thousands of men who might be otherwise happy and useful. To be the slave of creditors! How terrible to him who can appreciate perfect freedom.

One of the great objects to be accomplished by this law is to advance the interest of society and Government and promote domestic and individual happiness by relieving the honest debtor of burdens of debt greater than he can bear if he will surrender to his creditors all he has. What reasonable motive has government, what can move society to keep a man in such bondage, a slave to his debts and to his creditors? Why should the creditor wish to keep his debtor so enslaved? The debtor in such a case cannot help himself; he is hopeless and becomes desperate. What incentive has he to go forward and acquire property and to accumulate it when the insatiate creditor, with his execution, stands ever ready to take what he may make as fast as he earns it? The incentive is gone in that case and hope and energy are gone with it. This law is essential to the well-being and to the prosperity of society. Its purpose is to free the slave, to restore hope, energy, the spirit of enterprise, and open anew the highway to fortune and happiness. In this way society, government, everybody, may be benefited and no real interest need be impaired.

It is said the law is badly administered. I have heard that over and over again, but no man has pointed to any case where the assets have been swallowed up by the officers of the courts, by the assignees, or that by the particular creditors they have been wasted and squandered; and if occasionally it has been done, it has been done in great measure because of the neglect of the creditors, that they would not look after their interests as they ought to have done and as the law required they should do if they would be benefited to the fullest extent. I remember a case of note in my own State where a bank became bankrupt. The assignee in that case went on and collected the assets and paid every dollar that the bank owed, involving hundreds of thousands of dollars. I know many cases in my State where the law has been faithfully executed and the creditors realized all that the debtor had, and where it operated beneficially to society in turning industrious and enterprising men loose to begin again a life of energy and industry, when but for the operation of this law such a person would have been a beggar and the slave of his creditors indefinitely, and would have done society no longer any good.

Mr. President, let us inquire a moment what gave rise to the existing law. At the close of the late war the people of the Southern States, particularly, were almost absolutely bankrupt. They had lost all their slave property, they had lost nearly all their personal property, the great bulk of their rights, and credits, and bonds were absolutely destroyed, and they scarcely had the necessaries of life; the whole country was desolated, while the people were overwhelmed with debts that had been contracted before the war began and which were still hanging over them at its end. To pay these debts was in most instances impossible. There was great derangement throughout the North also, created by reason of the fact that thousands and tens of thousands of people had gone into the Army and turned their private business loose to care for itself, and when they returned they found themselves insolvent and in such entanglements as that without the aid of a bankrupt law they would have been embarrassed to a greater or less extent like the southern people. This law was passed for the beneficent purpose of giving relief particularly to the southern people and the northern classes to which I have alluded. I undertake to say that it was a great boon to the southern people. It relieved thousands of people there who otherwise would have been practically slaves to their debts and debtors for life. It helped to lift them up and to inspire them to hope anew. If hundreds and thousands more of men in the South, in their impoverished or ruined condition, had taken the benefit of this law so generously offered to them, in my judgment, the South had this day been the most prosperous portion of the Union. I have no doubt about that. I know that pride of spirit kept many a southern man out of the court of bankruptcy. He said, "My debts are great; they are greater than I can pay; still I will struggle on, I will not resort to this court of bankruptcy; some one will say it is wrong and dishonorable." And indulging in false pride, false notions of that character, those men are this day impoverished and will be while they live, unless they shall yet take advantage of this generous law passed in a large measure for their benefit. It never was dishonest or dishonorable for an honest debtor, overwhelmed by misfortune or misadventure, to give up all he had to his creditors and take a discharge. Having done all he could justice in mercy would ask no more. That is the spirit of our law and the policy of our institutions.

It was a great boon, a great blessing, to the southern people, and a pity it is that more of them did not accept it; and I cannot understand how Senators representing Southern States, representing people who ought to have taken the benefit of this law, can stand up to-day and denounce it as machinery for the perpetration of fraud and outrage upon creditors. It has done vast good all over the South. It has done vast good throughout this country in relieving those men who in the embarrassing times through which we have been and are passing—by it they have been able to get rid of debt that would have kept them down for their life-time and injured their families after they had passed away. I do not doubt that the law has been prostituted; but it is not justly subject to all this denunciation heaped upon it here. It may be imperfect, but point me to a perfect law and one that has not in some way been prostituted. It may be that it has been badly administered, but point me to a law that has been faithfully administered in all respects and at all times and under all circumstances. The law forbids murder, and yet how many murderers escape. The law forbids assault and battery and riot, and yet those who perpetrate these crimes often go on as though there were no law forbidding them. The argument that is good against this law is good against all laws. It amounts to no argument at all. Day after day, and this very day, Senators clamorous for the repeal of the present law admit that a bankrupt law is necessary, and yet not one of these Senators has proposed to amend and correct any defect in the existing one, but propose to leave the country without any such law at all. They shrink from the responsibility of the duty of making this law what it ought to be. They would turn the people loose in the present embarrassed and distressed condition of business throughout the country without any relief to the people by means of a bankrupt law.

One Senator said that this law was passed on account of the evils and embarrassments growing out of the late war, that eleven years had elapsed since it was passed, the war was over, and the time had come, if it ever would come, for its repeal. That Senator was very much mistaken when he said that we had gotten rid of the evils of the war. We are yet emerging, and slowly emerging, from the war. This country is not yet relieved from the business and financial embarrassments growing out of the war. In the slang language of somebody, we have "not reached bottom." It is a great mistake to suppose that we have. Daily the papers are filled with telegrams from the great commercial and manufacturing cities and towns in the Union telling us of failures; not only the merchants are failing day by day, but the plain, honest men, North, South, East, and West, all over the land are failing, with a prospect that at no distant day this country may experience another terrible crash like that which we had in 1873. This is no time to be trifling about this matter. How soon thousands and tens of thousands of the best business men in this country may find it necessary to invoke the benefits of a law like this, no one here to-day is so well informed as that he can undertake to say. The prospect is gloomy, very gloomy. I would it were otherwise.

Upon this point, I beg to read an extract from the speech delivered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] the other day, with a view to show the state of the business of the country for the last few months. It is sufficient for me to call the attention of Senators to the failures and the bankruptcies that are reported daily in the papers. I have been struck with the great number. The telegraphic columns of the newspapers tell us only of the more important failures. From half a dozen to a dozen are reported daily and the number not reported nobody can even conjecture. But let me quote from the speech of the Senator from Indiana. He cites authority and it is as accurate as any authority can be under the circumstances. He said:

> Within the last few days I have examined the report of the Mercantile Agency of New York, keeping a record of the business failures of the United States for the first three months of the present year. It contains an appalling exhibition. During the three months of January, February, and March the number of failures is put at thirty-three hundred and fifty-five and the amount of their liabilities at the startling sum of $82,078,826. If we compare that report with the same period of time during the last year we find the liabilities growing out of bankruptcies to be $27,540,856 greater in the first quarter of 1878 than in the first quarter of 1877. A similar comparison with the first quarter of the year 1876 shows the bankrupt liabilities of the country to have increased $17,434,670 from that time to the present.—Congressional Record, page 3084.

Yet Senators tell us here, and without citing or stating any facts to sustain the declaration, that this country is in such a condition now as not to require a bankrupt law, that there is no necessity for it, and that to repeal it will restore confidence. What a mockery of the facts! How is the repeal of that law going to restore confidence, as my friend from Connecticut asked a moment ago, and how has the existence of that law served to destroy confidence or to impair it any more than any other law? Suppose it were repealed, what would be done? Under the laws that exist in my State, every debtor there may prefer any creditor he pleases, and I think it is so generally throughout the Union. He may go and sell him all his property, leaving other creditors without a farthing; he may make a mortgage to him excluding everybody else. How natural that the debtor should favor those creditors near him! How natural that he should exclude those creditors—strangers—who live at a distance. Right or wrong, experience shows that debtors will do it. What may the merchants in Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and Boston expect when men in the desperate straits in which many are placed now are forced into insolvency in Georgia, for example? The debtor, ruined, hopeless, will pay his neighbors and make such terms as he can, and let his foreign creditor go unprovided for. That example not only applies to our State but it applies to every State in the Union. Take the debtor in Missouri: if by the laws of Missouri he may make such preferences, he will certainly do it, and the creditors in the great cities may whistle for their money.

But there is another evil and perhaps a greater than that. Under the insolvent laws of the several States, although the poor debtor may surrender every dollar that he is worth, he gets no discharge from his debtors except so far as the jurisdiction of the State goes. As to the creditor of the North Carolina debtor in New York or Boston or Maryland, at any distance of time within the statute of limitations he may proceed to get his debt notwithstanding the honest debtor has surrendered every dollar and everything on earth that he has.

Will any one longer contend that it is wise in the present embarrassed condition of the country, while we are still emerging from the war, to repeal this law? I am tired of hearing it said that we are out of the war, for we are not. We may as well look the facts in the face. We see its effect everywhere staring us in the face. Even the animosities of the war have not yet passed by. We see manifestations of it constantly throughout the land, in newspapers and among the politicians and everywhere else. We have not even got rid of that yet, much less have we got rid of the business embarrassments growing out of the war. We are told that because some bad and corrupt men have managed to prostitute and avoid the law therefore all the honest men and the good men shall not have the benefit of it. That is a strange sort of reasoning. It is absurd, and it sounds harshly upon the ear that is accustomed to truth and logical fairness.

My colleague and myself have special considerations that move us to oppose the immediate repeal of this law. We realize the fact—sad to us, and it is realized more sensibly by many of our suffering constituents—of the necessity of the prolongation of this bankrupt law. Everybody here knows that the people of North Carolina were for the most part ruined financially at the close of the late war. They are gradually struggling to recuperate their material interests; and I trust they are, though slowly, and that before a great while, with the help that ought to be extended to them by wise legislation here and in the State, they will again be the proud and happy people that they have been in the past.

But, sir, they still suffer from the embarrassments of the war. Thousands and tens of thousands of people there have only the homestead that was left them under the beneficent provision of the constitution of 1868. That constitution provided that each head of a family should have a homestead in real estate equal in value to a thousand dollars, and that he should also have, exempt from execution, personal property of the value of $500. It was contended that by the Constitution of the United States the convention had no power to exempt this homestead and this personal property exemption from the satisfaction of the creditor's debt when the debt was contracted prior to the adoption of the constitution. The question was made before the supreme court of North Carolina, and that court held that this homestead provision of the constitution did operate retroactively and protected the debtor and his family in their home from old as well as new debts. That court repeatedly reaffirmed that decision, until at last a creditor brought the question to the Supreme Court of the United States, and about twenty days ago the Supreme Court of the United States overruled the decision of the supreme court of North Carolina, whereby hundreds and thousands of creditors were turned loose upon the homesteads of hundreds of people who had but little more than their homesteads. A cry of distress comes to my colleague and myself and to our colleagues in the House daily; hundreds of our constituents fear that they and their families will be turned out of their homes shelterless and homeless.

It would move the hearts of Senators if they could read the letters which come to us, some of which I have received this very day, telling of the distressed condition of the people, their woe and their suffering and their hopelessness. I cannot bring the Senate to realize that the last hope those people have is to invoke the benefit of this bankrupt law. Yet here are Senators representing Southern States, who ought to be able to appreciate the condition of that people, voting against the extension of this law even for a brief while until those debtors with but their homesteads may take advantage of it! That is strange indeed to me. It will sound strangely to my people, that we must look to the stranger for help, for protection, and for relief. I thank heaven that there are strangers who can sympathize with our people in this hour of their calamity!

But it is said by these Senators and by others, "Suppose we were to extend the law until the 1st of January next, it will not bring relief to your people, because the Chief-Justice of the United States made a ruling to the effect, that so much of the bankrupt law as exempted a homestead in the State as against old debts was void, and the act of Congress providing virtually for a homestead in North Carolina which was not provided for in South Carolina and other States, is therefore void." I shall not undertake to say that the Chief-Justice is wrong. I have great respect for the Chief-Justice and for the high office which he fills, but I must call attention, and I do so with the greatest deference to that high officer, to the fact that other judges dissent from his ruling. It is right and proper to say that while he has thus held, there are several decisions the reverse of his decision. More than half a dozen decisions have been made, one of them by Associate Justice Miller, and three or four by circuit and district judges, directly to the reverse of the ruling which the Chief-Justice made in that respect. As this matter is one of moment, let me call the attention of the Senate particularly to the exemption law and then to the ruling which the Chief-Justice has made. The material part of the exemption provision is in these words:

> And such other property as now is, or hereafter shall be, exempted from attachment, or seizure, or levy on execution by the laws of the United States, and such other property not included in the foregoing exceptions as is exempted from levy and sale upon execution or other process or order of any court by the laws of the State in which the bankrupt has his domicile at the time of the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, to an amount allowed by the constitution and laws of each State, as existing in the year 1871; and such exemptions shall be valid against debts contracted before the adoption and passage of such State constitution and laws, as well as those contracted after the same, and against liens by judgment or decree of any State court, any decision of any such court rendered since the adoption and passage of such constitution and laws to the contrary notwithstanding. These exceptions shall operate as a limitation upon the conveyance of the property of the bankrupt to his assignee; and in no case shall the property hereby excepted pass to the assignee, or the title of the bankrupt thereto be impaired or affected by any of the provisions of this title; and the determination of the assignee in the matter shall, on exception taken, be subject to the final decision of the said court.—Revised Statutes United States, section 5045.

The Chief-Justice, in a case in Virginia, passed upon the act which I have cited. I read the syllabus of the decision he made. He decided that—

> The amendment to the bankrupt act of March 3, 1873, is unconstitutional, because it destroys the uniformity of the act.—In re Daniel Deckert, 10 National Bankrupty Register, 1.

Before he made that decision, however, Associate Justice Miller had decided directly the reverse, for he held that—

> The provisions of section 14 of the bankrupt act, adopting the exemptions in favor of execution debtors established by the laws of the several States, does not destroy the uniformity of the bankrupt act nor violate any provisions of the Federal Constitution.—In re Beckerkord, 4 National Bankruptcy Register, 204.

Mr. WHYTE. May I ask my friend from North Carolina whether that decision of Mr. Justice Miller did not have reference to the act of 1872 and not to the act of 1873?

Mr. MERRIMON. I think it embraced the whole.

Mr. WHYTE. No, sir.

Mr. MERRIMON. I have the reference to it. I think it does. I will not say positively until I look.

Mr. WHYTE. If my friend will allow me, the distinction which is found in the case was this: that Justice Miller only decided that exemption laws in a State which were recognized by the State as constitutional could really prevail as against the bankrupt; but Mr. Chief-Justice Waite decided that where under the State law the exemption was declared to be unconstitutional, then it could not prevail in favor of the bankrupt. That was the distinction, and it grew out of the language of the act of 1873 that Mr. Chief-Justice Waite decided the case upon.

Mr. MERRIMON. On turning to the opinion of Associate Justice Miller—and he was concurred with by the judge then sitting with him, Judge Krekel; there were two judges sitting in that case—I do not see that he cites the date of the statute anywhere upon which he was passing. I cannot stop at this moment to see exactly the words he passed upon, but I have another case here decided after the Chief-Justice made his decision, where the court not only passed upon the words of the act which I have read, but the case in which the Chief-Justice gave his opinion was at the time before the court. I refer to the case in re Willis A. Jordan. The register says:

> The amendment of the bankrupt act of March 3, 1873—

That is the statute that I read a moment ago—

> in respect to exempt property is constitutional, and the exemptions allowed by that amendment are valid against debts of the bankrupt, without regard to the time when contracted, whether before or after the amendment, and also against liens by judgment or decree of any State court.

So that you see that the court went the whole length; and now, to let the Senators see that they were cognizant of the decision of the Chief-Justice, I will read an extract:

> This is a question involving the constitutionality of the amendatory bankrupt act of March 3, 1873, and the movers of the objections are prompted by the recent decision of Chief-Justice Waite, in re Daniel Deckert, 10 N. B. R., 1.
> The constitutionality of this amendment has been sustained by Judge Dick, in re Jordan, 8 N. B. R., 180; by Judge Rives, in re Kean, Id., 367, and by Judge Erskine, in re Smith, id., 401; and the same principle has been sustained by Judges Miller and Krekel, in re Beckerkord, 4 N. B. R., 203.

So that here were at least a half dozen judges, having the decision of the Chief-Justice before them, who held that the Chief-Justice erred in his ruling. While I say frankly that I am not prepared to assert that the Chief-Justice is not correct, yet I find in conversation with some of the great lawyers of this body that they are confident that he has erred in his ruling. So that the Federal judges in North Carolina may hold that if the act of Congress is valid this exemption is good.

I do not care now to enter into an argument to show that the Chief-Justice is right or wrong. I present these authorities to show that it may be that every owner of a homestead can be secured by the operation of this law if he shall invoke its benefit. It is a matter of the gravest moment to many persons, and I want them to have the opportunity to revoke the law, if they should see fit to do so.

It is said that the country is clamorous for a repeal of the bankrupt law. Where is the evidence of this? You may look to the memorials that lie upon the table and which are among the files of the Senate, and in my judgment, judging from what I have heard of them, not a thousand men out of the forty-five million of the American people have asked for the repeal. And is it the debtor class, those embarrassed, who are asking for the repeal? No, it is the merchants, the bankers, the creditor class, who are not content to take all that the poor debtor has, as the creditor may do under this law, if he will stand by and see the provisions of the law executed.

It is not true to say that the whole country is wild and clamorous for the repeal of this law. There is no evidence of it. While telegrams have come from day to day manifestly for the purpose of stimulating precipitate action on the proposition to repeal the bankrupt law, day after day my colleague and myself have been receiving the most piteous appeals from many of our constituents, the debtor class, those men who are to feel the weight of the ruin that is to come upon them if this law is to be repealed at once.

Other Senators have received protests against the proposed repeal. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] the other morning read to the Senate a telegram or a private letter, in which one of the greatest and largest merchants in this country, as he represented him to be, protested against the repeal of the law and declared that the country was not in a condition yet to dispense with it. What forty-five million people would say if they were to be consulted on this subject nobody here knows; and I say that it is unworthy of the dignity and the propriety of this great legislative body to be led into precipitate action by telegrams and appeals that come in in this disorderly way, which are at best mere suggestions.

I should be the more ready to act upon these declamatory and impassioned appeals made by Senators for the immediate repeal of this law if they would submit arguments and facts going to show that it had destroyed public and business confidence and that it was calculated to restore that confidence if it should be repealed. But facts are not shown; I take it they cannot be shown. There are complaints against the manner of administering the law. Then, let us make it more efficient. I want more than declamation. I want truth and reason to convince my judgment before I can consent to act as suggested. When that is done I shall be ready to act upon it; and until that is done I shall not be ready to act upon it.

It is said that if it can be extended until the 1st of September everybody can avail himself of the benefits of this law who may desire to do so. I do not concur in that judgment. I have already adverted to the fact that this country now is in a large sense in a bankrupt condition. There are hundreds and thousands and tens of thousands of men, not in one section only, but in all sections of the Union, that are upon the border of bankruptcy and that are—I repeat what I said before—to become slaves to their creditors for life unless they shall be allowed to avail themselves of the benefit of a bankrupt law, whereby they can be freed from their creditors, not dishonestly as Senators say, but honestly, according to the provisions of this stringent law. In my State, if the Senate in its generosity is disposed to benefit our people, the time to the 1st of September will be very short. Many of those people have but their homesteads, and it will trouble them more or less to get the money necessary to pay the reasonable costs of the bankrupt court, and many of them live remote from the courts and from the railroads and the news will reach them slowly that this is the last hope they have. This is the only protection that stands between them and hopeless despair and beggary for themselves and their little ones. I trust, therefore, that the time will be extended as long as possible if the Senate and Congress be resolved that the law shall be repealed.

Then, I say, in the first place, to summarize the points I have made, that this law is not the iniquitous law that it is represented to be. It has not produced the demoralization that has been attributed to it. The repeal of it will not revive confidence, as has been said. In the next place, I have pointed to the necessity for the passage of this law shortly after the war. I have called attention to the fact that the war and its embarrassing consequences are not over in a business sense; that the business interests of this country are not yet settled, and from present indications are not likely to be settled for some time to come. We are slowly emerging from the war and its consequences. It is not yet over, and we cannot say when it will be over. And this law is essential until that time shall come. If every Senator would vote on the subject as he feels, I think he would say that a permanent bankrupt law is essential to the business of the country.

In the next place I have pointed to the lamentable condition of thousands of the people of my own State, in support of the proposition to extend the time when this law is to be repealed. I have shown that the condition of the country at this time proves that precipitate action may be very ruinous and that reasonable opportunity will not be extended particularly to the people of North Carolina to avail themselves of it. The business disorders in all parts of the country are threatening and alarming, and he is unwise who will not take note of the signs of the times. I beg pardon for having seemed to speak warmly on this subject. I feel warmly upon it. This law stands between a large portion of the people whom I in part represent and absolute ruin and beggary. So I fear. I feel anxious for these distressed people and wish to do all I can properly for their relief and benefit. I trust the proposition to repeal the law at once will not prevail.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I do not propose to make a speech; but I can hardly let the view presented by my friend from North Carolina go unchallenged in regard to the decision of Chief-Justice Waite. The opinion which the Senator read is the opinion of a register in bankruptcy who speaks——

Mr. MERRIMON. Why, Mr. President, my friend must see that the judge adopted his opinion as his own.

Mr. WHYTE. Yes; the judge says:

> The opinion of Register Murray is correct.

And this is what Register Murray says of the Chief-Justice, and I will show that his decision has no reference whatever to the ground upon which the Chief-Justice's opinion went:

> When we reflect that the two Houses of Congress, many members of each being well versed in our Constitution and laws, have given this amendment their approval and that it has been examined and sustained by this array of legal talent, we should be slow to throw aside that theory which has been approved and acted on for seven years—

This opinion was delivered in 1874, construing an act passed in 1873, and he speaks of it as an opinion which has prevailed for seven years—> that theory which has been approved and acted on for seven years to adopt a new one advanced by one justice, and he a new man in the position he occupies.

That is the opinion of Mr. Alexander G. Murray, which the judge of the district court passes as correct.

This opinion proceeds upon the theory of the old State act of 1864 and the act of 1872; that is to say, it simply recognizes that there can be uniformity under the bankrupt law so far as the exemptions in the various States are concerned, provided those exemptions are recognized in the States by the courts of the States as constitutional in themselves. That was the distinction Chief-Justice Waite made, and that is the difficulty in regard to the exemption in the constitution of North Carolina. All these decisions to which my friend from North Carolina has referred are based upon the act of 1864 or the act of 1872, and have no reference to this act of 1873, which, being construed by Chief-Justice Waite, is thus explained: for instance, where the highest court of the State or where the Supreme Court of the United States, reviewing the decision of the highest court of the State, determines that a law or a clause in the constitution of a State exempting certain property is unconstitutional and void, then the act of 1873 cannot give effect to that law which the State courts or the Supreme Court of the United States reversing the State courts have determined to be unconstitutional. It is too plain for a lawyer to dispute. If the State courts recognize the constitutional exemption to be operative, then the exemption is good and then there is sufficient uniformity, though it differ in the various States as regards the amount or the quality of the exemption; but if the law or the clause of the constitution is pronounced to be unconstitutional and void, as impairing the obligation of contracts, either by the State courts or by the Supreme Court of the United States reviewing the action of the State courts, then the exemption falls and no act of Congress can make that constitutional which the State courts or the Supreme Court of the United States have declared to be unconstitutional.

Why it is too plain for a lawyer to argue about. That was the distinction of Chief-Justice Waite, and there is the difference between it and the decision referred to by my friend from North Carolina. Here is their difficulty: since these very decisions that clause in the constitution of North Carolina, which up to the decision of the Supreme Court in the last three weeks had been recognized by the inferior tribunals, had been approved by the supreme court of North Carolina, stood as the law of that State; and so standing as the law of that State, the bankrupt law gave effect to it; but recently, by this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, the action of the supreme court of North Carolina has been reversed, and the Supreme Court of the United States has said that that exemption is unconstitutional and void; and I claim, therefore, that the act of 1873 cannot make that constitutional in a State which the Supreme Court of the United States has declared to be unconstitutional and void. That is the whole of it.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, I cannot consent that the remarks of my friend from Maryland shall go unanswered, for he has clearly misapprehended the facts of the case that he has just been commenting on. Let us see what the Chief-Justice decided. By the constitution of North Carolina a homestead of the value of $1,000 is exempt from execution, and personal property to the amount of $500 is also exempt from execution. The supreme court of North Carolina held that that provision of the constitution operated retroactively, and that property was not subject to the satisfaction of debts contracted prior to that time. It came to the Supreme Court of the United States by appeal, and the Supreme Court of the United States reversed that decision. The Chief-Justice had a case in Virginia on the circuit, that presented the question as to whether the act of Congress—for there is no question about the purpose of the act of Congress—whether so much of the act of Congress as allowed a homestead exemption according to the State law was valid. The Chief-Justice said it was not valid, and for the reason that Congress undertook by the provision that we both refer to to provide a homestead in Virginia not allowed by the laws of Virginia. He held that that provision of the act of Congress was void on the ground that it provided a homestead for Virginia that it did not provide for South Carolina and Georgia and other States.

Mr. THURMAN. I only rise to express the hope that we may now come to a vote. Of course I do not mean by making this remark to intimate that the observations of any Senator on the bill would be unacceptable to the Senate; but it is now past three o'clock and there may be several votes on the yeas and nays before we dispose of this bill, and I trust we may come to a vote.

Mr. MERRIMON. I am not through with my explanation.

Mr. THURMAN. I beg pardon; I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. MERRIMON. I was not. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the facts of the Georgia case to show that it was on all fours with the case before the Chief-Justice:

> On the 12th day of June, 1873, Willis A. Jordan filed his voluntary petition in bankruptcy, annexing thereto a schedule of his debts and assets, and in schedule B, 5, claimed to have exempt to him, in addition to necessary household and kitchen furniture and other articles and necessaries, to an amount not exceeding $500, personal property to the value of $1,000 in specie and real estate to the value of $2,000 in specie.
> To this claim of the bankrupt, S. B. McWilliams and William S. Heronton except, and each alleges that his debt against the bankrupt was contracted in the year 1860, when the homestead allowed by the laws of Georgia was fifty acres of land, and five acres additional for each child under sixteen years of age, and object to the setting apart of any other or greater homestead than that allowed by law when his debt was contracted, they contending that any law allowing a greater homestead than the one allowed by law at the date of their contract, which was long anterior to the adoption of the constitution and laws of Georgia, under which this large homestead is claimed, is, as to their debts, unconstitutional and void. These facts are not controverted.

So that the facts of this Georgia case show that it was exactly in point of principle and fact the very case that the Chief-Justice passed upon in Virginia. See further what the register says in his opinion, which was adopted by the judge:

> This is a question involving the constitutionality of the amendatory bankrupt act of March 3, 1873, and the movers of the objections are prompted by the recent decision of Chief-Justice Waite in re Daniel Deckert, 10 N. B. R., 1.

How can my friend, then, say that the very same point was not then passed upon? And not only that; the register goes on to cite half a dozen other decisions. For my friend's benefit I will call attention to them again:

> The constitutionality of this amendment has been sustained by Judge Dick, in re Jordan, 8 N. B. R., 180; by Judge Rives, in re Kean, id., 367, and by Judge Erskine, in re Smith, id, 401; and the same principle has been sustained by Judges Miller and Krekel, in re Beckerkord, 4 N. B. R., 203.

How is it possible that my friend can say they did not pass upon that law when it is plain that they had the decision of the Chief-Justice before them, and absolutely reversed his decision so far as they had power to do it? Then my friend sticks in the bark by saying that was the decision of a register. So it was; but the judge adopted the opinion of the register as his, and it is as much his as if he had written every word of it.

I have nothing further to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] to the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out of the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary "January" and insert "September," and strike out "nine" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

Which shall be on the 1st day of September, A. D. 1878.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio because I am afraid no other time can be carried. I am in favor of the longest time, the 1st of January, but, being afraid I cannot get that, I shall vote for this.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (when Mr. ALLISON'S name was called.) I am requested to state that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is paired on this subject with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.] The Senator from Iowa, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM, (when Mr. BAYARD'S name was called.) I am authorized to say that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] is paired on this question with the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN.] The Senator from Delaware, if here, would vote "yea" and the Senator from Alabama would vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (when Mr. EDMUNDS'S name was called.) The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired on this subject with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHRISTIANCY.] The Senator from Vermont would vote "yea" and the Senator from Michigan "nay."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WADLEIGH, (when his name was called.) I am paired upon this bill with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] who is in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt law, but also in favor of having the repeal take effect on the 1st of January next. As I do not know how he would vote on this particular question I shall refrain from voting.

I will also state that my colleague [Mr. ROLLINS] is paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE.] My colleague occupies the same position that I do.

The call of the roll was concluded.

Mr. RANDOLPH. My colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON] is detained at home by illness. He is in favor of the immediate repeal of the bankrupt bill. I have telegrams from him requesting that this statement be made.

Mr. COKE. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR,] who, if present, would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. BOOTH. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.] He is opposed to the bill and I am in favor of it. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment, and I refrain from voting.

Mr. MITCHELL. I observe at this moment that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] is not in his seat. He kindly paired with me yesterday for yesterday, requesting that I should pair with him to-day in case he was not here. I had not observed that he was not here until this moment. He is in favor of the immediate repeal of the law, and I should prefer to make it take effect on the 1st of January. I shall not vote.

Mr. INGALLS, (after having voted in the affirmative.) The junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] when he left the Chamber last evening requested me to pair with him upon this question and cognate questions. I understood from him that the pair was to extend only for yesterday; but I am informed by his colleague that the Senator from Rhode Island understood the pair to continue on this bill; and rather than have any misunderstanding I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the withdrawal.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Bailey,	Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Barnum,	Eustis,	Kirkwood,	Sargent,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Ohio has perfected his text, and now I ask for a vote on the amendment I offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, to strike out the words which have just been amended——

Mr. EATON. That cannot be done. It is contrary to an express principle of parliamentary law. When shall we ever get through? When shall we perfect the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is to strike out the words "on the 1st day of September, A. D. 1878," and insert "from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon; that is not my amendment. The amendment was to strike out the words "on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1879," and insert "from and after its passage."

Mr. EATON. The words are out already; they are not there.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon; they have not been stricken out.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. I desire to be heard a moment. The Senator from Ohio was told by the Chair that he could not amend my amendment, but he claimed the privilege of correcting the text before my amendment was voted upon. He did not move to strike out "on the 1st day of January, A. D., 1879," but he moved to insert "September" in place of "January," and "eight" instead of "nine," striking out only two words, which purported to be a correction of the text. I had moved to strike out the whole of the words in parenthesis, beginning with the word "on," namely: "on the 1st day of January, A. D., 1879," and to insert in lieu of them the words "from and after its passage."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. BECK. I was claiming the right to have a vote upon that, because the only ground on which the motion of the Senator from Ohio took precedence of mine, it being admitted that he could not amend my amendment——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question that the motion is in order.

Mr. THURMAN. I make the point of order, and I ask the indulgence of the Senate for one moment. The motion made by the Senator from Kentucky is no longer a motion that can be entertained. He moved to strike out the word "January" and the word "nine," with divers other words. The word "January" and the word "nine" are not there any longer. He has now to submit a new motion, and that is to strike out the clause as it now stands, and then he is met by the imperative rule that he cannot move to strike out that which the Senate has inserted. If there is anything plainer than that, I should like to know it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Kentucky to have moved to strike out a certain date which the Senate at a subsequent period has changed. The Senator from Kentucky modifies his motion, as the Chair understands, to strike out the time inserted by the Senate and substitute other words, which he has a right to do.

The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Has he a right, after the Senate has expressed its judgment by its deliberate vote that the law shall take effect on the 1st of September, now to modify his motion so as to reverse the deliberately expressed judgment of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that any Senator has a right to move to strike out and insert other words. The proposition of the Senator from Kentucky was to strike out certain words and insert other words. It is true a change has been made in the words he originally proposed to strike out, but he has a right to move to strike out those changed words, provided he moves to insert others. If it was simply a motion to strike out, it could not be done, because the Senate by a previous vote had agreed to insert the words. The motion is not divisible. Therefore the Chair has to put it as submitted by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. WITHERS. The judgment of the Senate has been expressed as between January and September, but has never been expressed as between September and the immediate passage of the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. Let us have the yeas and nays that we may have the sense of the Senate.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] to strike out the clause and insert what he proposes, which will be read by the Secretary so that it may be understood perfectly.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out "on the first day of September, A. D. 1878," and insert "from and after its passage."

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RANSOM, (when Mr. BAYARD's name was called.) On this question the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] is paired with the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN.] The Senator from Delaware, if here, would vote "nay" and the Senator from Alabama would vote "yea."

Mr. BOOTH, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.] If he were here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (when Mr. EDMUNDS's name was called.) The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired on this and all cognate questions with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHRISTIANCY.]

Mr. MITCHELL, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay." He is in favor of the immediate repeal of this law.

Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ROLLINS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE.] If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. WADLEIGH, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.] If he were present, he would vote against the amendment and I should vote for it.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COKE. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR.] If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My colleague, Mr. HEREFORD, is paired with the Senator from Colorado, Mr. TELLER. I do not know how either of them would vote on this amendment; but I was requested to announce the pair.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Anthony,	Garland,	Kernan,	Randolph,
Bailey,	Harris,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Beck,	Hill,	McCreery,	Whyte,
Cameron of Wis.,	Howe,	McDonald,	Withers.
Cockrell,	Johnston,	Morrill,
Dawes,	Kellogg,	Oglesby,

NAYS—24.

Barnum,	Dorsey,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Bruce,	Eaton,	Kirkwood,	Sargent,
Butler,	Eustis,	Matthews,	Saulsbury,
Conover,	Ferry,	McMillan,	Spencer,
Davis of Illinois,	Grover,	Merrimon,	Thurman,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hoar,	Patterson,	Windom.

ABSENT—30.

Allison,	Christiancy,	Ingalls,	Rollins,
Armstrong,	Coke,	Jones of Nevada,	Saunders,
Bayard,	Conkling,	Lamar,	Sharon,
Blaine,	Dennis,	McPherson,	Teller,
Booth,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Wadleigh,
Burnside,	Gordon,	Morgan,	Wallace.
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Paddock,
Chaffee,	Hereford,	Plumb,

So the amendment of Mr. BECK was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, as amended, to the second House amendment. The second House amendment is to insert after the word "therein" the words "and all penal actions or criminal proceedings arising thereunder." The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, as amended, is to substitute therefor the following:

And in respect of all pains, penalties, and forfeitures which shall have been incurred under any of said acts prior to the day when this act takes effect, or which may be thereafter incurred, under any of those provisions of any of said acts which, for the purposes named in this act, are kept in force, and all penal actions and criminal proceedings for a violation of any of said acts, whether then pending or thereafter instituted, and in respect of all rights of debtors and creditors (except the right of commencing original proceedings in bankruptcy,) and all rights of, and suits by, or against assignees, under any or all of said acts, in any matter or case which shall have arisen prior to the day when this act takes effect (which shall be on the 1st day of September, A. D. 1878) or in any matter or case which shall arise after this act takes effect, in respect of any matter of bankruptcy authorized by this act to be proceeded with after said last-named day.

Mr. WHYTE and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KERNAN. I wish to say a single word. I fear if this bill is sent back to the House there will be great danger that we shall not have the law repealed at September or any other time. I believe the bill as the House amended it protects every right that ought to be protected, and I hope those in favor of repealing the bankrupt law will vote down the Judiciary Committee amendments. I said yesterday that I believed we ought to vote down the amendment of the Judiciary Committee, and every other amendment, and let the bill become a law when it passes this body and is signed by the President, and not have it all summer going back and forth as it has been.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The friends of the repeal of this law tried to perfect it in the House; the Judiciary Committee did not try to perfect it here at all until it was sent to them this last time. Two or three of us were opposed to its repeal. The bill is perfected now so that if it is to go into operation it should go into operation with proper saving clauses. I think it would be very wrong to pass it without adopting the committee's amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the committee's amendment, as amended, to the House amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I would say in reply to the Senator from New York that unless this saving clause is adopted there will be more litigation than there would be under the bankrupt law.

Mr. HILL. The bill was just as perfect when it went from this body and is as perfect now as it can be made. I do not think the amendment of the House changes it one particle; but I am willing to vote for the amendment of the House because it saves the necessity of sending the bill back, and thereby hazarding it. I say now, after having carefully examined it, that I believe the bill as originally passed by this body is perfect and complete and covers everything that the amendment proposed by the Judiciary Committee covers.

Mr. KERNAN. It certainly does, with the House amendment.

Mr. MERRIMON. I trust these rallying appeals, just as we are coming to a vote, will not prevail.

Mr. KERNAN. After the very warm appeal of my friend this morning he might allow some of us to say one word very coolly.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (when Mr. ALLISON's name was called.) The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] would vote "yea" if here; but he is paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB,] who would vote "nay."

Mr. BOOTH, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.]

Mr. MITCHELL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] If he were here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] If he were here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. ROLLINS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. CHAFFEE] on the question of time only. I hardly know whether I ought to vote upon this motion or not.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Of course not. The time is the very question. This is a question of time. It is the very point of the whole thing.

Mr. ROLLINS. I shall withhold my vote.

Mr. WADLEIGH, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.] If he were present, he would vote against the motion and I should vote for it.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COKE. I wish to state that I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, Mr. LAMAR.

Mr. MORGAN. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, Mr. BAYARD.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Barnum,	Eaton,	Kirkwood,	Sargent,
Bruce,	Eustis,	McMillan,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Ferry,	Matthews,	Spencer,
Conover,	Gordon,	Merrimon,	Thurman,

Dorsey,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,

NAYS—21.

Anthony,	Garland,	Kernan,	Voorhees,
Bailey,	Harris,	McCreery,	Whyte,
Beck,	Hill,	McDonald,	Withers.
Cameron of Wis.,	Howe,	Maxey,
Cockrell,	Johnston,	Oglesby,
Dawes,	Kellogg,	Randolph,

So the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, as amended, to the House amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on concurring in the second amendment of the House as amended by the Senate.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is disposed of so far as the Senate is concerned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn until Monday next.

Mr. SARGENT and others. Let us have an executive session.

Mr. McMILLAN. There is a communication upon the President's desk which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, recommending an appropriation for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Fort Snelling, and the granting of the right of way for a public highway through the reservation; which was, on motion of Mr. McMILLAN, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. MATTHEWS] moves that the Senate adjourn to Monday next.

Mr. HOWE. Will not the Senator from Ohio withdraw that motion to allow a short executive session?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the motion is that when the Senate adjourns it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. MATTHEWS. No, it is a present motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is that the Senate do now adjourn until Monday next.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Some of us want an executive session.

Mr. WHYTE. I move to amend, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4246) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, in order that it may be the unfinished business for Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 27, noes 16; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 10, 1878.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. S. DOMER, D. D., St. Paul's English Lutheran church, Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

JOHN G. MAXWELL.

Mr. DURHAM. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the petition of John G. Maxwell, late marshal of the district of Utah, and ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

COMPENSATION OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS.

Mr. DURHAM, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, by unanimous consent, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4789) fixing the compensation of United States attorneys, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed and recommitted to the committee, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

RETURN OF DUTIES.

Mr. WOOD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4790) to provide for the return of duties erroneously paid under protest, out of the permanent appropriation, as provided by law; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

NAVAL CONTRACTS.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, submitted a report accompanied by the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and hereby is, instructed to report an appropriation in the sum of $3,217,738.76, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the claims mentioned, to the respective parties named hereinbefore.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, instructed to cancel contracts dated March 3, 1877, with Phineas Burgess, for completion of Monadnock, $695,000; with William Cramp & Sons, for completion of Terror, $578,000; with John Roach, for completion of Puritan, $1,417,642; also contracts with the South Boston Iron Company, dated respectively March 7 and 10, 1877, for construction of boilers, for the sum of $331,621.09; together amounting to the sum of $3,600,263.09.

Mr. PAGE, from the same committee, presented the views of the minority proposing to amend the second resolution of the majority by striking out the word "cancel" before the word "contracts," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "examine certain;" so that it shall read "that the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, instructed to examine certain contracts," &c.; also, to add to the resolution the words "and on being satisfied that the same are with responsible parties and for proper prices to confirm and carry out the same."

Mr. WILLIS, of New York. I move that the report of the majority, together with the views of the minority, be printed and made a special order for the 25th of May.

Mr. HALE. Is that assented to by the minority of the committee?

Mr. PAGE. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] that the minority have not consulted together in reference to that matter, but it is important that this subject should be discussed before the deficiency appropriation bill is reported to and acted upon by the House.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York. I ask that it be made a special order for the 25th of May, not to interfere with the reports from the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I desire to state that I reserve for myself the right to offer a resolution in lieu of the first resolution reported by the majority.

There being no objection, the reports were received, ordered to be printed, and made a special order for the 25th of May, not to interfere with the reports from the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York, moved to reconsider the order just made; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to be acted upon at the present time.

Mr. MILLS. I think I must call for the regular order.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think there will be no objection to this bill when read.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to offer a joint resolution for reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize gentlemen for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference.

TENTS, ETC., FOR TEXAN TROOPS.

Mr. MILLS, by unanimous consent, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 177) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to Governor Hubbard, of Texas, such tents, poles, and pins as he may require for the use of the volunteers of the State at their summer encampment; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

J. B. M'CARTHY.

Mr. LANDERS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives the sum of $180 to John B. McCarthy, for services rendered as clerk to the select committee investigating the public commissioners of the District of Columbia during the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, in accordance with the resolution of the House passed March 3, 1877.

GEORGE W. MILLER.

Mr. BROWNE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to George W. Miller, of the District of Columbia, out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, the sum of $52, for services rendered the House as a laborer from April 5, 1878, to April 30, 1878, inclusive.

EMPLOYÉS IN THE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. REED, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That in addition to the information called for by the resolution of this House of the 1st instant, the officers therein named be requested to furnish this House with a list of the names of the persons in the service of the respective Departments who have at any time been in the military or naval service of the United States; stating when the present service of such persons commenced, and also the names and commencement of service of orphans and widows of persons at any time in such military and naval service who are now in the employ of said Departments.

AUTOMATIC GAS-MACHINE.

Mr. KIMMEL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

Resolved, That the architect of the Capitol be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to facilitate the adjustment of Palmer's carburetter and automatic gas-machine to the gas-pipe by which the Capitol is supplied: Provided, That neither injury nor expense shall thereby accrue to the United States, and that the owners of said gas-machine pledge themselves to remove the same upon the demand of the architect.

SOUTH FARALLON ISLANDS, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. KENNA, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2145) to appropriate money for the establishment of a fog-bell and steam-whistle on South Farallon Islands, California; and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ROBERT J. OWENS.

Mr. RIDDLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4791) granting a pension to Robert J. Owens, Company D, Second District of Columbia Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CONTESTS UNDER HOMESTEAD AND PRE-EMPTION LAWS.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3369) to provide for the publication of notices of contest under the homestead, pre-emption, and tree-culture laws of the United States, and that the bill be now considered by the House.

The bill was read. It provides that the notices of contest now provided by law under the homestead, pre-emption, and tree-culture laws of the United States shall, after the passage of this act, be printed in some newspaper printed in the county where the land in contest lies; and if no newspaper be printed in such county, then in the newspaper printed in the county nearest to such land.

Mr. DUNNELL. This bill has the unanimous sanction of the Committee on Public Lands, and is in the interest of settlers.

There being no objection, the Committee on Public Lands was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, which was thereupon ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TRANSFER OF INDIAN BUREAU.

Mr. SCALES. I desire to announce that on Tuesday next I will call up the bill for the transfer of the Indian Bureau.

PAY OF HOUSE CLOAK-ROOM EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. CRAVENS. I ask unanimous consent to report for present consideration a resolution from the Committee on Civil-Service Reform.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That ten laborers, known as cloak room men, of the House of Representatives, who clean the Hall of the House daily, are entitled to pay as laborers from the 16th of December last, and that they be paid as such; that hereafter eight laborers only be employed as session laborers on the roll of the Doorkeeper of the House to perform said labor, and that they be paid at the same rate as other session laborers.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. CRAVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES W. COMBS.

Mr. CRAVENS. I ask unanimous consent to report from the same committee for present consideration a resolution relative to an employé in the folding-room.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That Charles W. Combs has been employed in the folding-room of the House as document messenger since the 1st day of January last, and has performed necessary and valuable service; that said Combs be paid for such service hitherto at the rate of $100 per month, and that he be paid hereafter for the remainder of the current fiscal year upon the roll of the folding-room of the House at the rate of $1,200 per annum.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to ask how this person came to be employed. By what authority was he employed?

Mr. CRAVENS. By resolution of the House, I think.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman says he "thinks" it was by resolution of the House. Does he know there was a resolution of the House? I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. ROBERTS. I hope that will not be done, because the resolution has already been considered by the Committee of Accounts, partially considered by the House, then referred to the Committee on Civil-Service Reform, by whom it has been considered, and is now reported back. I hope the House will act on it favorably.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentlemen who reports this resolution how this individual came to be employed. Who employed him? By what authority was he employed, by resolution of the House or according to law or how?

Mr. BREWER. I object to the consideration of the resolution. Let all cases of this kind come in together.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to present from the Committee on Rules the report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule 151: after word "report," in last line, insert "bills or resolutions touching the revenue or public debt at any time, and other bills."

Amend Rule 119: after the words "appropriation bills," in the second line, insert "or bills touching the revenue or public debt, and no others."

Mr. GARFIELD. These two propositions are parts of the same general amendment to the rules, and I will state briefly their purpose. As the practice has grown up we have found that the House was being cumbered with special orders, and under the present construction of the rule it can be so cumbered in that way as to mortgage altogether all its available time. The amendment here proposed allows the Committee on Appropriations to report, as they now do, general appropriation bills and have them made special orders by a majority vote. It also allows to bills from the Committee of Ways and Means having relation to taxation and the public debt the same position. This has in fact been the practice hitherto, though not in accordance with the exact letter of the rule. Then we add the words "and no other bills." In other words, after allowing appropriation bills and bills touching the public revenue and the public debt to be reported at any time and made special orders by a majority vote of the House, the rule then excludes all other bills from the same privilege, so that it will require a suspension of the rules to make any other bill than those named a special order. Of course if any committee obtains authority to report at any time, that will carry with it the right of consideration when reported. I have stated, I believe, all there is in the report just submitted.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Had not this proposition better lie over till it can be examined by the House?

Mr. GARFIELD. If gentlemen will open their Digest of Rules I think they will see precisely the effect of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the rule, as it will read if amended, be read by the Clerk.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the Clerk to read, from page 139 of the Manual, Rule 151 as it will read with the amendment we propose.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule 151 as follows:

After the word "report," in the last line, insert "bills or resolutions touching the revenue or public debt at any time and other bills;" so, if amended, it will read:

151. It shall be the duty of the Committee of Ways and Means to take into consideration all reports of the Treasury Department, and such other propositions relative to raising revenue and providing ways and means for the support of the Government as shall be presented or shall come in question, and be referred to them by the House, and to report their opinion thereon by bill or otherwise, as to them shall seem expedient; and said committee shall have leave to report bills or resolutions touching the revenue or public debt at any time, and other bills for commitment at any time.

Mr. GARFIELD. The House will see that the only amendment here is in the last line. Literally construed the rule now reads the Committee of Ways and Means shall have power to report for commitment only. This continues their power for commitment generally on other matters, but upon bills touching the revenue or public debt they may report for consideration, or, as will be seen in the next rule, for making a special order. Of course this cannot affect the tariff bill now, because it is already in its place, but it would affect a bill for refunding the public debt, or a bill making any change in the order of the public debt. It is a subject naturally and properly under this privilege, as the committee believe. Let the Clerk read again the last two lines of the rule as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

And said committee shall have leave to report bills or resolutions touching the revenue or public debt at any time, and other bills for commitment at any time.

Mr. CONGER. That would give them the privilege of reporting simple House resolutions at any time they deemed it expedient.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am not sure but that should be joint resolutions. I think it would perhaps enable the committee to report any resolution of the House. If there be no objection I will ask the word "joint" be put before the word "resolutions," so it will not refer to mere House resolutions.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman has made the House understand the only change proposed by the Committee on Rules is simply to give to the Committee of Ways and Means the same right to report upon those particular questions, the revenue and public debt, at any time.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is what I have said.

Mr. WOOD. That is all. If the gentleman makes it a joint resolution or bill he will see that he will deprive the committee of the privilege of reporting on propositions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The word "bills" embraces joint resolutions.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is true, but the point raised by the gentleman from Michigan is that the word "resolutions" might be construed to allow political resolutions on any subject not in the nature of bills which are to go to the Senate, but in the mere nature of House resolutions.

Mr. WOOD. It is not intended by this amendment to have any effect on any measure already reported from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have already stated that.

Mr. WOOD. I only desire to disarm the apprehension of gentlemen who think this will affect any existing bill before the House or in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from New York could report a new tariff bill in twenty-four hours.

Mr. WOOD. Then it would be for the House to dispose of.

Mr. CONGER. I know that.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield now to the gentleman from Kansas for a question.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I wish simply to ask the gentleman from Ohio, as this is a rule to limit and restrict the powers of this House, that he allow it to lie over for the present, to be printed and to give us one or two days to consider it. I hope the House will not act on it until it is perfectly understood.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is plain I have no choice but to press its consideration.

Mr. CONGER. I think it is so plain that with the power already given to the Committee on Appropriations—that it is so plain if we give this power to this Committee of Ways and Means they can take away whatever this House has not left to itself.

Mr. PHILLIPS. That is what I think.

Mr. CONGER. I think so, too.

Mr. PHILLIPS. It should be carefully disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. I think it should be laid over until members see what will be its effect.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MORRISON. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio to see if I understand the probable effect of this rule. As the rule now stands, if the Committee of Ways and Means report a bill to reduce taxes on tobacco that will go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for consideration. And if they reported a bill to suspend the sinking fund that must go to the Committee of the Whole and take its chances for consideration under the rules during this session. But with the rule amended as is now proposed, they can report to-morrow a bill for the reduction of the tobacco tax and to suspend the sinking fund; it must be immediately considered. Would that be the effect of it?

Mr. GARFIELD. I answer the gentleman distinctly, no. This does not affect the rule that requires any bill touching the revenue or appropriations to go to the Committee of the Whole. That point would be just as well taken under the new rule as it can be now. It does not affect that at all. If gentlemen will look at Rule 119, page 122, which it is also proposed to amend to make it conform to this change of rule, it will be seen we propose to put bills for raising the revenue and for the management of the public debt in precisely the same category as the general appropriation bills. So that a bill to take money out of the Treasury shall have no more right of consideration than a bill to put money into the Treasury. A bill to pay out the money we think ought to be put upon the same ground and stand in the same category of rights as a bill to put money into the Treasury, and no more. But both these classes of bills, those making appropriations and those touching the public revenue, must have their first consideration in the Committee of the Whole. Another rule, which I will report when this is disposed of, goes to the extent of saying that when the Senate puts on an appropriation not germane to a bill sent to them, making an appropriation entirely independent, that must go to the Committee of the Whole here, if the point is made, so as further to protect the rights of the House in all things touching the receipt or payment of money.

Now the further great object is to say that we limit to these two classes of bills alone the power to be assigned as special orders at any time so that they may have the preference in the power of the majority to control them. The point the gentleman from Illinois makes is not affected at all by this change of the rule.

Mr. MORRISON. Only to this extent, that when the committee report a bill they may, instead of its going to the Committee of the Whole, set it for a hearing.

Mr. GARFIELD. Oh, no. If they should set it for a hearing, whenever it comes up it can still, on the point being made by a single member, be sent to the Committee of the Whole, on the ground that it contains an appropriation that makes a change in the revenue laws. The bill remains subject to that point whether it is made a special order or not. We do not touch that; and I agree most heartily with the gentleman from Illinois that we should not touch that.

The SPEAKER. It is not understood as interfering with the right of a single member to make the point that the bill shall have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARFIELD. Oh, no; any member making the point can send it to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRISON. Then, as explained by the gentleman from Ohio, the proposed change of rule does not mean much.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the amendment reported by the Committee on Rules may be printed, that we may understand it, and let it come up at some other time. I desire also to ask the Chair whether the committee has the right to make this report. As I understand, this subject has not been referred to them.

The SPEAKER. All the rules are referred to the Committee on Rules, under the resolution constituting the committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD.]

Mr. BURCHARD. It has been ruled by the Speaker that a committee entitled to report can report a resolution making a bill a special order in Committee of the Whole. During previous Congresses I think, as members will recollect, the Committee of Ways and Means reporting revenue bills usually accompanied the reports with a motion to set those bills as special orders for consideration. Such were the motions that Mr. Schenck and Mr. DAWES made when they occupied the position of chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. Now it is thought, as I understand, by the gentleman from Ohio, best that the right to be assigned as special orders in the House should be confined to those bills that affect the revenue: the raising of revenue, the putting money into the Treasury or taking money out, or affecting the receipts that are to go into the Treasury; in short, that bills of that class from the Committee of Ways and Means should be put into the same category with bills from the Committee on Appropriations. That is the extent of this amendment of the rules authorizing these bills, and these only, to be reported for consideration.

Now, the Committee of Ways and Means, when it is called, can report any bill of the class that has been mentioned under its general authority to report at any time; but a bill so reported would necessarily go to the Committee of the Whole. Any bill that it reports goes under the rule to the Committee of the Whole. If this resolution is adopted, any bill that affects the revenue, on which the point of order is made, would also go to the Committee of the Whole. This would not change the rule in that respect. But a subsequent amendment which, as I understand the gentleman from Ohio, he proposes to report, would provide that the bill reported might by the order of the majority of the House be made the special order for consideration, reserving to it all the rights of the House and all the privileges that belong to the House in the consideration of such bills in Committee of the Whole. The whole subject is then under the control of a majority of the House; and whatever the majority of the House desires in regard to giving precedence to any bill under the resolution, it can do and not be subject to the will of a single member as to putting the bill in a place where it could not be considered.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield now to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the reading of Rule 145.

Mr. MILLS. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. CONGER. I claim that this proposition to change the rules cannot be considered to-day, but must lie over one day, according to Rule 145.

Mr. MILLS. While the Chair is examining that question I desire to say that during the four or five years that I have been in this House I have been reminded day by day that the net-work that the rules of the House throw around members obstructs the transaction of the public business. Cushing in his work on Parliamentary Law in the last sentence of the book, which he emphasizes by putting it in capitals, says that the general rule to be observed by parliamentary assemblies is to expedite and facilitate legislation.

Now, our rules are made to obstruct legislation. One member can make a point of order and prevent the majority from executing the public will. It seems to me that every rule made heretofore has had the effect to throw some impediment in the way of the House in discharging the duties devolving upon it. We ought to have the whole code of rules revised. I have talked to a number of members on this subject and I find that the general opinion is in favor of such revision. Why not have a committee to sit during the vacation or during the sessions of the House, to so revise the rules as to make it possible that a majority of the House may control the business of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that the Committee on Rules are at this time, and have been for some time past, engaged in that work.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3987) to regulate the advertising of mail-lettings.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 109) authorizing Lieutenant T. B. M. Mason, United States Navy, to accept a medal conferred by the King of Italy, for extinguishing a fire on a powder-ship; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 1016) to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. MILLS. Now, Mr. Speaker, under the rules as they now are it requires almost unanimous consent to do anything. The Speaker cannot lay the message just transmitted to the House from the Senate before the House if a solitary member objects. He has to wait until the morning hour expires and may have to wait until by some chance a majority of the House agree to go to business on the Speaker's table or else he must appeal for the unanimous consent of the House to lay before the House the business that comes to the House.

I was put in an awkward position yesterday in having to object to the Speaker laying executive communications before the House in order to reach a measure in which my constituents are interested on the Speaker's table. Under the present rules a single objection sends a message from the Senate to the foot of the Calendar, where it may perhaps not be reached. I have a bill which was reported unanimously to the House, which is to-day upon the Calendar, but it cannot be reached under your rules. Four-fifths of the House cannot pass any measure, if there be one solitary objector. The rules require revision. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that this matter had better be laid over and the proposed amendment to the rules printed, so that we may see the effect of the rule. The first thing we do when Congress organizes is for some old member to get up and move that the old net-work of rules that has tied the hands of former Congresses be adopted, and in a moment it is done, and then you cannot get out of it. You cannot bring any matter before the House and a majority of the House is unable to carry out the will of the people.

Mr. GARFIELD resumed the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] desired to raise a question of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to make a single suggestion only.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to meet the point of order which the gentleman from Michigan makes.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order under Rule 145, first paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read that portion of the rule.

The Clerk read that portion of the rule, as follows:

No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice being given of the motion therefor.

The SPEAKER. The practice has grown up that the Committee on Rules shall have leave to report at any time, and that practically comes from the following resolutions usually offered at the beginning of each Congress, and which were offered at the beginning of this Congress. The Clerk will read from the Journal.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOOD, as a question of privilege, submitted the following resolutions; which were read, considered, and agreed to, namely:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress shall be the rules of the House of Representatives until otherwise ordered.

Resolved further, That a committee of five, to consist of the Speaker and four members, to be named by him, be appointed, to whom shall be referred the rules of the House, and who shall be authorized to report at any time such amendments on the revision of the same as they may think proper.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will see that the Committee on Rules, under these resolutions of the House, have a right to report at any time on the revision of the rules. The other rule, to which the gentleman from Michigan has referred, would seem to prevent the precipitation of a change of the rules of the House by any single member.

Mr. CONGER. The committee may report at any time, it is true; but it would seem that the rule which has been read would apply to that report and that it must lie over for one day.

The SPEAKER. The right to report carries with it the right to consider, of course.

Mr. CONGER. I thought not; with this rule still unchanged, still a rule of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the Committee on Rules, having been charged with the revision of the rules, have uniformly been allowed to report at any time.

Mr. CONGER. Then I raise the question of consideration now.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is too late to do that now, for the matter has already been discussed. I have no disposition to force hasty action upon this matter, and several gentlemen have asked me that the report be made together with an additional rule which we propose to report and printed together. I would say that I believe that what we have done is for the wise and judicious conduct of the business of the House.

Mr. CONGER. When will the gentleman call it up?

Mr. GARFIELD. Perhaps to-morrow.

Mr. CONGER. Will these rules be printed in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. They will be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. GARFIELD. I now ask for the reading of the other rule which we propose to report.

The Clerk read as follows:

To be appended to Rule 112.

All bills originating in the Senate, appropriating money, land, or property of the United States, shall have their first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union or the Committee of the Whole House, and all amendments made to House bills not germane to the subject-matters contained therein as originally passed by the House, shall in like manner have their first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union or the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will mention that the journal clerk has prepared a report giving the history of this rule and I ask that that be printed in connection with the proposed rules.

The SPEAKER. The report will also be printed in the RECORD.

It is as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom were referred the rules of the House with leave to report at any time such amendments as they may think proper, having had the same under consideration, report the following amendments, namely:

Amend Rule 112 as follows, namely: after the word "made," in line 4, insert the following, namely: "or releasing alleged indebtedness to the Government."

This amendment is necessary in order that bills of a private nature may be subject to a uniform rule of consideration, which is not at present the case. Bills proposing to release disbursing officers of the Government from indebtedness or responsibility on account of the loss by defalcation or otherwise of subordinates under the rules and practice are not required to be "first discussed in a Committee of the Whole Hous ," as your committee believe they should be, and this amendment establishes a common rule of proceeding with relation to all private bills "touching appropriations of money."

Your committee propose the following amendment to Rule 112, as an additional paragraph, namely:

All bills originating in the Senate appropriating money, land, or property of the United States shall have their first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, or the Committee of the Whole House; and all amendments made to House bills not germane to the subject-matters contained therein as originally passed by the House, shall in like manner have their first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union or the Committee of the Whole House.

Rule 112 was substantially adopted November 13, 1794, and was as follows, namely: "All proceedings touching appropriations of money shall be first moved and discussed in a Committee of the Whole House." December 17, 1805, the word "moved" was stricken out, and January 13, 1874, the rule was amended by adding the following, namely:

After the word "money," where it first occurs, insert: "and all bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made."

While your committee are of opinion that the proper construction of the rule requires that Senate bills making appropriations of money or property or requiring such appropriations to be made or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made shall, upon the demand of a member, be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union or the Committee of the Whole House, as the case may be, your committee believe the rule should be made specific, distinct, and positive.

Your committee believe that amendments of the Senate to House bills, where not germane to the bill as it originally left the House, where such amendments involve appropriations of money or property or require such appropriations to be made or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, should also be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union or the Committee of the Whole House.

Your committee further report the following amendment to Rule 119, namely:

After the words "appropriation bills," in the second clause, insert "or bills touching the revenue or public debt, and no others."

Also to amend Rule 151 as follows, namely:

After the word "report," in last line, insert "bills or resolutions touching the revenue or public debt at any time, and other bills."

The effect of these latter amendments is to give to the Committee of Ways and Means the same powers and privileges possessed by the Committee on Appropriations with respect to appropriation bills. Your committee are of opinion that no good reason can be urged against conferring upon the committee charged with the duty of "reporting propositions relative to raising revenue and providing for the support of the Government" the same privileges conferred upon the committee charged with the duty of reporting bills for the disbursement of the public money for carrying on the several departments of the Government, and accordingly report the said amendments with the recommendation that the same be adopted.

Mr. BRIGHT. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour commences at twenty minutes to twelve o'clock.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The RECORD will be printed to-morrow and members will not have time to consider the effect of these new rules, and I ask the gentleman from Ohio not to call them up to-morrow, but some day next week.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will not call up the report until members have had an opportunity of examining it.

The SPEAKER. There is no necessity for haste about it.

ARMS FOR THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. BANNING. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to yield for a moment that I may ask the House to pass upon a joint resolution (H. R. No. 153) providing for the issue of arms to Territories. The resolution has been unanimously agreed to by the Committee on Military Affairs, and is recommended by the Secretary of War at the request of the governor of Idaho.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand that in the arsenals there are only about five thousand guns of approved patterns, and if we are going to give them away we shall leave ourselves unarmed.

Mr. BANNING. The arms proposed to be given by this resolution are arms that will not be used for army purposes.

Mr. GARFIELD. It does not propose to give away our improved Springfield muskets?

Mr. BANNING. Oh, no; these are arms which would not be further used in the Army. I am instructed to report this joint resolution with an amendment.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause to be issued to each of the Territories of the United States (in addition to arms and ammunition the issue of which has been heretofore provided for) such arms as he may deem necessary, and ammunition for the same not to exceed fifty ball-cartridges for each arm: Provided, That such issue shall be only from arms owned by the Government of the United States which have been superseded and no longer issued to the Army: And provided further, That said arms shall be issued only in the following manner, and upon the following conditions, namely: upon the requisition of the governors of said Territories showing the absolute necessity for arms for the protection of citizens and their property against hostile Indians within or of Indian raids into such Territories.

The amendment reported by the committee was to insert after the word "arms" the words "not to exceed one thousand in number."

Mr. BANNING. My colleague from Ohio will observe that these are arms which have been superseded and not to be used by the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BANNING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AWARD OF THE MEXICAN CONVENTION.

Mr. BRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] to ask the reference of a bill upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill from the Senate, No. 1016, to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, on the 4th day of July, 1868.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at six minutes to twelve o'clock, and to-day being Friday, reports of a private character are in order, and the call rests with the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CALVIN HALSTEAD.

Mr. RIDDLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4792) granting a pension to Calvin Halstead, minor child of Calvin Halstead, deceased, late private in Company G, Fourth Tennessee Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

NATHAN UDELL.

Mr. RIDDLE also, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 698) granting a pension to Nathan Udell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the report ordered to be printed.

JAMES MAHEW.

PETER YARNELL.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4794) granting a pension to Peter Yarnell, late private in Company D, Twelfth West Virginia Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

CAROLINE M. EGBERT.

Mr. WALSH also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 547) granting a pension to Caroline M. Egbert; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the report ordered to be printed.

DENNIS M'GINNIS.

Mr. MACKEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1994) granting a pension to Dennis McGinnis; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the report ordered to be printed.

SARAH HOUSTON.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the petition of Sarah Houston, widow of Robert Houston, late lieutenant in Company G, Sixty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, praying for a pension, and the same was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

JOHN B. GILLISPIE.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the petition of John B. Gillispie for a pension, and the same was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. MACKEY. I have a report of a public nature which I would like to present to the House.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDEN. I object to the reporting of public bills under this call.

OSCAR B. KNOTT.

Mr. JOYCE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 892) granting a pension to Oscar B. Knott, late a private of Company K, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ANN CORNELIA LANMAN.

Mr. JOYCE also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3053, a bill (H. R. No. 4795) granting a pension to Ann Cornelia Lanman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY B. MARSH.

Mr. JOYCE. I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report back, with a favorable recommendation, Senate bill No. 930, granting a pension to Mary B. Marsh, and to ask that it be considered at this time. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary B. Marsh, widow of W. R. Marsh, late surgeon Second Regiment Iowa Infantry.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOYCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH BRATTON.

Mr. METCALFE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4796) granting a pension to Joseph Bratton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DISMAL SWAMP COMPANY.

Mr. CABELL. As I expect to be absent when the Committee on Railways and Canals will be next called for bills of a public character, I ask consent to report at this time, for reference to the Committee of the Whole on the Public Calendar, a bill to aid the Dismal Swamp Company in improving their canal. I will say that it is in contemplation to present a minority report, and I ask consent that it be printed with the majority report.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 4797) was received, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed.

LABORERS ON FOX RIVER IMPROVEMENT, WISCONSIN.

Mr. SOUTHARD, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4327) for the relief of certain laborers employed upon Government works.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the laborers who worked upon the Government improvements upon the Fox River, in the State of Wisconsin, under or employed by Day, Call & Co., (or subcontractors under them,) late contractors with the Government in the improvement of the Lower Fox River, in the State of Wisconsin, the amount due each of such laborers, respectively, for work, labor, and services by them done and performed, respectively, upon and about said improvements as aforesaid, out of and from any moneys actually earned by said Day, Call & Co., (or subcontractors under them,) under their said contract with the Government, or for work done and materials furnished by said Day, Call & Co., (or subcontractors under them,) and which have not been paid for by the Government and which may be withheld by the Government from the said Day, Call & Co. on their said contract as a forfeiture or otherwise: Provided, however, That if the amount thereof is not sufficient to pay in full the amount due to such laborers, respectively, then to pay said laborers pro rata. Such payments may be made after giving notice four weeks successively in some newspaper published in the county of Outagamie, Wisconsin, for such laborers to present and prove their claims: It is further provided, That such payments be made in the State of Wisconsin by and through some engineer officer of the United States, designated by the Secretary of War.

Mr. EDEN. If there is a report accompanying the bill, I ask that it be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred House bill No. 4327, "for the relief of certain laborers employed upon Government works," reports as follows: That in 1875 the Government let a contract to Day, Call, & Co., to do certain work on the improvement of the Lower Fox River in the State of Wisconsin; that on or about the 20th of November, 1875, the said Day, Call & Co. failed, and were put in bankruptcy. At the time of such failure they were largely indebted to the laborers in their employ for work actually done on such Government works. At the time said Day, Call & Co. were put in bankruptcy there was unpaid then by the Government for work by them done, and materials by them furnished, the sum of $7,135.01. The same being 10 per cent. kept back by the Government on their contract, by the terms thereof, as security. The same has never been paid in whole or in part.

Major D. C. Houston, of the United States Engineer Corps, then and now in charge of said Government works, in an official communication relative thereto, to Brigadier-General A. A. Humphreys, Chief of Engineers United States Army, of date, June 27, 1876, (a copy of which is hereto attached,) says: "Sum earned by and due the contractors at the time they made default was $7,135.01, none of which has since been paid. As near as I can judge, this will nearly, if not quite, pay the amounts due the laborers and mechanics. These petitioners are poor men, dependent for support upon their daily labor.

"Owing to the misconduct of the contractors, who are now bankrupt, for a large amount, they were deprived of their just dues. They simply ask that the amount forfeited by the contractors and which they earned may be applied, as far as it will go, in paying their just dues.

"They do not ask the Government to appropriate any more money, but that money actually earned may be paid to them, or, in other words, that the amount forfeited by the contractors for work actually performed by them may be paid them.

"This reasonable request I would urgently recommend to the favorable consideration of the committee."

This bill provides that the Secretary of War pay to the said laborers the amount due them respectively out of the said money so earned and unpaid, and if the same is not sufficient to pay them in full then they be paid pro rata.

These laborers having actually performed the work, and the Government enjoyed the benefit thereof, and the bill providing for the payment only of the amount earned and unpaid for by the Government, the committee are of the opinion that justice and equity demand that the said sum so earned and unpaid be paid over to said laborers as provided in said bill, and therefore recommend the passage of the same.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Milwaukee, Wisconsin, June 2, 1876.

GENERAL: I have the honor to report, in compliance with your letter of the 18th ultimo, inclosing letter from the United States Senate Committee on Claims, that immediately on its receipt I called upon the late contractors, L. J. & J. Day and T. W. Call, for a statement of amounts due by them to employés under their contracts on the Fox River improvement, and have received no response from them, though I have written them twice.

This was, as I supposed, the only way to obtain the information desired, as we had no record of their affairs. The United States commissioner in bankruptcy has, however, promised me the amounts due, which I will forward as soon as received. The other information called for by the committee is as follows: Sum earned by and due the contractors at the time they made default was $7,135.01, none of which has since been paid, (see inclosed statement in detail.) As near as I can judge this will nearly if not quite, pay the amounts due the laborers and mechanics. I know of no other information which would be of service to the committee.

These petitioners are poor men, dependent for a support on their daily labor. Owing to the misconduct of the contractors, who are now bankrupt for a large amount, they were deprived of their just dues. They simply ask that the amount forfeited by the contractors, and which they earned, may be applied, as far as it will go, in payment of their just dues.

They do not ask the Government to appropriate any more money, but that money actually earned may be paid to them; in other words, that the amount forfeited by the contractors for work actually performed by them (the petitioners) may be paid them.

This reasonable request I would urgently recommend to the favorable consideration of the committee.

The letter from the clerk of the committee is herewith returned.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. C. HOUSTON,
Major of Engineers.

Brigadier-General A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Washington, D. C.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SOUTHARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MUTILATION AND DEBASEMENT OF UNITED STATES COIN.

Mr. MAISH. I am instructed by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to report a bill in reference to the mutilation and debasement of United States coin.

The SPEAKER. That is a public bill and not in order during this call, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDEN. I object to public bills.

THOMAS A. WESTON.

Mr. VANCE. I am directed by the Committee on Patents to report back, with an amendment, House bill No. 314 to confirm the term, for the period of seventeen years from the date of its original grant, of the patent of Thomas A. Weston. I desire that that bill shall now be considered, or rather I will ask consent to take from the Speaker's table and consider at this time Senate bill No. 148, which is the same as the House bill and has been informally considered by the Committee on Patents.

Mr. JONES, of Ohio. I object to that.

Mr. VANCE. Then I ask that the Senate bill be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. MILLS. I object to taking any bill from the Speaker's table out of its regular order.

Mr. VANCE. Then I ask that this House bill No. 314 be considered at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the patent for improvement in pulleys, No. 67470, granted to Thomas A. Weston, August 6, 1867, for the term of seventeen years from that date, and reissued No 4971, July 9, 1872, shall be deemed to be, and the same is hereby declared to be, in full force and effect for the term of seven en years from the date of its original grant, namely, August 6, 1867, according to the terms expressed in said original grant.

The amendment reported from the committee was to add to the bill the following:

Provided, That no one shall be held liable for any infringement of the patent during the period from the date of its lapse to the passage of this act, or for the use or sale hereafter of any specific devices embracing the patented invention made within that period.

Mr. VANCE. There is a report accompanying this bill, but I can explain it in a few minutes, unless gentlemen prefer to have the report read.

Mr. KEIFER. Should not this bill go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar?

Mr. VANCE. It does not take any money out of the Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, if there be no objection, I will explain the bill. I can do so in a few words.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point that this bill should go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Under what requirement of the rule?

Mr. KEIFER. It is a private bill and ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole; it cannot be considered properly in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill is not subject to a point of order. It appropriates neither money, land, nor any other property of the Government.

Mr. BEEBE. Can it be considered now without unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. KEIFER. Then I insist on the reading of the report.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred House bill No. 314, to confirm the term, for the period of seventeen years from the date of its original grant, of the patent of Thomas A. Weston, No 67470, granted August 6, 1867, and reissued No. 4971 July 9, 1872, hereby report that it appears satisfactorily before the committee that Mr. Weston had made his invention in the year 1859 and filed a caveat for its protection in the United States Patent Office. In the same year he took out a patent for it in England. In 1860 he renewed his caveat, and in 1861, while it remained in force and while he was lawfully entitled to notice of any conflicting application for patent that might be filed, an application was filed, and without notice to Weston, and in disregard of his caveat, a patent was granted to J. J. Doyle, dated January 8, 1861, covering Weston's invention. Afterw..rd in the year 1861, Weston filed his application for patent and was rejected on reference to Doyle's patent. He instituted interference proceedings repeatedly but without avail, and finally, during the year 1867, through due legal proceedings had, he was adjudged to be the original and first inventor, and his patent was granted him August 6, 1867. The interference tribunal in the Patent Office, in its official decision reviewing the facts and evidence, and awarding priority of invention to Weston, said: 'The fact cannot be denied that Doyle's patent, under the circumstances, no notice having been taken of Weston's caveat, was improperly issued, and that an act of great injustice, unintentionally of course, was perpetrated toward Weston."

The effect of thus wrongfully delaying the grant of Weston's patent to him, through the unlawful grant of a patent for his invention to another who proved not to be the first inventor, has been to deprive him of the benefit of a large portion of the term of his patent, as well as to put him to considerable expense in carrying on legal proceedings to obtain his patent, to which he ought not to have been and would not have been subjected had the law respecting caveats been observed in the Patent Office. The deprivation of a portion of the term of his patent has occurred to Weston, as follows: having obtained his English patent (which he was obliged as a matter of safety to obtain, if he obtained it at all before he procured his American patent) in 1859, his patent in this country could only run, as has been judicially settled in Weston's case, (Weston vs. White et al., United States circuit court for the district of Connecticut,) seventeen years from October 22, 1859, the date of his English patent. His patent therefore expired, as the court has held, October 22, 1876, having run a little over nine years. It purports on its face to be granted for seventeen years like all other American patents granted since the patent act of 1861. The bill seeks only to confirm it for that term, and not to extend the term beyond that uniformly given to other patentees. The loss of a large part of the term granted, and the unusual and expensive proceedings to which Weston was put to ultimately obtain his patent, appear clearly to have arisen from no fault of his own, and they seem to raise an equity in his behalf worthy of consideration. The novelty and utility of his invention have been judicially sanctioned by suits both in this country and in England. (Tangye, assignee of Weston, vs. Stott, before Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood and a special jury, December 11 to 18, 1865, Higgin's Digest, page 501 and 14 W. R. 124.) Abundant testimonials of its importance are shown from national, international, and State fairs and expositions, scientific publications, mechanical text-books, letters from mechanical engineers, and the invention appears to have been adopted throughout the world. Weston appears to have thus far derived but a very small, if any, net profit from his patent, owing to expenses incident to litigation and otherwise connected with the matter. The title to the patent appears to be wholly vested in Weston. Most of the above-stated facts are matters of record, and they, together with matters not of record, have been duly and amply attested before the committee. We therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. VANCE. As appears from the reading of this report Mr. Weston in 1859 went to England and obtained a patent. In the mean time he filed his caveat to protect his invention in this country. A patent was granted to a man named Doyle for the same invention; and when Mr. Weston applied for his patent an interference was declared, on which the decision was suspended for some time. Finally the Patent Office acknowledged that it had made an error and granted him a patent; but he lost these six years and a half by the delay. This bill is not for the extension of his patent. It proposes merely to allow this patentee the term of seventeen years which the law contemplates. The committee think this a just case and ask the House to pass the bill. No objection is filed to this application on the part of Mr. Weston, and I hope the House will pass the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Ohio. Will the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] yield to me a moment? I want to suggest some reasons why the bill ought not to pass.

Mr. VANCE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JONES, of Ohio. So far as this particular case is concerned, I am not advised as to all the facts; but I am opposed on principle to the extension of patents.

Mr. VANCE. This is not an extension.

Mr. JONES, of Ohio. And I am opposed to the confirmation of patents so as to secure to a party the whole term where there has been negligence on his part in the prosecution of his patent.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman will allow me to correct him. This is not an extension of a patent; and it does not propose to give additional time to a party who has lost time by his own neglect. This is simply a bill to give this patentee the benefit of the time of which the Patent Office itself deprived him by its own error.

Mr. JONES, of Ohio. There is no use of having a Patent Office unless we conform to our own laws on the subject without undertaking to help out parties by special acts. The reason why our laws authorize patents for so long a term as seventeen years is that the party may have the advantage of at least half the time in order to carry on litigation which may be necessary to sustain the patent, in order to enable him to do what this man has been doing. He has had the benefit of his invention for nine years, as I understand; and that is a sufficient time for a person to dispose of his invention and make out all there is in it. I think, therefore, that he should not be helped out by a special law of this kind, which undertakes to give him the benefit of seventeen full years without making any allowance whatever for the time occupied in the litigation and establishment of his patent-right. I think we ought not to interfere by special act in this case. This party had the benefit of the full term of his patent in England and of nine years in the United States. I think this is long enough.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. Speaker, it was not the fault of Mr. Weston that he did not receive his patent when he applied for it. The caveat was filed in the Patent Office. Weston was entitled to notice of the application which conflicted with his invention. He did not receive notice. When he applied for his patent he was refused; and the patent had been granted to another man. The case then went into interference three different times, and thus Mr. Weston was withheld from the use of his invention for six years and a half. To refuse now to pass this bill for his relief would be a great wrong. The Committee on Patents, after examination of the matter, believe that Mr. Weston is entitled to the relief here proposed. The bill passed the Senate without opposition, and I hope it will be passed by the House.

Mr. HARTZELL. Where did Mr. Weston first take out his patent? In England?

Mr. VANCE. He filed his caveat here and then took out his patent in England.

Mr. HARTZELL. Then did not the Department decide that the patent expired here at the same time as in England?

Mr. VANCE. The law so decides.

Mr. HARTZELL. Then this bill is for the purpose of modifying the law to suit this particular case, is it not?

Mr. VANCE. But the Patent Office acknowledged that it had done the man wrong by withholding his patent for six years and a half. But for this wrong, Mr. Weston would not be here asking relief. He was deprived for six years and a half of the use of his invention. I will say that this bill was passed by the Senate and reported favorably by the Committee on Patents of this House in the Forty-fourth Congress. It was placed on the Calendar ready to be passed, but was not reached. It has in every instance been favorably reported.

Mr. HARTZELL. If Mr. Weston had discovered, as he should have done, and perhaps did, that his patent expired at the same time in this country as it did in England, could he not have applied for and obtained a renewal at the time of the expiration of the patent in England?

Mr. VANCE. No, he could not have obtained a renewal.

Mr. HARTZELL. The report does not show it, and I should like to know whether there is any evidence before the Committee on Patents as to the amount of money this man has received already from this patent.

Mr. VANCE. He received but a small amount.

Mr. HARTZELL. How much?

Mr. VANCE. Not a large sum.

Mr. HARTZELL. My recollection is that in the Forty-fourth Congress it was shown the sum, according to his own statement, amounted to considerable.

Mr. VANCE. The gentleman is mistaken; it was a very small sum on this patent

Mr. JONES, of Ohio. Will the gentleman allow me to make a sing e suggestion?

Mr. VANCE. I have yielded to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND,] but will hear the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. JONES, of Ohio. One reason why I oppose the pending proposition is this: I believe the same rule should apply to all these extensions of patents by act of Congress that is applied in the Department itself. The law requires notices to be given, so any person having knowledge as to the amount of money made by the patent, whatever speculation there may be in regard to it, to whom it has been transferred, and whatever other information proper to an intelligent judgment of the case shall be brought to the attention of the Patent Office. For instance the patent cannot be renewed at the Patent Office without general notice, in order that the public, which may have acquired rights by the sale, transfer, or purchase of the articles, may be advised and without a showing to what extent profit may have been made out of the invention. In this case there is no showing in reference to these facts. There is no statement in this report that any notice was ever given to those interested in the invention or interested in the using of these pulleys. There is nothing to show that this party, in the nine years that he has already enjoyed the patent, may not have made a fortune out of it. There is nothing to show that this patent remains still in the hands of the original inventor or has not gone into the possession of speculators, who have bought out his rights. All these matters are required to be brought to the attention of the Patent Office before any renewal of patent is granted, and they should likewise be brought to the attention of this House, and the party is relieved from the ordinary embarrassments and ordinary litigation arising out of this extended privilege in the renewal of the patent. I submit——

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. This is the longest question I have ever heard in the House.

Mr. JONES, of Ohio. Unless the committee can show the amount of profit arising from the patent already we ought not to act favorably on the proposition.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I can answer the question propounded by the gentleman to the satisfaction, I think, of every one in the House. But before I reach that point I wish to say this in reference to the committee itself: in my judgment no Committee on Patents which has ever been appointed since the establishment of the Government has guarded the people with more jealous care from unjust extensions of patents than the present commiftee which has reported the pending bill. This committee has been in session twice each week during some seven or eight months, and not one single bill has yet been reported to the House in favor of granting the extension of a single patent. I will say further that the majority of the members of that committee are as much opposed to the extension of patents as the gentleman from Ohio or any other member on this floor. No man on this floor, and I may say you will find it difficult to find one off the floor, who is more radically opposed to the extension of patents than I am myself. I have opposed in that committee the extension of all patents whatsoever. Not one single bill, I repeat, has been reported from that committee for the extension of a patent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Patents, which investigated this particular case, and I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Ohio that this is not a bill to extend a patent in the usual sense of the term, but it is simply for the purpose of correcting a mistake committed by an officer of this Government whereby this man has been deprived of six years of the life of his patent under the law. It arises solely and only from a mistake or neglect of duty of the Patent Office. The facts have been correctly stated by the chairman of the committee. This man filed his caveat and then went abroad to secure a patent in England for the same invention. The Patent Office, in disregard of his rights, ignored or omitted to notice his caveat and issued a patent to a person by the name of Doyle for the same identical invention mentioned in Weston's caveat. When he returned to this country and found another enjoying the fruits of his own genius he applied to the Patent Office for the purpose of having an interference and his rights protected. An interference was granted and three different investigations occurred, and the final interference resulted in the Patent Office deciding that Weston was the original and true inventor, and that he was entitled to the patent; but the Patent Office did not do him justice until 1866. The office found then the patent had been granted wrongfully to the other man, and that the Patent Office itself by its own act had deprived him of six years of the life of his patent. The Patent Office would have been willing in 1866 to give him a patent for seventeen years, but the language of the law was such that it was not permitted to do so.

And now, sir, the Committee on Patents has simply recommended that you give to this man what is given under the law to every inventor, seventeen years as the life of his patent. The bill before the House is for the purpose of allowing his patent to run the full term allowed by law on all other patents, and nothing more.

Mr. HARTZELL. When did this patent expire?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It has not yet quite expired.

I will say this much further to my colleague [Mr. HARTZELL] in regard to the amount of profits realized on this invention. I do not remember the figures now, but the profits realized by the inventor have not been large; they have probably been $3,000 or $4,000. I feel quite sure they have not been exceeding $5,000.

I am satisfied the bill ought to pass and that there is no good reason to be urged against it. If there had been one single reason to be found why the bill should not be passed I should have protested against its passage in the committee, and would be found here endeavoring to defeat its passage in the House. I am opposed to all abuses of the patent system and shall use every means in my power to secure such a revision of the patent laws as will protect the public from the injustice and oppression which has so often resulted in the past from the allowance and extensions of patents.

Mr. VANCE. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WARD.]

Mr. WARD. I merely desire to say that I hope this bill will pass. I believe that it is meritorious in every respect and does simply an act of justice to the applicant. The misfortune or the difficulty in his case arose out of no fault of his own, but out of an error committed by the Department of the Government to whom the jurisdiction of this class of cases is committed; and it certainly will not be said that where the Department having the jurisdiction acts in a manner derogatory to the rights of the applicant and without fault of his own and in disregard of his rights and of the law does him an injury, when he comes in here and asks to have simple justice awarded him it shall be refused by this House. It is not a case of an extension of a patent and is not subject to prejudice by the argument that applies to such cases. This, as I said before, grants the application of an honest and deserving man to have the rights awarded to him which the law guaranteed to him, and I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. KEIFER rose.

Mr. VANCE. I call for the previous question.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to be heard.

Mr. VANCE. For how long?

Mr. KEIFER. About ten minutes.

Mr. VANCE. I will give the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not desire to be limited. I think it exceedingly dangerous to have bills of this character passed merely on speeches made in their favor.

Mr. VANCE. Then let the gentleman go ahead.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor without limit of time.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to say in the first place that this bill proposes to give to this patentee two years more time on this patent than he would have had provided there never had been any interference declared at all. That is one thing I have to say in opposition to it. Weston, the patentee, filed his first caveat in the year 1859. He neglected to take any steps toward perfecting his patent till his rights under that caveat, as appears by the report, had expired.

He again filed a caveat in 1860 to perpetuate his right to a patent. Then he took no steps to have a patent granted until some time after a period in 1861, when a Mr. Doyle came in and obtained a patent.

Then after that he made an application for a patent. Having rested upon whatever rights he had for a period of about two years, he made an application for a patent. Now, if you leave out of view the new patent that came in, which the committee says operated to deprive the man of his rights under the seventeen years' patent, you will see still the seventeen years' patent had run two years of its time, because he had not even applied for a patent, according to the committee's report, until in 1861. The committee propose by this bill to give him the benefit of his laches, of his fault, and to give him two years' time that he would not have had at all if there had been no other patent applied for or obtained. That is one objection I have to it.

Another objection is a more general one. It is this: that there hardly can be found to be a good patent of any importance in the United States where you could not have a bill of this kind passed to relieve the patentee, if this bill is a good one. Almost all of the patentees of good and valuable patents have had more or less trouble and interference at the Patent Office.

Mr. VANCE. Let me ask the gentleman, if persons come in here with meritorious bills ought they not to be heard and relief granted?

Mr. KEIFER. I would not grant relief simply because a man had the misfortune to have a lawsuit either in England or America; because there are very few patents in this country that have proved valuable, about which there has not been a lawsuit. And will you lay down the rule that wherever some misfortune grows out of an interference in the Patent Office or a controversy in the courts you will give the man an extension on his patent by reason of that delay or expense? Is that the proposition of the committee? I understand it to be so laid down by the report and the gentlemen of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. This does not arise from litigation.

Mr. KEIFER. It arises as I understand from a litigation growing out of interference in the Patent Office.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Oh, not at all.

Mr. KEIFER. In the report it is so.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Allow me to correct that. I stated a while ago that the delay was occasioned by the Patent Office neglecting to take proper notice of his caveat, disregarding his caveat, and issuing a patent to another party. After he discovered that fact he went to the office and asked for an interference. That was not litigation; it was done under the law.

Mr. KEIFER. It was not litigation in the courts, but this patentee had a contest upon the interference about the patent with Mr. Doyle, who claimed to be the original patentee. Weston had filed two caveats, and one at least had expired, if not both, before Doyle applied for a patent.

But, as I stated before, the committee proposes to give to Mr. Weston two years' time, which he lost by not filing his application for a patent in time. He lost that time by his own neglect in not filing his application for his patent. I do not think there is any special merit in the case, and my observation has been that in almost all these cases they are presented for the benefit of somebody who has in some way obtained control of the patent, and some manufacturing establishments that are struggling along and trying to run their business have to pay tribute to them. It will be found no doubt, by an examination of the record, and if we had a little time we could do it here, that this patentee has sold his right in the patent to some manufacturing establishment for the life of the patent, and then when his patent has expired he comes here and asks to have it extended, and when it is extended he will go back to the parties to whom he sold his patent and demand a royalty as tribute.

Mr. WARNER. That is not the case here. This man is manufacturing in his own name and is the only man interested in the patent.

Mr. KEIFER. Is he the only man who is using the patent?

Mr. WARNER. No, he is not.

Mr. KEIFER. If his patent is so poor that nobody will use and pay for it, then he can go on and use his patent without an extension for all time, but doubtless he has sold the patent to some manufacturer or other and he now demands of Congress simply the right to go back to the very same men to whom he has sold his patent and say to them: I have had my patent extended, and notwithstanding you have paid me for the patent for its original life you must make further payment to me.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman is drawing on his imagination so far as this case is concerned.

Mr. KEIFER. Not at all. If you will postpone this case for a week I venture to say that I will find by the records of the Patent Office that this man has assigned his patent.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman's remarks do not apply to this case.

Mr. KEIFER. Why not?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Because this is not an application for an extension. The patent has never been assigned, and during the time the case has been pending before the committee there has never been a protest against this measure. The case has been pending for four years. In the last Congress it was favorably reported upon, and at this session a bill of this nature has passed the Senate and now lies upon the Speaker's table, and never a word has been said against it.

I would say further that I would go as far as the gentleman would go, or any other member of the House, in opposing the extension of patents, but not one word, not one scintilla of his argument applies to the case now before us. It is simply a question of correcting an error of the Patent Office.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman says that this is not an application for the extension of the patent. I say it is on the face of the report. The effect of the bill will be to give this man about eight years' more time. It is an extension; that is what it amounts to.

Now, if the gentleman is right in saying that this man has never assigned his patent, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. WARNER] is right in saying that no one but himself has used his patent, it is about time we found out that the patent is not worth extending. If nobody wants it why should we extend the patent?

I have a word further to say in relation to an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. VANCE. Has not the gentleman's time expired? I yielded to him only for ten minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. I understood that I was speaking in my own time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE,] as the Chair thinks, stated that he was willing to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, and the gentleman from Ohio desired further time, and then the gentleman from North Carolina said: "Let him go ahead," and the Chair then said that the gentleman from Ohio was upon the floor without restriction of time.

Mr. VANCE. I certainly understood that the gentleman from Ohio only wanted ten minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from North Carolina, at my solicitation, yielded ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The Chair would like to look at the notes of the reporter.

Mr. KEIFER. The amendment proposed to this bill by the committee is I think too indefinite. It reads thus:

Provided, That no one shall be held liable for any infringement of the patent during the period from the date of its lapse to the passage of this act, or for the use or sale hereafter of any specific device embracing the patent made within that period.

Now, I do not understand that this is a device at all in that sense, and if there is a sale of machinery that involves the patent, it would not be protected by the proviso, and I suggest to the gentlemen of the Committee on Patents that they should insert after the word "specific" the words "machine covering any;" so that it will read:

Any specific machine covering any device embracing the patent, &c.

I will offer that amendment. It is unusual to extend a patent after it has expired. This patent expired in 1876. Men may have gone into business in the manufacture of the invention since the expiration of the patent who will have to close up or pay a royalty. Others may have bought for use the patented machinery who will be obliged to cease its use or pay royalty.

Mr. VANCE. I have no objection to the amendment; but I think the proviso reported by the committee covers that ground.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is corroborated in what he stated as to the time allowed the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] by reference to the notes of the reporter.

Mr. BRIGGS. I wish to say but a word or two upon this subject. The patent laws of this country give the patentee the benefit of a patent for a certain term of years upon the payment of certain sums. This individual has paid all that the law requires to be paid by the patentee, and from the neglect or the carelessness, or something else of the Patent Office itself, the patentee has been deprived of six or seven years for which his patent ought to run. This bill simply restores to him his rights and remedies the wrong which one of the Departments has committed. That is all there is of it.

Mr. VANCE. I call the previous question upon the bill and amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Before the previous question is called I desire to offer an amendment requiring this person to give notice to parties using his machine.

Mr. VANCE. I cannot yield for that amendment. No one has made any objection to this bill before the Committee on Patents.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman consent to amend this bill so as to allow the patentee to lose the period between the time of his caveat and the time of his application?

Mr. VANCE. No, sir; we want to pass the bill with the amendment reported from the Committee on Patents. And as the morning hour is nearly out, I must insist upon my call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The first question was upon the amendment of Mr. KEIFER to the amendment of the committee, to insert after the word "specific" the words "machine covering any;" so that the amendment of the committee, if amended, would read as follows:

Provided, That no one shall be held liable for infringement of the patent during the period from the date of its lapse and the passage of this act, or for the use or sale hereafter of any specific machine covering any devices embracing the patented invention made within that period.

The amendment of Mr. KEIFER to the amendment, as amended, was then agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill; and upon a division there were—ayes 92, noes 28.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. HARTZELL called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—ayes 32, noes 107.

So (more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 69, not voting 83; as follows:

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. MCKENZIE. My colleague, Mr. CARLISLE, is paired with Mr. POWERS, of Maine.

Mr. SHELLEY. I am paired with Mr. EVANS, of Indiana. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. PUGH. I am paired on all political questions with Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. As this is not a political question, I have voted.

Mr. RYAN. I am paired with Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. On all political questions I am paired with Mr. LANDERS, of Connecticut. As this is not a political question, I have voted.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. I am paired with Mr. MCKINLEY, of Ohio.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I am paired on all questions with Mr. SAPP, of Iowa.

Mr. COBB. My colleagues, Mr. FULLER and Mr. SEXTON, are paired.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. VANCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING TESTIMONY BEFORE A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CALDWELL] asks an order of the House that testimony taken and to be taken by the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department be printed.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, for one week from Monday next;

To Mr. MAISH, for Monday and Tuesday of next week; and

To Mr. LANDERS, for one week from Monday next.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; and I ask unanimous consent that to-day be considered as "objection day." Two "objection days" within the last month have been taken up by the Committee on Appropriations; and I think it but fair that to-day should be considered as "objection day."

Mr. MILLS. Does the gentleman agree that the call shall commence at the beginning of the Calendar?

Mr. BRIGHT. I have only made the general request that this be considered "objection day."

Mr. FORT. I object; and I wish to state——

The SPEAKER. An objection is sufficient. There is no occasion to state any reason.

Mr. FORT. There are many bills on that Calendar worthy to be considered——[cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, (Mr. KNAPP in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

WILLIAM AND MARY COLLEGE.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending bill is the bill (H. R. No. 189) to reimburse the College of William and Mary, in Virginia, for property destroyed during the war.

Mr. GOODE. Several gentlemen who desire to speak on this bill are absent to-day, and there are other gentlemen anxious for the consideration of other bills coming after this on the Calendar. I therefore move that this bill be passed over and not considered to-day.

Mr. KEIFER. Does this motion require unanimous consent?

Mr. BRIGHT. No, sir; it can be adopted by a majority vote.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. As this bill is now passed over and may not be reached again, I ask leave to print some remarks on the subject.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I make the same request.

Mr. BRIGHT. I suppose it would be proper to allow any gentleman the privilege of printing remarks on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] to ask unanimous consent that any gentleman may print remarks on the bill just laid aside. The Chair hears no objection to this request.

There being no objection, leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to understand whether this is to be the last of this bill for this session?

Mr. GOODE. I presume that on another consideration day the call will be taken up where we leave it to-day.

Mr. KEIFER. Does the gentleman expect to press his bill this session?

Mr. GOODE. I do not.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Then I would have preferred to have stricken out the enacting clause.

MARY FEARON AND JESSIE CROSSIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2138) to pay Mary Fearon and Jessie Crossin, executrices of Samuel P. Fearon, deceased, for certain registered United States bonds redeemed by the Government on forged assignments and power of attorney.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary Fearon and Jessie Crossin, as executrices of Samuel P. Fearon, deceased, late of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, or to the legal personal representatives of said Samuel P. Fearon, deceased, the sum of $4,000, with the lawful interest which would have accrued thereon from the date of the last payment of interest to the legal personal representatives of said Samuel P. Fearon, deceased, upon the following certificates of registered stock of the United States, redeemed or assigned upon forged power of attorney and forged assignment, namely, No. 2081, act of March 3, 1864, for $1,000, and Nos. 3424, 3425, 3426, 3427, 3428, and 3429, act of February 23, 1862, for $500 each, the property of said estate; the payment of principal and interest to be made according to the terms and stipulations of the original certificates.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

RICHARD HEATER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2119) making appropriations for the payment to Richard Heater, executor of John Heater, deceased, late of Loudoun County, Virginia, of the sum therein named for value of stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army.

The bill was read. It authorizes and requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Richard Heater, executor of the estate of John Heater, deceased, late of Loudoun County, Virginia, the sum of $3,365, the same being in full, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted as a full and final discharge of the claim presented by said John Heater to the commissioners of claims, under the act of March 3, 1871, and numbered by said commissioners of claims "claim No. 12467."

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. If there is any report in this case, I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John Heater having considered the same, submit the following report:

The original claimant, John Heater, (now deceased,) was a resident in 1861 of Loudoun County, Virginia. Richard Heater is now the executor of his estate and presents this claim.

The claim is for quartermaster stores taken in 1861 and 1862 from an island farm of John Heater, situate in the State of Maryland, by order of Colonel John W. Geary, of the Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, save the two horses.

This claim was presented to and rejected by the Quartermaster's Department for the reason that John Heater was not a "loyal citizen of a State not in rebellion."

Section 300 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (Appendix, page 1434) only gives jurisdiction to the Quartermaster-General to adjust claims for quartermaster stores of loyal citizens of States not in rebellion, and as the State of Virginia where the original claimant lived, was found to have been in rebellion, the Quartermaster-General refused properly to take jurisdiction of the claim.

The original claimant then presented his claim to the commissioners of claims, and they, after all the testimony was taken in support of it, decided that they were without jurisdiction, because the statute only gave them jurisdiction over claims for supplies taken or furnished in the insurrectionary States. Maryland, where these supplies were taken or furnished, was not one of these States.

There seems to be no remedy for the claimant save by an act of Congress.

The proof shows the original claimant was during the late war a loyal man. He had a son, with his consent, in the Union Army.

The property was irregularly taken and not receipted for by the proper officers, but it was doubtless taken with John Heater's consent, and used by the Union troops, and with the understanding that it would be paid for by the Government.

The two horses mentioned in the claim, the claimant swears, were taken, one by the Fourteenth New York Cavalry, and the other by Captain Samuel C. Means, of an independent cavalry company. Captain Means swears that he took two horses from John Heater by order of Colonel Geary, for use in a battery of artillery.

The testimony is not satisfactory as to the amount of stores taken, nor as to their value. It is found, however, that there was taken—

(1) 1,700 bushels of corn, worth per bushel 70 cents	$1,900 00
(2) 200 bushels of oats, worth per bushel 50 cents	100 00
(3) 15 tons of hay, worth per ton $15	225 00
(4) 500 bushels of wheat, worth per bushel $1	500 00
(5) 20 tons of wheat-straw, worth per ton $5	500 00
(6) 350 cords of wood in amount, (chiefly in the form of rails in the fence,) worth per cord $3	1,050 00
(7) 2 horses, worth $100 each	200 00
Total	3,365 00

The testimony does not show the value of the property, but the prices fixed above are the minimum prices allowed by the Quartermaster's Department, and adopted by the commissioners of claims, for property taken or furnished for the Union Army at that period of the war.

Your committee respectfully report the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the passage of this bill. Although it may be very fair on its face, yet I am not satisfied to allow it to pass without entering my protest against it. The report shows that the reason the Quartermaster's Department did not pay for the grain and supplies when they were taken was that there was a law prohibiting such payment to any citizen who was a resident of a State in rebellion. That very statement in the report satisfies me that this claim is a fraud, because the law which prevented the Quartermaster's Department from settling with loyal people, if there were any south of the Potomac, was not passed until 1867, six years after this property was taken. During those six years the Quartermaster's Department had authority to pay this claim, and had this man been what he is now represented the Quartermaster's Department would have settled it.

Mr. EDEN. The law to which the gentleman refers was passed July 4, 1864.

Mr. BRAGG. That may be. But this claim arose in 1861, in a country almost adjacent to Washington; the loyal people of that country (and there were some who were traitors) were in communication with the people of this city and the officers of the Government all the time. The fact that this claim, while all the facts were within the immediate knowledge of the Quartermaster's Department, should have been allowed to lie four or five or six or seven years, then go before the commissioners of claims and then come here to Congress, is to my mind sufficient to stamp it with the character of a fraudulent claim seeking to find favor from Congress through the medium of testimony by affidavit to the claimant's loyalty. I am opposed to it. I know how cheap affidavits are and how readily such testimony is procured.

Mr. EDEN. Let me say this testimony is not affidavits taken ex parte, but testimony taken in the first instance before the Quartermaster's Department, and afterward before the commissioners of southern claims.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will give attention a moment, I think I can satisfy him his conclusions are wrong. It was the policy of this Government to provide the method of settling claims of loyal citizens. It was the policy of the Government to allow the Quartermaster and Commissary Departments to settle claims of citizens living in the loyal States. It was the policy of the Government to remit all other claims of loyal citizens to the commissioners of claims to settle all claims for commissary stores and quartermaster stores taken or furnished, to use the language of the statute, from residents of insurrectionary States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me state the peculiarity of this case, and I have here before me the original papers.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. BRAGG. If this property was taken by order of the Quartermaster's Department, so as to charge the Government, would not the quartermaster have issued a voucher to the citizens from whom he took the property, so it could be presented to the proper department and be paid?

Mr. KEIFER. The answer to that is, he would if he was prepared to do it, but he was not bound to do it; and the second answer is, that if he had issued the voucher to this man Richard Heater, in the State of Virginia, the Government, by no machinery that has been provided up to the present hour outside of Congress, would have ever paid for it. The voucher would have stood for naught. I understand this man Richard Heater in his life-time presented his claim for these stores and this property to the Quartermaster's Department, and there it was considered. I have the report upon my table. The quartermaster held that while as a matter of fact the property was taken from the citizen in an insurrectionary State, it was still taken from a farm belonging to Richard Heater, in the State of Maryland, a loyal State. While the quartermaster found the property was taken and that the Government of the United States had the benefit of it, and that it should be paid for, yet under the law, the man himself living in an insurrectionary State and his property in a loyal State, he had no jurisdiction to make an allowance.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman answer another question?

Mr. KEIFER. Let me finish this first and then I will answer the gentleman's question.

Then Mr. Heater went with his claim to the commissioners of southern claims. There he thought they had jurisdiction. There the testimony was retaken. The property was found to have been taken and used by the United States, and ought to be paid for. The commissioners of claims held that the property was taken in a loyal State and not in a disloyal State, and therefore they had no jurisdiction to grant relief, merely because the property was in the wrong State. In the first instance the man was in the wrong State, while in the last the property was in the wrong State, and there was no relief to be obtained except from Congress. I will now yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. KEIFER. I will try to.

Mr. BRAGG. How happened it that this claim lay dormant until there was a law passed prohibiting the Quartermaster's Department paying it?

Mr. KEIFER. This claim went into the Quartermaster's Department while the law was in full force as the letter from the Quartermaster lying upon my table shows. It states the reason why he did not order it to be paid. It was because the man lived in an insurrectionary State, and the Quartermaster-General therefore had no jurisdiction to pay him, and it made no difference whether the law was passed taking away the power from the Quartermaster's Department or not, because that Department never had the power under the law and the construction given it by the Quartermaster-General to grant relief.

Mr. BRAGG. Does the gentleman say this claim was presented before 1864?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. How early?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not know that. I cannot give the precise date; but it was presented in due time and considered and rejected, because the Quartermaster's Department held it had no jurisdiction under the law to grant him relief, as he lived in an insurrectionary State. Then Mr. Heater went before the commissioners of southern claims, there presented his claim, there took all the testimony, and had the case fully heard; but the commissioners found, because the property was taken in a loyal State, notwithstanding Mr. Heater lived in an insurrectionary State, they could not grant relief. Their report lies here before me.

Mr. BRAGG. What is the proof showing the amount of each kind of grain that was taken?

Mr. KEIFER. The proofs are all here and are ample to show the amount. And if the gentleman will examine the report he will see that the Committee on War Claims cut down the values and did what is regarded by very many people in the South, perhaps also in the North, as a great injustice—they reduced good cedar rails to cord-wood and put at the ordinary rates for which cord-wood sells here on the Potomac River; and fences made of good cedar timber and buildings which had been used for fuel. All this was put down at the rate for cord-wood and not according to the real value of the material. The prices allowed are the minimum prices adopted by the commissioners of claims, who have been in the habit of allowing for such property the value at the time; and it was very low. Three dollars per cord was only allowed. Wheat is put in at a dollar a bushel and corn at seventy cents. The other things are rated exactly in accordance with the allowance uniformly made by the commissioners of claims and the Court of Claims.

Now, let me say one thing further. This claim was kindred to other claims that have been presented to the Quartermaster and Commissary Departments and that have come before the commissioners of claims, and hundreds of thousands of dollars of claims like this have been paid; and this would have been paid but for the simple fact that neither the Quartermaster's Department nor the commissioners of claims had jurisdiction to allow and pay it.

Mr. EDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for one question?

Mr. KEIFER. With pleasure.

Mr. EDEN. Did not the commissioners of claims find this claimant loyal?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDEN. And did they not find the fact in his favor about the property being furnished?

Mr. KEIFER. The Quartermaster's Department and the commissioners of claims each found everything in his favor, save and except the fact that the claimant lived without their jurisdiction or that his property was without their jurisdiction.

Mr. BRAGG. Perhaps I ought to excuse myself after the Committee on War Claims so strenuously advocate this claim and when I find my friend from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] so suddenly becoming a convert to the payment of southern war claims, by stating that it was my fortune at one time during the war to have passed through every section of Virginia, from Westmoreland to Harper's Ferry. I lived in Virginia—I do not say in what capacity—during a year and a half or two years while the war was going on; and it was some time after the war was over before I ever heard of a man who was a loyal Virginian in any other sense than being loyal to the old State of Virginia and letting the Government of the country go. Loyalty in Virginia meant loyalty to Virginia, and not loyalty to the Federal Government.

I know that it is very easy to supply the proofs that are necessary to satisfy a committee or a court constituted as the Court of Claims was, of the loyalty of the claimant. It is not twenty-four hours ago since I myself was applied to to support a claim for a widow lady whose property was burned during the seige of Vicksburgh. She had the certificates of General Grant as to her loyalty. And when I mentioned the fact that I was opposed to the payment of any of those claims and that I was opposed to the payment of her claim, even though she may have been loyal, as the injuries she received were the necessary result of her people going into war and it was a loss consequent upon the war, those who were supporting the claim said to me, "We can point you to dozens of our neighbors whose sons were in the rebel army, who were always secesh, who have supplied proofs to the Court of Claims they were loyal, and got the money, and why, now, should you treat this lady differently?"

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman from Wisconsin suggests that I am a convert to the payment of this class of claims. Let me say first for John Heater who is now in his grave, the testimony showed most conclusively and the fact is well known that he was a loyal man. He gave his son for the cause of the Union. His son went into the Union Army with his own consent and gallantly served in it during the war.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me that I may ask him a question for information.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FINLEY. I wish to ask whether this sum of $3,365 is a part of the list of war claims furnished in the recent speech of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HANNA;] because if it is I want it to be understood it is being advocated by gentlemen who are opposed to that class of claims and we should have credit for it if it is paid.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not intend the gentleman shall classify me at all on this subject of paying these claims. I have my own views about it. I believe in paying such claims as this. I believe in a liberal rule, and I do not care what the views of other gentlemen may be from a regard to political considerations. Whatever others may do, I believe I shall advocate on the floor of this House as I have advocated in the committee, and gentlemen of the committee will corroborate me in this statement, a liberal rule as to the payment of claims of loyal men living in the South. I am not to be classed among those opposed to paying. And I desire—although I do not wish unnecessarily to take up the time of the House—to send to the Clerk's desk some paragraphs from a speech made some years ago in the Senate of the United States by a distingnished Senator, a man of both head and heart, Senator Morton, of Indiana, on this subject of the payment of claims of loyal citizens of the South.

The Clerk read as follows:

But, Mr. President, let me take the case of a Union man in the South who has borne the heat and burden of this civil war, who has been persecuted, and who has sustained all those hardships that we know were incident to a Union man in the South during the war. To say that we will treat him as a public enemy, and that we will refuse to pay him for his property deliberately taken by the Government, where under the same circumstances we would pay a man living in the North for his property taken by the Government, is revolting to the plainest principles of justice. I cannot subscribe to any such doctrine. Why, sir, I know that where a camp was organized in the State of Indiana, or Ohio, or Pennsylvania, for the purpose of collecting and preparing troops, the owner of the property was indemnified by the Government for the damage done to it, or where forage and provisions were taken for the purpose of subsisting those troops the parties were indemnified for their property. To say that we will not pay a Union man in the South where his property has been taken under the same circumstances is revolting to the common principles of justice. I would throw to the winds all these technical rules by which the Union man of the South is to be treated as a public enemy and by which we shall refuse to do him that justice which we would do to a man in the North, of doubtful loyalty, who was living in peace, comfort, and safety.

Mr. President, there was one authority referred to, I believe, by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Willey] which perhaps might even cover all the cases, and I think that was in Vattel. He can correct me if I state it incorrectly. That authority was that even, for example, in a loyal State or in a part of the country where the insurrection did not prevail, if the Government deliberately took property, as a house or a garden, to make a rampart or fortification, or if it took forage or subsistence deliberately, the Government was bound to make payment. According to that authority, as I understand it, when General Lee invaded the State of Pennsylvania and the army of General Meade was falling back, if in the course of a march or a battle they destroyed the property of loyal men, that would be an act of war for which the Government would not be liable even in a loyal State.

And, sir, applying that principle to the Southern States where General Sherman on his march, or in the course of a battle, passed over and destroyed the property of Union men the Government is not liable; but if General Meade in the course of expelling Lee deliberately destroyed property which became necessary for a fortification, or seized the forage and provisions of loyal men around him there, the parties would be paid, and under the same circumstances they should be paid in the South, always upon the condition that they are true and loyal men.

Then, does not the rule reduce itself down to simply this, that wherever a loyal man in the North would be paid for his property which was deliberately appropriated by the Government, a loyal man in the South should be paid for his property deliberately appropriated by the Government; and where in the North a loyal man would not be paid for property destroyed in the course of a march, or at a battle, so in the South a loyal man should not be paid for his property destroyed in the same way.

Can we afford to make any other rule on this subject? We might save some money by making another rule; but it would in the end be penny-wise and pound-foolish economy. After having expended some $5,000,000,000 to keep the South in the Union, and after all our labors to build up a loyal party down there, shall we come here making shipwreck in the end by declaring upon the floor of the Senate that the loyal men whose hardships and sufferings we can never estimate shall be treated as public enemies, and that we will not pay them under the same circumstances under which we would pay a man for the taking of like property in the North. I can never consent to it.—Congressional Globe, volume 71, page 302.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to say a few words upon this subject but I will first yield to my friend from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN.]

Mr. EDEN. I would not talk upon these cases at all were it not for the fact that no matter what the Committee on War Claims may report to this House they have all to run the gauntlet either on one side or the other. I think that the remark of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] that the Committee on War Claims would report a case to the House that was fabricated, that was not supported by sufficient testimony, was entirely gratuitous. The committee is not in the habit of reporting bills to the House in any such cases as that.

The testimony in this case was taken before two tribunals in which the Government of the United States was represented in each of those tribunals, and each of those tribunals found all the facts in this case that we found; but for the reason that these tribunals did not have jurisdiction to pay this man, he did not get his pay and therefore he came to Congress for it. If it is wrong to pay a man living south of the Potomac who was loyal to the Government during the war and who furnished supplies to the Army of the United States, repeal your law of 1871. It provides for the payment of all that class of claims where the claimant has proved his case before the commissioners of claims. This case was proven there, but for the reason that the property of this man was situated in Maryland and not in Virginia that tribunal could not give him relief, and when the party went to the Quartermaster-General's Department he could not get relief because he lived in Virginia and not in Maryland, and that is the reason that he did not get his claim paid long ago. He stands precisely on the same footing that every man stands on who has been paid under the act of Congress of 1871, creating the commissioners of claims. That is all I have to say about the case.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Chairman, as this claimant is a resident of my district it would probably be unbecoming in me to be silent while this bill is under consideration. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] states that he lived in Virginia a year and a half.

Mr. BRAGG. I lived there four years, but only a year and a half in the gentleman's district.

Mr. HUNTON. I have no doubt that he was received in that district with the usual old Virginia hospitality and while he may have been in Virginia four years and a resident of my district a year and a half I claim to know a little more of these people than the gentleman from Wisconsin can know.

Mr. BRAGG. Where were you during the time I was there?

Mr. HUNTON. Wherever the gentleman was during the four years, I was in his neighborhood.

Now the gentleman from Wisconsin states the rule accurately. As a rule in the State of Virginia the people of Virginia were loyal to our flag. But, sir, there were exceptions to that rule and a large portion of the people embraced within that exception lived in the good old county of Loudoun, and in that county where there happened to be a large portion of Quakers and Germans there was a considerable infusion of the Union element. That Union element embraced some of as worthy, responsible, and good citizens as lived in the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Now it would probably be a want of candor on my part if I did not say that in the sentiments of those people, however worthy they might have been in other respects, I had not the slightest sympathy.

But I, like the gentleman from Wisconsin, lived among those people during the early period of the war, when to be a Union man in Virginia cost something in sentiment and feeling, when no man in that portion of the country claimed to be a Union man unless he was at heart a Union man. I was in this very county of Loudoun where this claimant resided and where his executor now resides, from the 8th May, 1861, until the close of that year, and I do know something about the sentiments of that people during that period, and I knew then, and knew with heartfelt regret, that there were within the confines of the county of Loudoun some as sincere Union men as lived north of the Potomac River. I say, therefore, that if the House means to pay any claims for losses during the war anywhere it seems to me that the proof in this case not only entitles this claimant to his claim, but demands of the House the passage of this bill, because it is eminently just and comes within the purview and equity of the law. He would have been paid his claim without coming to the House but for the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not rise to advocate this bill or to oppose it in any particular, but I desire to say that the Committee on War Claims do not need to feel sensitive over what may be said upon this subject. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] just now said that whatever bills were reported here they had to run the gauntlet on one side or the other of this House. That is not on account of any feeling toward that committee, because I believe every gentleman in this House has full confidence in the committee. It is because the republican party to-day are seeking to make political campaign capital of the fact, as they claim to the country, that this confederate House is going to pay enormous war claims.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Is that the reason you are afraid to do right?

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman asks me if that is the reason I am afraid to do right? I will say to the gentleman that I am not afraid to do right, I intend to do right, but I have not forgotten that a short time since a claim was presented to this House from Alexandria for about $12,000, for the use of property in that city during the war, which it was proved beyond question the United States Government had taken and enjoyed, and it was also proved that the owners of the property were loyal men in every respect. The only argument against the bill which I heard that appeared to carry conviction to republican hearts was the argument ad hominem, that it ought to be defeated because a man by the name of Ellsworth had been killed in Alexandria. And that side voted against the bill. I do not say that they did it because that argument was made, but I do say that they did it although they knew at the time that the claim was a just one.

Since that time the word has gone forth all over the country from the republican members of this House and through the republican papers, that the democratic House was going to ruin the country by the payment of war claims. Is it therefore to be wondered at that when a claim comes before this House, however just it may be, members on this side, after what comes from that side, feel a delicacy about voting for the claim and thus giving confirmation to that rumor, if you may call it such?

I think the better plan is to repeal the present law and to enact another law by which claims may be presented to a commission or to a court having jurisdiction and be adjudicated as other claims are adjudicated, and paid if found just. But as long as the feeling exists that has existed for some time in this House, it is not to be wondered at if not a dollar is paid upon any of these claims, however just they may be.

Mr. HAYES. Is the gentleman willing to deal unjustly with an individual simply because the republicans of this House want to make a little party capital? That is his argument.

Mr. FINLEY. I am just as willing as the gentleman is and has been to do justice. But when I see the republican party on that side vote almost as a unit against a claim that was shown beyond controversy to be just, and then attempting to make party capital against the democratic party for reporting the claim which everybody knew was just, then I am prepared to stand here as a member of this House and say as I have said that I am in favor of repealing the law and be done with the subject in this House.

Mr. HAYES. This House ought to rise above such influences as that and deal justly with individuals.

Mr. FINLEY. I will ask the gentleman if he rose above influences of that kind when the Alexandria claim came up?

Mr. FRANKLIN. I understand the gentleman to be opposed to paying this claim, because, as he thinks, the republican party opposed the payment of the Alexandria claim. Now will he go before the country upon any such ground as that?

Mr. FINLEY. I have not said so.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I certainly so understood you.

Mr. FINLEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Then what is the ground of your opposition?

Mr. FINLEY. I have not said that I was opposed to this bill at all. I took good care when I rose to say that I did not rise either to oppose or to advocate it. I rose to state facts which are known to every member of this House, and to show up the republican record on this subject in its proper light.

Mr. THORNBURGH. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] said that he was in the Federal Army and was unable to discover many, if any, Union men in the South.

Mr. BRAGG. I beg leave to correct the gentleman; I did not state that I was ever in the Federal Army.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I misunderstood the gentleman, then.

Mr. BRAGG. I carefully avoided making any allusion to the fact, if it was a fact, that I was in the Federal Army.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I will say that there were many Federal officers who did not take the pains they should have taken to ascertain who were loyal when they went South. There was no distinction made; property was taken alike from both the Union people of the South and the confederates of the South. I will say for the other side that they made more discrimination in behalf of their people than the Federal Army did in behalf of the Union people of the South.

We were living in States in rebellion, and under the law of nations we were all treated as rebels. Property was taken which has never yet been paid for. If all the claims of the loyal people of the South that are now pending in Congress and are before the Departments and are in the Court of Claims should be paid, they, with all that have been paid already, would not amount to one-tenth of the property that was taken from the Union people of the South.

If there is a section of the South where a majority, and a decided majority, of the white people remained loyal to the Federal Government, I come from that section and represent that people. Their claims have not been paid. A republican Congress did not pay them, only in part, and very few considering the whole number that were presented. They are not being paid this session of Congress. The committee are reporting very few of them, fewer far than heretofore, as the records will show.

And the other day, when the question of paying contractors for carrying mails in the Southern States before the war broke out, came before this Congress, it was discovered that the confederate congress had passed a law providing that those contractors should be paid by the confederate government; and it was discovered that some of them had been paid by the confederate government. And in that very statute passed by the confederate government there was an express proviso that no contractor that was not loyal to the confederate government could receive one cent. This side of the House made no effort to see that that class of claimants in the South should receive compensation; and the other side of the House have not recovered sufficiently from the rout they received on that occasion to report back a bill to pay the loyal men of the South.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. THORNBURGH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. Does not the gentleman from Tennessee know that that claim which proved to be fraudulent was about being passed without any objection from the republican side, without any report from the republican minority of the committee against it, when the member who represents my district stepped down and called attention to the fact that it was a war claim of that kind, which led to an investigation? So that what the gentleman at this time takes credit for as a total "rout" upon this subject was simply the result of attention being called to the matter by a member on this side of the House.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. There was a minority report. If the gentleman had looked at the records he would have found it.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman said there was not.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I said there was, and the records show it. Let the gentleman stick to the record.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] whether he does not know that the statute passed by the confederate government, under which many of these claimants were paid, contained an express provision that loyal claimants of that character in the South should not be paid, and whether he made any effort to secure their payment?

Mr. BRAGG. I will answer the gentleman. I had so little interest in the confederate government that I never studied their laws.

Mr. THORNBURGH. This was read at the Clerk's desk, and it was known to all the members of the House who listened to the discussion or investigated the question.

Mr. Chairman, to repudiate—and that is the only proper word to use—to repudiate the honest debts that the Government owes to the loyal people of the South for supplies, many times furnished on application or sold, at other times taken from the people who remained loyal in a country where it meant something to be loyal to the Government—to refuse to pay those people for the supplies which the Government would have had to buy from others, if it had not taken them from these loyal people, is as much repudiation and as dishonorable as it is to repudiate any part of the national debt.

Mr. RIDDLE. My colleague will allow me to ask him which side of the House seeks to repudiate those claims?

Mr. THORNBURGH. You are not reporting these claims of loyal people as you should.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. Chairman, it should not be said and it should not go to the country that republicans voted against a claim of this class because Colonel Ellsworth fell at Alexandria, Virginia. This is the first time I have heard that remark made. Each claim stands upon its own merits.

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman will turn to the RECORD he will find that when the argument was being made against the claim, the gentleman from New York said, "They killed Ellsworth down there," and the whole republican side applauded.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The gentleman from New York, whoever he is, is not the republican party.

Mr. FINLEY. The republicans on that side applauded.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire to say in connection with this question that a few evenings since my distinguished colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] showed here conclusively, if his record is correct, that every claim of this kind which has been paid has been paid by republican votes. He did this for the purpose of showing that not one would be paid by a majority vote of this House on the democratic side.

This is with us a matter of principle. We do not care in what State the particular events happened, whether Virginia or Kentucky, or any other State. We only wish to know whether the claim is a just and true one. If your side are disposed to do right we will go with you, discriminating as to the merits of each particular case as it arises. The Virginia case which has been spoken of belongs to a very different class from the one now in hand. That case was a questionable one; its correctness was questioned on the floor of this House. But in this case no question has been raised except the fact that two laws were passed within which it was supposed this case would be embraced, but which did not meet it, because, under one provision the property must be situated within the limits of the military district in rebellion, while this was in a State that was loyal, not in a condition of rebellion; and under the other provision of law it was agreed the party must have resided in a loyal State, while in this case he resided in a State in rebellion while the property was in a loyal State, so that the law did not meet the case. If this man is a loyal man, and if our Army took his property and used it, under the circumstances this case should be one in which we should do justice, and the gentleman from Tennessee well remarked that if there had been any case in which justice has not been done it has been for a class of persons in the South who—if my colleague is correct in his estimate, that not one man in the South could be a loyal man under the circumstances, living in the limits of the rebellion, with his sympathies resting as they did with his own people and State, yet if his heart beat in unison with the old flag and the old Government which had supported him, but he still for a moment gave way but returned again to his first love and never took part in the rebellion, he would be entitled to more sympathy than the men in the North who stood back and did nothing and did not help one way or the other.

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to see this free conference between the members of both sides of this House; a little confidential talk, which may as well go to the country in its true aspect in order that the country may be able to tear off the veil of hypocrisy that has been heretofore concealing the issues between the two parties. Our friend from Tennessee [Mr. THORNBURGH] comes to the front and assures us that the bulk of the claims which are here before Congress and pending before the Departments are the claims of loyal men. He rather surprised me, however, by the further remark that if all which were still pending were to be paid and added to all that have been paid, it would not amount to one-tenth of what was destroyed for the loyal people of the South during the war.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. MCMAHON. I will yield if it does not come out of my time.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Only a moment to explain my meaning. The reason of that is this——

Mr. MCMAHON. I do not hear the gentleman.

Mr. THORNBURGH. The reason that all the claims have not been presented is this: a great many of them are of poor people and are for very small amounts, which did not justify them in employing attorneys to present them.

Mr. MCMAHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Again, I believe it was in 1872 the claims commission was organized and had jurisdiction. In the mean time parties who could have been used as witnesses to establish claims had removed or died and the proof could not then be ascertained so that the claims could be presented.

Mr. MCMAHON. Now, Mr. Chairman, to repeat the remark, I am glad to see the gentleman coming to the front and admitting from whom all these southern claims have come and from whom we are to expect them in the future. Stating the amount which has been paid, he said that all that have been paid and all that ought to be paid to the Union men of the South would not be more than one-tenth of the actual losses of the Union men. And he now bows his head to me in assent to the correctness of my statement of his speech. Therefore we start right and upon a basis understood by each other. I had the pleasure the other day of reading (to discover how much had been paid) the statement of a very distinguished gentleman in the republican party, now Secretary of the Treasury and for many years the head of the Finance Committee of the Senate, the honorable John Sherman. I read from his speech the statement that the republican party had already paid in a spirit of liberality $100,000,000 for these war claims, and that in his judgment it was time to stop. I want to ask the gentlemen on that side, I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. THORNBURGH] particularly, whether he claims now $1,000,000,000 is the amount of property belonging to loyal men in the South that was destroyed by our troops.

Mr. GARFIELD. Do you say $1,000,000,000?

Mr. MCMAHON. Yes, sir; $1,000,000,000. We have paid $100,000,000 already, according to Mr. Sherman, and the gentleman said that is not one-tenth part of the losses. I have Mr. Sherman's statement here. No one can contradict or dispute it, because Mr. Sherman prepared his speech carefully. He went to the State of Ohio for the express purpose of making the key-note speech in the campaign of 1876, not simply for the State of Ohio, but for the whole United States.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. MCMAHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I repeat what I said in order that the gentleman from Ohio may not misunderstand it. There have been, as every one knows, fraudulent and false claims presented——

Mr. MCMAHON. And paid by whom?

Mr. THORNBURGH. And probably paid.

Mr. MCMAHON. Yes, paid. And paid by that side of the House—by the republican party—by Congress and your different departments of the Government.

Mr. THORNBURGH. And paid by you during this and the last Congress.

Mr. MCMAHON. But, my dear sir, we have paid nothing in this Congress, and the speech I referred to was delivered on the 12th August, 1876. It was up to that date the $100,000,000 had been paid. The democratic House did not pay anything of this.

Mr. THORNBURGH. If the gentleman will allow me to answer the question, I will do so.

Mr. MCMAHON. Yes, sir; I want an answer.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I said before, when the gentleman asked the question, and I say now, if all the claims which the loyal men of the South presented had been paid—of course not fraudulent claims, but honest claims, for this House ought to weed out those dishonest claims which have brought reproach on the honest and loyal applicants—if, excluding the fraudulent claims, all the honest claims had been paid, not one-tenth would be paid to the loyal men of the South that ought to be paid on a fair and just account stricken between the United States and the people.

Mr. MCMAHON. Now will the gentleman give me one fraudulent claim that ever passed a democratic House for as much as $5? The gentleman need not go away, I am waiting now for an answer.

Mr. THOMPSON. Let me remind the gentleman of the $375,000 for the southern mail contractors.

Mr. MCMAHON. That is not a part of the hundred millions, and it never became a law.

Mr. THOMPSON. Did it not pass the democratic House?

Mr. MCMAHON. I believe it did at one time.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then I will leave the country to decide whether it is or is not a part of the war claims.

Mr. MCMAHON. And it passed the republican Senate at the same time.

Mr. THOMPSON. Not at the same time. But it passed the democratic House unanimously and enthusiastically, and was on the very point of passing the same democratic House this year.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me say that that is not a war claim and also that it is not a fraudulent claim.

Mr. THOMPSON. I did not say it was a fraudulent claim. I was simply asking the gentleman from Ohio a question. Did it pass the democratic House?

Mr. MCMAHON. What the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers to was a claim arising upon contracts existing prior to the war and for services before the war. It was not what we know as a war claim. It never went in any way before the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. THOMPSON. Let me ask the gentleman if the claim of the William and Mary College ever went to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. MCMAHON. Has this bill passed the House yet?

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish the gentleman to answer my question. Did the bill for the College of William and Mary go to the War Claims Committee?

Mr. MCMAHON. I do not yield to the gentleman further. He has put his question and may sit down. It is not important to what committee it was referred.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish an answer to my question. Did it pass this House?

Mr. MCMAHON. No, sir; but it has been favorably reported from a committee. Has the gentleman any objection to the claim of the College of William and Mary? I am just informed that it passed twice in a republican Congress.

Mr. THOMPSON. That would make it only the worse. But when was that?

Mr. MCMAHON. At any rate it was reported favorably by a republican committee?

Mr. THOMPSON. Then you admit it did not pass a republican House.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] is becoming so wild in his statements that I think I must rise to correct them.

Mr. MANNING. It passed the House during the Forty-second Congress.

Mr. McMAHON. I am informed that it did pass a republican House, as I stated in the beginning.

Mr. KEIFER. It is said that that bill passed a republican House in the Forty-second Congress. I have before me the report in the Congressional Globe, and I find that the bill received in that Congress on a yea-and-nay vote of the House 36 votes in its favor, while there were 127 votes against it and 78 not voting.

Mr. McMAHON. Does the gentleman say the bill did not pass the House in the Forty-second Congress?

Mr. KEIFER. I say it was defeated by a vote of the House. I understand the gentleman appeals to the record. I have it here.

Mr. McMAHON. The gentleman will please sit down for the present. Gentlemen upon that side appear to be, every one of them, upon their feet. I have sent for the record.

Mr. KEIFER. Does the gentleman decline to let the record come in?

Mr. McMAHON. No, sir; the record will be in before the hour is up. I have sent for the Journal. Now I request the gentleman to take his seat. I have declined to yield.

Mr. KEIFER. When the gentleman is in error he ought to be corrected.

Mr. McMAHON. I call the gentleman to order. I desire to proceed, and will furnish the Journal in a few moments.

Mr. KEIFER. I supposed the gentleman wanted to be right; but, as he evidently does not, I take my seat.

Mr. McMAHON. I want to be right, and I propose to have the country right as well; and I will take delight in setting the gentleman right, especially when I remember that the gentleman who has so frequently interrupted me was engaged in the late campaign in Ohio talking his hypocritical talk about the danger of the payment of war claims by the democratic party, and now see him the chief advocate on the floor of this House of a similar class of claims, such as have depleted the Treasury of $100,000,000.

Now, to proceed without further interruption, I am glad to have received the free confession of the republican gentleman from East Tennessee, [Mr. THORNBURGH,] not only that these claims were the claims of loyal people, but that a large portion of those already paid must have been fraudulent claims, because it is the party represented by that side of the House which paid or allowed them, in Congress, or by its heads of Departments, or by its republican judges in the Court of Claims and in the southern claims commission. The republican party when in power drew out the people's money by all imaginable machinery to pay war claims. And yet they come before the country and say that the "rebels" on this side of the House are making a raid on the Treasury for "rebel claims!"

Now, having had the confession of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. THORNBURGH,] I am glad to welcome also the confessions of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HUMPHREY] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] and others that where the claim is from a "loyal" man they are going to vote for it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McMAHON. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire simply to say that the reason why we speak of a claim being a loyal claim is not because we would be unwilling to do anything that would cement this Union firmly forever, but merely as a matter of principle, holding to the principle that damages resulting from wrongful acts should not be paid.

Mr. McMAHON. My friend labors under this great mistake, that while republican members of Congress and republican heads of departments were trying so make somebody believe they were cementing the Union by paying war claims they were only trying to build up a republican party in the South and perhaps to put money in the hands of sundry claim-agents, and made rich the northern "loyal" partners in these innumerable and never-ending claims.

Mr. HUMPHREY. We simply say as a matter of legal right and as a matter of justice that those who went into the rebellion should not receive payment for damages resulting from their wrongful acts; that as a matter of law, principle, and justice they should not be paid. We say that the passage of such a bill as this would be a precedent of that character and would be wrong.

Mr. McMAHON. There is nobody here asking the payment of claims to any except loyal citizens. Nobody in this House is claiming pay for rebel claims. The trouble is that after this lapse of time the proof of loyalty is too easily got; the desire to get a little money is too great a temptation to a large number of persons to bring their claims here, and the ease with which loyalty has been proved in times past to the satisfaction of republican officials is startling.

Mr. THORNBURGH. The proof of loyalty taken ten years ago has not yet been acted upon; it is still lying in your committee-rooms and in the room of the southern claims commission.

Mr. McMAHON. I am sorry to hear that the Union men of the South have not yet been paid for the destruction of their property by Union soldiers. I believe they, or somebody, have been more than paid. I denounce as a base slander upon the Union armies that they destroyed anything like one hundred million dollars' worth of property belonging to Union men. I say it is a base slander upon the officers who led the Army and upon the privates in the field. There may have been occasions where property belonging to Union men was destroyed; but the idea that it ever amounted to $100,000,000 or to the enormous sum stated by our republican friend from Tennessee, of $1,000,000,000, is an idea to be scouted. I say that it was not $10,000,000. I say that the losses of the real Union men of the South, the men who were in fact loyal to the Government, would not reach $10,000,000.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Those are the gentleman's figures, not mine.

Mr. McMAHON. What are my figures?

Mr. THORNBURGH. Those you are now using.

Mr. McMAHON. That the property of Union men destroyed amounted to a hundred million dollars.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I do not know where you got them; you did not get them from me.

Mr. McMAHON. I got them from higher republican authority than even the gentleman; a man high up in his party; a man who was chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and I will read it to the gentleman now.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Will the gentleman tell me what it includes? Does it include the claims of disloyal persons who have entered suit in the Court of Claims for cotton taken and sold and the proceeds covered into the Treasury? Does it include that class of persons who have been paid under the law of 1834, which allowed disloyal persons after they had taken the oath of allegiance to be paid their claims? Or does it include the claims of those who were and remained loyal during the entire war?

Mr. McMAHON. Let me read to the gentleman, and he can make his own comment upon it and draw his own conclusion. I read from the speech of Hon. John Sherman, delivered at Marietta, Ohio, on the 12th of August, 1876. This statement is one which should go into every household in this land, in order that people may know where the blame lies as to the payment of the so called "rebel war claims."

I now read again from Mr. Sherman's speech at Marietta, in August, 1876:

> When the war closed innumerable claims against the United States were made from the lately rebel States, and Congress in the most liberal spirit made provision for the payment of all that by the well-settled rules of civilized war could be properly made against the United States. The officers of the Departments, Supreme Court, the Court of Claims, and the southern claims commission were authorized to adjust and pay different classes of claims, and Congress passed many acts for equitable relief; so that it may with safety be said that more than $100,000,000 was paid after the war was over to citizens of the South for losses caused by the rebellion.

Mr. THORNBURGH. The word "loyal" is not used there at all.

Mr. McMAHON. Do you mean to say that the republican party has paid disloyal men? Is that what Mr. Sherman meant?

Mr. THORNBURGH. I mean to say that we have paid men from the close of the war down who were not loyal.

Mr. McMAHON. Do you mean to say that the Secretary of the Treasury meant to state in that speech that a part of that money was paid to disloyal men by the republican party?

Mr. THORNBURGH. Does not the gentleman know that the law pays men now, and the Supreme Court has held that they should be paid after they have taken the oath of allegiance? Does not the gentleman know that captured property sold by the Government and the proceeds paid into the Treasury has been paid out, millions of it, to men who were not loyal?

Mr. McMAHON. I am thankful to the gentleman for his open confession; but he is in part mistaken. That decision was made comparatively recently, and my friend knows that a great many men did not know that such a decision was going to be made, and never filed their claims in time. The really disloyal men of the South did not file their claims because they did not think they could prove themselves to be loyal by simply taking the amnesty oath—gentlemen around me well know this to be the fact—and the Court of Claims had decided that the taking of the amnesty oath did not entitle them to recover.

Mr. THORNBURGH. The gentleman knows, if he will think for a moment, that claims decided since that decision of the Supreme Court were filed and pending for years before the decision.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I have now before me the Journal. My friend from Ohio a while ago challenged the production of the record when I stated that a republican House had passed the bill for the relief of William and Mary. I read now from the Journal of the House in the Forty-second Congress.

Mr. GOODE. If the gentleman will allow me one moment, I have just understood that the statement has been made that the bill for the relief of the College of William and Mary did not pass in that Congress. I have here the record showing that it did pass by a vote of 111 to 75.

Mr. McMAHON. I have the Journal of the House on the same subject; and I call attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the proceedings on page 412 of the House Journal for the third session of the Forty-second Congress:

> Mr. Storm on leave introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3073) for the relief of the College of William and Mary, in Virginia; which was read a first and second time.
> Pending the question on its engrossment,
> Mr. Storm demanded the previous question, which was seconded.
> The question was then put, Shall the main question be now put?
> And it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 111, nays 82.

Then, after other proceedings which I need not read, the vote was taken by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill and it was passed by a vote of 111 to 75.

Mr. KEIFER. What is the date of that?

Mr. McMAHON. You are getting a little particular about dates, are you? The gentleman was very sure a while ago. [Laughter.] It is February 17, 1873. I will take the liberty of incorporating as a part of my remarks the full vote on the passage of the bill to show that a large number of republicans either voted for the bill or refrained from voting against it:

Now the gentleman, who is a member of the Committee on War Claims, ought to have been a little better posted than to have made so positive a denial of my statement; and my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. THOMPSON,] who has only made his appearance in Congress at this session, ought not to have been so certain about what the record would show and would not show.

Mr. THOMPSON. "The gentleman from Pennsylvania" did not refer to the record at all, for the very satisfactory reason that he knew nothing about it, and very safely he generally confines his remarks to what he knows something about.

Mr. McMAHON. Now as to the result of this discussion so far, we have the admission that the property of Union men destroyed in the South amounts to $1,000,000,000; that only $100,000,000 has been paid, and that they want the other $900,000,000 paid at an early day. We have also the confession of gentlemen on the other side that when a claimant is proved to be "loyal" they propose to vote for the claim. And if the $900,000,000 is shown to be held by "loyal" men, they propose to pay it all.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman should also state that it is further conceded to be legitimate to make a second use of John Sherman's speech.

A MEMBER. A third. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMAHON. This is only the second time; but I do not expect to stop at this. It is too good a document not to be refered to frequently. I want this statement of John Sherman's to go on record as often as possible, because he knew more about this question than almost any man on the other side of the House. He has been in Congress ever since some of us were small boys. He was for a long time a member of the Ways and Means Committee in the House and also of the Finance Committee in the Senate. He knew what was being done and knew what he was printing when he printed the speech at Marietta.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] whether he did not in the Forty-second Congress vote for the passage of the bill for the relief of William and Mary College.

Mr. DUNNELL. I am unable to answer; I presume I did. [Laughter.] I will say to the gentleman that I have not voted against it in this Congress.

Mr. GOODE. I hope the gentleman will vote for it again.

Mr McMAHON. The amount asked for William and Mary College is a small matter compared with the $900,000,000, the payment of which the other side expect to advocate and press when they get full power. But while they are in the minority how pious they are!

> The Devil was sick, the Devil a monk would be;
> The Devil was well, the Devil a monk was he.

[Laughter.] So it will be with gentlemen on that side. Who ever heard complaint of the payment of war claims as a matter of political capital against any political party of this country until the republican party became a minority in this House? It then got down on its knees and began to be virtuously indignant. It had paid while in power $100,000,000 of the people's money for war claims, not all to loyal men either, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. THORNBURGH] admits. He admits that they paid fraudulent claims to the amount of $80,000,000 or $90,000,000 probably.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Where do you get that?

Mr. McMAHON. From your statement.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I made no such statement.

Mr. McMAHON. I say that of the $100,000,000 already paid probably not $20,000,000 (if you except the money paid under the captured and abandoned property act) was honestly paid.

Mr. THORNBURGH. How much has been paid after deducting payments under the captured and abandoned property act?

Mr. McMAHON. I ask the gentleman the same question.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Well, I will tell you. Decidedly the larger bulk of the claims that have been paid have been paid under that and other acts for captured and abandoned property, and for cotton which was sold, the proceeds having been paid into the Treasury.

Mr. McMAHON. If the gentleman will look at the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he incorporates certain other letters and makes reports to Congress, he will find that under the captured and abandoned property act a very limited portion of the $100,000,000—a very limited sum indeed—was paid. As I understand it, there are $13,000,000 not yet paid out and the whole fund did not exceed $30,000,000.

Mr. THORNBURGH rose.

Mr. McMAHON. You cannot cover it up in that way.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Will the gentleman tell me how much was paid for cotton seized and sold in that form?

Mr. McMAHON. I think about fifteen or sixteen million dollars—not to exceed that. Now, what has become of the balance? What has become of the balance of the $100,000,000? Suppose that to be included, as I suppose it was. Why, you could not persuade me, you cannot persuade your friends on that side of the House, you cannot persuade any one sitting on this side of the House, that $10,000,000 will not cover the losses arising from supplies taken or property destroyed of Union men in the South by Union soldiers during the war. We all know as a matter of fact of current history in the war of the late Confederate States the poor men in East Tennessee, in the mountain districts of that and other States, were the men loyal to the Union, and not the great property-holders. It was not the fact. We all know that it was the rich man's war; inaugurated, as he thought, for the protection of his property. The poor man was not always a "loyal" man, but a loyal man was nearly always a poor man. I challenge denial of this fact.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad this discussion has been had. We are all getting right before the country. We are taking our proper positions. We have good republican authority that there remains to be paid $900,000,000 of claims of "loyal men." And our republican friends will join with our southern friends, as they are now joined upon this bill, in voting for and advocating every bill for a "loyal" man's relief. The so-called "rebel claims" have taken their proper shape and name. They are the claims of "loyal" men, whose loyalty is generally tested by the ticket they vote or profess to vote. The danger to the country is not from the claims of "rebels," but the claims of "loyal" men. The raid on the Treasury is to be made, as in times past, with the assistance of our republican friends. And the danger to the country is not in keeping the democratic party in power, but in restoring a party which has paid so much already—whose representatives openly avow that they intend to pay all "loyal" claims.

Mr. CABELL. How much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has an hour.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to reply to the strictures of the gentleman on the other side.

Mr. CABELL. How long does the gentleman want?

Mr. KEIFER. I think about fifteen minutes.

Mr. CABELL. I will conclude in less than fifteen minutes, and the gentleman can follow me.

Mr. KEIFER. I should like to follow the gentleman from Ohio, as he referred to me.

Mr. CABELL. I will yield directly to the gentleman.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I desire before sitting down to put myself on record on this and similar bills. I do not know that I stated distinctly what I intended to do; but I purpose to vote against this and all bills of a like character. After the republican party has been in undisputed power for ten years, during which time it paid every kind of southern war claim that made any decent showing, and many that did not, I am compelled to believe that a claim that was not paid by them during that time is wanting in some of the elements of a proper claim. Either it was dishonest, or the man's loyalty was not capable of proof, or some valid objection intervened. When they paid so many objectionable claims, one that they did not pay must have been bad indeed. I can never vote, of course, to pay the claims of "disloyal" men. Indeed their claims are never urged except under cover of proof of "loyalty." And as to the claims of "loyal men," it is time the Government was having a rest. Our patience has been exhausted on that subject. I shall vote against all "claims," whether for "loyal" or "disloyal" men.

Mr. DUNNELL. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. KEIFER. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. CABELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KEIFER. I am gratified the gentleman from Ohio finally stated the point to his whole speech. We will understand that he stated the reason why he declines to vote for this bill to pay the estate of an old man who was loyal, who lived, it is true, in a confederate State—that the reason why he will not vote to pay this claim is because the republican party will not vote to pay disloyal men their claims when they come here. That is the whole point and pith of it.

Mr. McMAHON. One moment.

Mr. KEIFER. I will not submit to any interruption. If the gentleman will take his seat, as he ordered me to do, I will answer the balance of his speech.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I will not submit to any misrepresentation by the gentleman.

Mr. KEIFER. I am not to be interrupted. I wish the Chair to protect me in my right to the floor.

Mr. McMAHON. I will not permit the gentleman to misrepresent me.

Mr. KEIFER. I appeal to the Chairman for order. I decline to let the gentleman interrupt me. I hold in my hand the record to show that the Forty-second Congress voted down a bill giving to the William and Mary College $65,000—that in December, 1872, the Forty-second Congress voted down that proposition.

Mr. McMAHON rose.

Mr. KEIFER. I decline to be interrupted. I state the record exactly right.

Mr. McMAHON. I allowed the gentleman to interrupt me.

Mr. KEIFER. I cannot consent to allow the gentleman to interrupt me after treating me with such gross discourtesy, ordering me to take my seat.

Mr. McMAHON. I allowed the gentleman to speak in my time.

Mr. KEIFER. I hardly expect him to interrupt me.

Mr. McMAHON. I allowed the gentleman to interrupt me half a dozen times.

Mr. KEIFER. When the gentleman interrupted me I was about to say——

Mr. McMAHON. When the gentleman misrepresents me as he does——

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman had a whole hour, and I do not now yield to him.

Mr. McMAHON. The gentleman misrepresents me.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not misrepresent the gentleman.

Mr. McMAHON. You do.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman says in the last campaign I undertook to make capital out of the payments of this sort of claims. I never did. Everywhere and always I contended that the Government ought to be just to all those men who stood by it during the war, whether they were from the South or the North. And when the gentleman makes that statement it proceeds from a spirit that lies deep in his own bosom, the spirit of demagogery. He merely imagined we would do it.

Let me say further that I have heard that speech about John Sherman down at Marietta twice since I have been on the floor, and I do not know but it was repeated twice here to-day. The gentleman is utterly ignorant of the law under which that $100,000,000 spoken of by Mr. Sherman was paid. After the pardon was granted by the general proclamation of Andrew Johnson, it was held by the Supreme Court of the United States that that pardon remitted all persons who had property taken from them in the South, under the abandoned-and-captured-property-act, however disloyal, to receive from the Treasury of the United States the moneys derived from the sale of captured and abandoned property. And in that way many millions of dollars were paid, and rightfully paid, because I submit the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States was right.

Now, the gentleman has got that summed up here and included in that statement, and undertakes to throw it in the face of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. THORNBURGH] when he rises to speak for his loyal constituents and on behalf of them on this measure. I am sorry the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] has left the Hall and gone off to correct the record while I am attempting to reply to him.

Let me say further that I do not intend to submit here to be driven from my line of duty by any such taunts as have been thrown out by my colleague who has just left the Hall, or my colleague who spoke a few minutes ago, [Mr. FINLEY.] He, too, gave as a reason why he did not dare to do his duty here as a member of the House, that the republican party had voted to pay loyal claims in the past and was now trying to make capital out of war claims by a democratic House. He contented himself with saying—for that was the logic of his whole speech—that he was opposed for that reason to all these measures and these bills. I hope, sir, this Congress will not be moved by any such low and disgraceful motive, either on the one side or the other.

I did not myself believe that we should undertake to pay damages occasioned by the war, such as are classified under the general head of ravages of war by either army. I challenge the consistency of my colleagues from Ohio, [Mr. McMAHON and Mr. FINLEY.] In vain have I listened to hear from them the announcement of some principle of law for excluding loyal men's claims for supplies furnished to the United States during the war. They each assail the republican party for having paid in past years claims of loyal men. No political sin of that kind lies at their door. The magnanimity of many southern men who were against the Union, and some of whom fought valiantly in the confederate army, contrasts favorably with them. Whatever may be said of the reconciliation of southern men in giving in their adhesion to the Union in good faith, nothing can be said for some northern democrats. [Applause.]

I know that many of these questions were presented here in 1872 before a commission that was appointed partly by the United States and partly by Great Britain—appointed under what was called the Washington treaty, by the twelfth article of which the United States agreed to pay all legal claims of Her Britantic Majesty's subjects growing out of the war. Count Louis Corti, of Italy, presided over that commission; Judge James S. Frazer, of Indiana, formerly a justice of the supreme court of that State, was one of the members of that commission; and the Right Hon. Russell Gurney, of Her Britannic Majesty's privy council, I believe, represented Great Britain. That commission unanimously found, when there were claims presented on behalf of subjects of Great Britain before it for losses of property during the late war, that there was no legal claim under the rules of international law against the United States for any losses by the war that came from the ordinary devastation or ravages of war. Before that commission the liability of the United States to pay all legal claims was admitted. No question of loyalty was involved. And therefore we stand upon that rule. I stand on it for other reasons. In effect it has been decided frequently by our own Supreme Court, and the rules of international law are well settled in regard to it. But when it comes to a question of taking a loyal man's property and the United States getting the benefit of it, appropriating it, using it for the purposes of the Government in the prosecution of the war and in putting down the rebellion, I see no reason why the United States should not pay a loyal man without reference to where he lives or where his property was.

Mr. GOODE. Will the gentleman allow me one moment to make a statement?

Mr. KEIFER. Let me complete what I am saying, and then I will yield to the gentleman with pleasure. I am informed now that after the vote was taken in December, 1872, on the passage of the bill in favor of the College of William and Mary, when the bill was voted down by the exact vote I stated a few moments ago—yeas 36, nays 127, not voting 78—a motion was made to reconsider, and that was laid on the table. But subsequently to that time, near the close of that session, a new bill was introduced which did pass. To that extent I was mistaken. But the bill was voted down by the exact vote I stated in December, 1872, and another bill was passed subsequently.

Mr. GOODE. It passed on February 23, 1873, by a vote of 111 to 75. I think it due to the southern people to say that, so far as my information extends, and I have given some examination to the subject, ninety-nine out of one hundred of these claims have been brought by men who protested their loyalty to the Union throughout the whole war. I want to say further that the great body of the southern people, and I mean the confederate people, did not expect that the losses incurred by individuals as incident to the war would ever be reimbursed to them. They staked their all on the issue of the struggle; they lost, and they accept the loss as the fate of war.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the gentleman believe that those protestations are true?

Mr. KEIFER. Allow me one moment.

Mr. CABELL. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. McMAHON.]

Mr. McMAHON. I only take the three minutes for the purpose of putting myself right on the record as against the misrepresentation of my colleague from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER,] who did not show on this occasion the courtesy I showed to him in the first instance. I gave him the opportunity to interrupt me and ask me questions until he undertook to make an argument about the Journal, for which I had sent, and then I said that he ought to stop and sit down, when he had persistently refused to wait for the record. If he thinks that he can get even with argument by misrepresenting what I stated in the hearing of every gentleman here, he makes a mistake that is common with a class of individuals. I never said that I was in favor of not paying these claims because the claims of disloyal men were not to be paid.

Mr. KEIFER. That was the logic of your argument.

Mr. MCMAHON. Nothing but the gentleman's distempered imagination could have given what I said that bearing, and I can scarcely believe that the gentleman drew the conclusion by any honest influence of logic. I presume he desired to draw that conclusion that he might break the force of what I had said. I am not in favor of paying any loyal or disloyal claim, and I have never voted to pay any loyal or disloyal claim. Even in the case of William and Mary College, which is a sort of impersonal corporation, I said some months ago to an ardent friend of that institution that I could not vote for that bill because it would be used as an entering wedge for the claims standing behind it. But it is not presented here for payment as a claim. The honorable gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LORING] put it on the distinct ground that it was a benevolence to an institution of learning. The gentleman's endeavors to break the force of what has been said by any want of courtesy or improper representation of my views cannot but react against himself, and is no offset to the argument.

Mr. KEIFER. Allow me one word. I wish to say, in order that it may go upon the record, that all the discourtesy between my colleague and myself originated in his own discourtesy to me.

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Speaker, I have been a member, since the commencement of the Forty-fourth Congress, of the Committee on War Claims, and it has always been a subject of regret to me that whenever a bill is reported from that committee it should be bitterly opposed on the floor of the House by gentlemen who have inquired into neither the justice nor the merits of the claim.

What has the discussion which has been carried on here to-day to do with the claim here presented for the consideration of the House? Has anything been said about the justice or injustice of this claim? Is this claim, which is a just and honest one, to be rejected because forsooth there are men, bad men, who have presented unjustifiable claims against the Government? The right way for the House to do is to consider whether the claim before it is a just and honest claim, to consider, not whether it comes from the north or south side of the Potomac, but to consider whether it is a just claim, and whether it comes within the purview of the law. When you have decided that, you have decided the whole question. Gentlemen do injustice to themselves, injustice to the claimants; ay, injustice to the country when they come forward and vote upon questions of this kind without knowing the facts in the case, without knowing whether or not a man is legally entitled to what he claims, or whether his claim is a just or an unjust one.

When I went upon the Committee on War Claims I found the law to be that no man should be paid a claim arising during the war unless he could prove his loyalty, and there are gentlemen upon this floor who will bear me out in saying that as an individual member of the Committee on War Claims, whenever that question was brought up I insisted that the claimant should prove his loyalty beyond a doubt. I know how loyal to the Government of the United States most of these men were, and knowing that, and with the law staring me in the face, I required that each claimant should prove it, and when he proved it I was in favor of paying his just claim.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee rose informally; and Mr. MAISH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message was received from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 847) for the relief of Susan Robb;

A bill (H. R. No. 1305) for the relief of the minor heirs of John H. Evans, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 1887) to extend the provisions of section 3297 of the Revised Statutes to other institutions of learning;

A bill (H. R. No. 1639) making an appropriation for pier-lights at the entrance of the jetties in the South Pass of the Mississippi River;

A bill (H. R. No. 3822) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 3859) for the relief of Silas M. Morton, postmaster at Bristol, Connecticut;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 78) granting the use of artillery, tents, &c., at the national soldiers and sailors' reunion to be held at Marietta, Ohio; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 158) for the erection of a monument over the grave of Thomas Jefferson.

RICHARD HEATER.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session and the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2139) making appropriations for the payment to Richard Heater, executor of John Heater, deceased, late of Loudoun County, Virginia, of the sum therein named, for value of stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army.

Mr. CABELL. When I was interrupted I was saying that the law required a man to prove his loyalty, and I always insisted that every one of these claimants should prove his loyalty. But when he came with that proof which was the fulfillment of the law itself, I was ready to favor his claim and vote him that which was just and was proper. It has booted little with me whether the man came from the North or came from the South; if he brought himself within the purview of the law I was ready to give him his rights under the law. Are not gentlemen here ready to do that? Are you not ready to look above party and beyond section, and to do what is right and what is just between man and man, and between the Government and the citizen?

How does this case stand? A man in the State of Virginia sustained losses during the war. He furnished to the Government of the United States that which it needed to feed its armies; furnished horses to move its artillery. He now comes here and asks this House to give him pay for his property, because he comes within the requirements of the law, because he is a loyal man, notwithstanding he was, as the term goes, living in a rebellious section and surrounded by disloyal citizens.

It is true that the State of Virginia was within the confederate lines. It is true that the great mass of her citizens rallied around, not only the State flag, but the confederate flag. It is true that the truest, the noblest, and the best of her citizens followed bold Robert E. Lee and his gallant captains to the forefront of battle. But it is none the less true that there were men in the State of Virginia who never forgot their devotion to the Union and their attachment to the Government of their fathers. It was a notorious fact that in the county of Loudoun, so well represented here by my distinguished colleague, [Mr. HUNTON,] there were many Union men. We in the South and of the southern army knew it and recognized it. We bitterly regretted it at the time. We could have spotted many of them and well understood it. It is not surprising, therefore, that there should be those who can bring forward proof of loyalty when they present their claims here, and who deserve to be paid under the laws of the land.

I ask, gentlemen, in the consideration of this question, to consider the facts and to do what is just under the law, to do what is right. Do not mix this claim up with what you are pleased to term "rebel claims." Do not confound it with other cases. But remember that you are sitting here as judges, and take this case and try it fairly. In the first place ascertain whether it is right, and if it is right and has been properly proved, then render to the man what is his due.

You have been told by the gentleman on the other side, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] who reported this bill, that you should render to the estate of this man—for it appears that the man himself is dead—that which is due to it. It is just and right and honest that you should do so.

This bill should not be classed with the great mass of claims which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. THORNBURGH] has spoken of as coming from the South. I do not believe that there are any thousand millions or hundred millions of dollars of claims against this Government from Union citizens coming from the South. It is a mistake; the claims from the South are neither so large nor numerous as claimed.

My colleague [Mr. HUNTON] has well said that the great bulk, the great mass of the southern people went into the war and went into it willingly. If they did not go into it willingly, they at least yielded their assent to it, and went in honestly and determined to win if they could. When they did go in they crossed the river, and as far as they could burned their bridges behind them.

They never expected to come here to Congress and ask to be paid for their losses—losses which ensued from the ravages of war. They asked nothing of the kind then, and they do not ask it now. Men, however, have asked that, when the Government came and took their property and used it for Government purposes, the Government should pay for it. When the Government takes the property of a man and uses it, has the benefit of it, and at the time saves the expenditure of that much money for provisions and stores and supplies for its Army, why should it not pay for it?

The Committee of the Whole rose informally, and Mr. BANNING took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a joint resolution of the following title:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 152) to enable the joint commission to carry into effect the act of Congress to provide for the completion of the Washington Monument.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 753) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico; and

A bill (S. No. 1044) granting a site for a dry-dock in the city of Baltimore upon certain conditions.

RICHARD HEATER.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session and the consideration of the bill for the payment of Richard Heater.

Mr. CABELL. I was asking that when the Government got supplies that it used for its own purposes why should it not pay for them? Especially why should it not pay those who were loyal to this Government and entitled under the law to claim? A republican Congress passed that law and put it upon the statute-book, and stated to the country that loyal men should be paid for the property taken and used by the Government.

Here is an instance in which the Government took the property of a citizen and used it. No man gives a reason why it should not be paid for. I know my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] has said that claims of this character look as if they had fraud in them. That is an easy cry to raise against any claim. But the claim now under consideration has been examined by a committee as jealous of the rights of this Government and of the good name of this House as is that gentleman or any other gentleman upon this floor. This claim is not to be classed with ordinary claims which we hear so often denounced as rebel claims.

There is a great deal said about these rebel claims. You will in fact, however, rarely find a bill referred to any of your committees or brought before this House that can be truly termed a rebel claim. Now, in answer to what the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] said awhile ago about our presenting these southern claims, I will ask him why he presents the claim of any citizen from his State with whom he differs in opinion?

Men on this side of the House, like those on the other side, present the claims put into their hands by their constituents. It is the right of the constituent to ask and the duty of the Representative to present his application to Congress. The mere fact that we present such applications, if they are presented at all, is no reason why we should either be in favor of them or that we should vote for them or give them countenance or support, unless we are satisfied of their justice upon proper investigation.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the gentleman allow me a question? Here is a large mass of claims which have become of national and international celebrity on account of their admitted frauds. Can gentlemen from the South as a body justify themselves in introducing this large mass of claims which are characterized by fraud as a whole, and known and admitted to be so by gentlemen now upon the floor? Does the gentleman think, would he intimate, that the mass of Representatives from the North are here presenting claims which they know and understand to be, almost the whole of them, fraudulent in their character, to be sustained if at all by perjury?

Mr. CABELL. Will the gentleman stop now? His question is one of considerable length. [Laughter.]

Mr BLAIR. But I think it is a question which is a pertinent answer to the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. CABELL. I will give my answer to the question which the gentleman has asked, though it is so fine-spun and long-drawn out that I do not know whether I can catch up with it. The gentleman asks why southern members as a body will give countenance to fraudulent claims presented here. Who says there are fraudulent claims presented from the South? That is the ipse dixit of such gentlemen as himself. Who will get up here and make such an assertion after having investigated these claims, knowing whence they come and what they are?

Mr. BLAIR. The gentleman's reply is accompanied with unnecessary warmth.

Mr. CABELL. I beg pardon. When the gentleman gets up and talks about our presenting fraudulent claims he should know and understand that there are no gentlemen here from the South who would present knowingly any fraudulent claim against the Government.

Mr. BLAIR. The gentleman will hear me, I presume. My remark in regard to the character of these claims was based upon the spontaneous admission of several gentlemen on the other side made in my hearing, and characterizing these claims in the manner I have described. I asked the question whether gentlemen had confidence in the protestations of loyalty accompanying these claims, and half a dozen gentlemen on the other side of the House spontaneously answered "no." Then I put the question, "Why, then, as a section, do you propose these claims?"

Mr. CABELL. Sir, I deny that "as a section" we have presented these claims; much more do I deny that we have presented any fraudulent claims. I spurn the idea that a southern Representative would come here either presenting or upholding in the slightest degree any fraudulent claim. We are a poor people. We have been bereft of our property and despoiled of our rights. We have nothing left to us save the good name which our fathers gave us; but by the help of an overruling God we hope and expect to maintain that. We expect to keep our high honor and character untarnished. Though we may not be able to vie with gentlemen of the richer section in wealth, still we will not come here and ask the Government for that which we ought not to have.

When a claim is brought here and put into the hands of a Representative, he, as every just man would do, should present it; for before it can be paid it must undergo the scrutiny of a committee, the scrutiny of the Committee of the Whole, and the scrutiny of the House. Every man who presents a claim, every Representative who fathers it must know and understand that if there is anything wrong in the claim the fraud will be uncovered in all its nakedness.

Mr. BLAIR. Now if the gentleman will allow me just a moment——

Mr. CABELL. I will if you do not ask me quite so long a question as before.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not wish to ask a question now. I wish to say that no gentleman in this House or this country would be less ready than I am to say a word derogatory to the honor of southern gentlemen on this floor or their constituencies as a whole. I have admired the bravery with which gentlemen who fought for the confederacy illuminated the annals of the human race; I have admired it as much as any other man; but it has seemed to me strange that gentlemen as a mass representing that section should come here and present these claims year after year when they are so generally understood to be fraudulent in their character, so that they cannot be allowed except in violation of the laws of the country. Although the gentleman might feel justified in presenting any bill sent to him by a resident in his own locality, I do not think that if the proper effort was made by Representatives to discourage the presentation of such claims they would be presented here session after session to be a stumbling-block, a by-word, a hissing, and a source of contention between the sections of our country.

Mr. CABELL. Why, the gentleman is worse than he was before. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAIR. Then I shall despair of making myself any better, and I will make no more explanations.

Mr. CABELL. But, the gentleman, when he talks about these southern claims, forgets that the vast majority of these "rebel claims," as you call them, that have been allowed were allowed by republican Congresses. More than that, I will say that the War Claims Committee of the Forty-third Congress allowed more claims of this description than the same committee in the Forty-fourth Congress.

Mr. BLAIR. Both committees and both Congresses were undoubtedly imposed upon.

Mr. CABELL. From your stand-point, they were imposed upon. When any man presents a claim of this kind here, you think that as a matter of necessity it must be a wrong one.

Mr. BLAIR. By no means; I make no such assumption. But the gentleman speaks of the allowance and payment of fraudulent claims by republican Congresses.

Mr. CABELL. I said nothing about the payment of fraudulent claims by republican Congresses.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I misunderstood the gentleman essentially.

Mr. CABELL. I do not know whether the claims were fraudulent or not, but I said that the vast bulk of the southern claims that have been paid since the war have been paid under the direction and by virtue of laws passed by republican Congresses. And more than that, a considerable amount was paid through your claims commission and through your Court of Claims tribunals, made up in whole, and not in part, of republican members.

And it is a strange thing here to me to-day, it is a strange spectacle exhibited in this country now, that gentlemen on the other side should be talking to us about these rebel claims. If we come to present a claim for one of these men who were their pets in time of war, if we come here and present a claim for a man who was loyal to the United States Government during the war, you cry out, "here is a rebel claim," and the strangest part of all this business is that the South is continually put in a false position, no matter which horn of the dilemma she takes.

The law provides that no man but one who was loyal during the war shall be paid. That is your law, and it is the law by which we are all guided. It is the law passed by a republican Congress. Ninety-nine out of every hundred of all claims presented to Congress from the South come from men who were loyal or claimed to be loyal men during the war. Those men who were of no avail, of no assistance to the South, who were burdens upon us in our midst, if I may so state it, during the war, those men come here and ask you, their patrons and friends, to pay their claims, and you turn your backs upon them and say, "We will not pay you; we will not pay rebel claims." You made us endure the disadvantage of those loyalists during the war, and now when they come here after you have given them aid and comfort and held them up against us during the war, and ask you to pay their claims, when they come here and ask you to compensate them for losses suffered by your own troops, you say "Oh, no, we will not pay rebel claims." The South had the disadvantage of them during the war and now you wish still further to impose difficulties upon us by charging their claims to us as rebel claims. They were your people, your loyalists in time of war, you aided them, you encouraged them, you called them your people and you said you would pay them as loyal men. Now as good and true men you should stand up to your promises and the law you made to pay those men you thus aided and encouraged.

But instead, when they come here and present their claims, gentlemen turn around and attempt to call the demands of these loyalists rebel war claims. Rebel claims indeed! But few rebels have brought their claims here, and fewer still, I take it, have been paid. Some poor fellow may have slipped in and got something here and there; but the vast number of those who have been paid have been proved southern loyalists, and it does not lie in your mouths to turn around to this side of the House and attempt to put them upon the South and upon her people as rebels and undertake to say that the South must suffer contumely and reproach because of the presentation of the claims your own people have presented. Loyal men have presented all or nearly all of these southern claims, and it does not become you gentlemen of the opposition now to talk about rebel claims. Take your own responsibilities, gentlemen.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, my apology for troubling the committee at this time is that I am a member of the Committee on War Claims, who reported this bill. It is proper that this and similar measures should provoke discussion and reveal a diversity of opinion. These are important questions, and they involve important legal and practical principles.

Probably there are but few subjects upon which the people look with more interest than the payment of these war claims, and there is no discussion which will attract more attention. I am not, therefore, surprised that gentlemen differ widely in their views on this interesting subject; but I am surprised and amazed to hear some of the reasons assigned for opposition to the best of these claims. As an American citizen I feel humiliated by the declarations of some gentlemen on this floor on the other side of the Hall that they will oppose all claims because the republican party would seek to make political capital out of their acts. These declarations are not the result of temporary excitement, but the cool, sober announcement of settled conviction, and are now part of the country's history. A claim may be honest, may be made by a loyal man, and from its nature may be of the highest equity, but these are all to be disregarded and the rights of the citizen, the honor of the nation, and the duty of the Representative to be ignored, not because it is not meritorious and just, but because somebody might laugh at him or the republican party seek to turn it to his political detriment. Strange that any gentleman could be frightened from the discharge of his official duties because demagogues might ridicule his conduct. I have heard illogical reasons given to excuse official misconduct, but I never heard so weak a reason to excuse an act of such grave import and solemn duty.

When the time comes that the fear of our political enemies will control our official action, and that fear boldly confessed as the reason, our free institutions will be imperiled and the national honor stabbed in the house of its friends. If an unpatriotic prejudice exists on any subject among the people, let us not bow to its mandate and intensify its bitterness, but rather seek to correct its authors and remedy its wrong. I trust, sir, that while I retain a seat in this body no sentiment of either fear or prejudice will influence my action on any subject, but while maintaining my personal manhood I will honorably and fearlessly meet my official duty as I understand it.

I suppose I will not be charged with undue partiality toward southern war claims. I am not partial to them on general principles; but while this is true I entertain on the other hand no narrow prejudice against them. No claim can be favorably considered unless it appear clearly that the claimant is loyal and continued loyal throughout the war. This, I desire, should be understood: the question of loyalty meets every claimant on the threshold, and if a reasonable doubt clouds his loyalty he cannot enter the tribunal to demand compensation. The law demands of him clear and satisfactory proof of loyalty; but when this is shown the doors of justice open and he may enter. Toward such a man I have no prejudice, no matter from what State he hails. Indeed I feel kindly toward him if he be a southern man.

It required no effort for a citizen of Pennsylvania or New York to be loyal when all the traditions of the State, the sentiment of the people, and the teaching of his childhood like a rushing torrent swept him into the loyal ranks; but the loyal man in a seceded State occupied a very different position. He stood alone. Treason and rebellion held high carnival. State rights and local prejudices urged him strongly to desert his duty; but he stood firmly by his flag through evil report and good report, in defeat not less than in victory. Thus he stood, as stated by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. CABELL,] when he might have been spotted. May I not intimate that scores of such men were spotted for the crime of being loyal, and are such men in some sections not spotted yet?

Mr. HUNTON. I will ask the gentleman to name a case.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not able to do it.

Mr. HUNTON. Then do not make the charge.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Will my colleague allow me to answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from Virginia wants to be told of instances where loyal southern men were arrested, imprisoned, and starved to death, I can appeal to the records of your prisons and to the graves of southern Union men in Richmond and elsewhere. They will tell their sad, sad story. If the gentleman from Virginia, who is my peer and I his upon this floor, wants instances where Union men from the valley of Virginia, from Eastern Tennessee, and elsewhere were captured, imprisoned, and, if not murdered, were gradually starved to death, I can give them to him. I speak only whereof I can bear witness. In the summer of 1863, when the passions of the war were fiercest, when Lee's army invaded Pennsylvania, there were in a room in Libby prison loyal Union men from the valley of Virginia and from Tennessee and from other portions of the South and some soldiers as prisoners, men who had no active voice in Washington to interfere with the Federal Government by retaliatory measures for their protection. Day after day they died from starvation in the clutch of famine, and without ceremony were carried from that prison and covered in some obscure and, possibly, unmarked graves. There they lie, many of them, I believe to this day. I would I could draw the veil of oblivion over these scenes—and I do not speak of them now in a spirit of taunt or with an air of triumph. I speak of them because the gentleman has given the taunt to us and said "name them."

Ah, sir, in those days, those dreary summer days of 1863, when Lee's army had invaded Pennsylvania or was in the valleys of Virginia, these men to whom I have referred were not supplied with the ordinary rations necessary to sustain life. This became known to their fellow-prisoners, to us soldiers of the Union Army captured in honorable warfare, and in a different part of the building. Through those long summer days occasional intercourse was had with these suffering men who were occupants of what was known as the "middle-room," through apertures in the floor. They appealed for help. Communications were addressed to the authorities in their behalf stating their condition. Relief did not come, and for weeks, day after day, some of our Union soldier prisoners would divide their scanty rations with them; and at the usual hour of the day for rations as you would drop to the floor, put your eye to the aperture to observe these famishing men, you could see upturned, anxious faces, glaring eyes, slender bodies, upreached arms with their extended skinny fingers. It was horrible. As you would drop the morsel they would jostle each other for it as starving men. Such were instances of cruelty, suffering, neglect, if you please to call it; I call it criminal and wicked. Other instances I could speak of. Oh, sir, they were cruel, black spots in the conduct of the war by the confederacy. I can do justice to those, if necessary, who should be relieved from a share of the responsibility for these cruel practices. I have named instances of what I believe to be inhumanity to Union prisoners, because of what I regard was the taunt to do so. I can multiply them if required.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to reply for a moment to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WHITE.]

Mr. THOMPSON. I will yield to the gentleman if it will not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] retaining the floor myself.

Mr. FORT. I submit that this debate is not upon the pending bill.

Mr. HUNTON. I am aware of that; but I desire to say a few words in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FORT. I do not wish to cut off the gentleman from Virginia; but I submit that after he concludes, this debate ought to stop.

Mr. HUNTON. I appeal to both sides of the House to bear me out in the declaration that I have not obtruded anything into this debate to rankle the feelings growing out of the late sectional strife. As long as I have been a member on this floor I call gentlemen to witness that no word has fallen from my lips calculated to stir up the bad feelings engendered by that strife, nor have I given the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] to-day the least excuse for the picture that he has drawn from his own imagination.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Did he not ask me to name cases?

Mr. HUNTON. I decline to be interrupted. I did not interrupt the gentleman, and I do not want to be interrupted myself.

When the gentleman to whose courtesy I am entitled to the floor was traveling out of the legitimate line of debate upon this question to throw an imputation upon the district which I represent and upon the confederate army, of which I was an humble member, I asked him to name the cases to which he referred, and that was the pretext for the remarks which fell from the other member from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WHITE,] and I say here, without fear of contradiction, that the picture drawn by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to-day was a picture of his imagination. He has told us that he could prove these things if the witnesses were here; but I venture to say that his witnesses will never be here.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I stated what I know.

Mr. HUNTON. I do not yield to the gentleman and do not mean to be interrupted.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I stated what I know.

Mr. HUNTON. I state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have the floor now and I do not mean to yield it. If Union prisoners suffered during the war in confederate prisons, the fault lies at the door of the Federal Government, because I know, sir, that the prisoners we had in our prisons had the same rations dealt out to them in their prisons that were dealt out to the confederate soldiers who were at the front, in the field, and if food and medicine and provisions of every kind were scarce it was by the action of the Federal authorities, and they could not be obtained to give either to the soldiers in the field or to the prisoners in the prisons.

A MEMBER. How about the difficulty of exchange?

Mr. HUNTON. I am coming to that. We know, and the gentleman knew when he made the remark, that we had on hand a number of prisoners, and that we sought by every means, by every concession that an honorable belligerent could make, to bring about an exchange of prisoners of the Union Army for a like number of confederates who were held by the Federal Government. He knows and the history of the country proves that these efforts were made time and again to release these Union soldiers from our prisons in exchange for a like number of confederate prisoners on the other side, and those efforts, constantly and persistently made, were met by a refusal on the other side under the pretext or declaration that it would be prolonging the war if they released the confederate soldiers who were imprisoned in exchange for the Union prisoners that we held.

If they suffered in prison it was not our fault, because we did the very best we could for them, but it was the fault of the government to which the gentleman then belonged, which sought to terminate the war by allowing the prisoners in our hands to suffer rather than exchange them for confederate soldiers.

Now, I deny, and I defy proof to the contrary, that any unnecessary and unavoidable privations were suffered by the Union prisoners in our hands.

This question has been investigated thoroughly and completely, and although the Federal prisoners might have suffered in our prisons, yet the history that will go down to posterity will show that the confederate government did all in its power for them, and that the fault was with the Federal Government, which would not allow exchange. I might retort upon the gentleman from Pennsylvania by detailing the complaints and sufferings that I have heard from those who were prisoners upon your side, but I will not go into the question. It is not proper that that question should be discussed here. I, for one, came here as the Representative of a district in the Union, and my effort has been to say and do nothing that would stir up the strife of the war, but rather to bring about harmony and conciliation between the sections. I hope that we shall have no more of this kind of debate.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, after this interruption I resume the floor. Instead of being prejudiced against these men, I am strongly attached in their favor.

Mr. HANNA. Is it in order to move that the committee now rise?

Mr. THOMPSON. I have the floor and I decline to yield it.

Mr. VANCE. The motion to rise was made before the gentleman from Pennsylvania had resumed the floor; he had yielded it.

Mr. THOMPSON. I did not yield the floor; I did not intend to yield it and gentlemen may save themselves further trouble by accepting that as a settled fact.

Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman certainly has the floor, and only yielded to me for a few moments.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yielded the floor to the gentleman from Virginia, and I do not think it fair that the gentleman who moved that the committee rise should assume that I yielded it for his selfish purpose.

All honor to the man who amid this wild delusion of secession, which swept the land like a simoon, and covered it with blood and desolation, stood unbent and unshaken as his own pine tree, one among ten thousand, true amid the false, loyal amid the disloyal, faithful among the faithless. His country's flag was his cloud by day, its stars his pillar of fire by night, and the soil beneath its folds hallowed by the glories of the dead and sanctified by the blood of the living. No man in the North withstood such fiery temptations, none encountered such obstacles; but, like the prophet of old, he came out of the fire without its smell on his clothes. Such a man was Richard Heater. He owned a farm but a few miles from this Hall over in Virginia—a rebel State, its citizens generally disloyal to the core.

The Union forces encamped upon his farm, occupied his dwellings, used his timber, fences, &c., for fuel; by order of the commanding officers took his horses and other stock for the use of the Army. Why should he not be paid? Not only this, sir, but in the darkest period of the war this old man sent his only son into the Union ranks to fight for the old flag and, if so willed, to die in its defense. Nor is this all. That boy whom the proud father had hoped would bear his name and inherit his honor fell fighting for his country, thus honoring the father, whose love of country was stronger than for his own son. Then indeed joy fled, and with his son hope fled, and all save life and honor. Wearily the old loyalist dragged on through many years, bowed down with unspoken griefs. At length he found in the grave, by the side of his soldier son, peace and rest.

I regret that gentlemen on the other side manifest a desire to make the Government responsible for the payment of dishonest claims and to draw comparisons in the treatment of prisoners of war unfavorable to the Union Army. I regret that this element—certainly not legitimate in this discussion—has been cast into this debate. I reluctantly take note of it.

The people believe that in the treatment of Union prisoners unnecessary rigor was imposed and cruel treatment inflicted. It will be time to deny that Union prisoners suffered untold cruelties when Libby and Belle Isle are forgotten names, where the dead-line and dead soldier marked the limit of the camp and the soldier's life—time when the people of other lands have learned to read with unblenched cheek the tales of suffering which make Andersonville and Belle Isle the synonyms of heroic endurance.

Why was it that hundreds and thousands of citizens, citizens of the Southern States, men who were entitled to the protection of their country and its flag, why was it that they became refugees and fled into our lines whenever the Union Army approached them; fleeing from their friends, from their homes, and from their country to us, not of choice, not for the purpose of taking arms against their friends, but for the purpose of saving their property, their liberty, and their lives? History has written it and the world knows it, and no sophistry that can be adduced here or elsewhere can wipe out the record which is made so deep that this generation can never forget it even if they would.

Whenever I find the claim of a loyal man from a disloyal State I will vote for it. Here is a case which I believe is of that kind.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. BRAGG. Where did these thousands of refugees rush into the Union lines?

Mr. THOMPSON. From the Southern States, wherever our flag was unfurled, not only hundreds but thousands sought under that flag the protection denied them under the stars and bars. The gentleman himself saw it and knows it; I have seen it, and hundreds of others in this land witnessed it and will not forget what they then saw.

His representatives now come here and make claims for his property taken by the Union Army. And my friends on the other side say to me here unblushingly, and say to the country, that they will not vote to pay a dollar of this claim because it is a war claim.

In fact, they say that they will not pay this claim of a loyal man, because we will not pay the claims of disloyal men. And the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] a few moments ago stated in language clear and unmistakable that he would vote to pay no loyal man and he would vote to pay no disloyal man. And his colleague [Mr. FINLEY] had inadvertently and unwittingly a few moments before given the reason for that. It was because the republican party would laugh at him if he did so. The republican party never laughs at an honest man for performing his duty in a proper manner. Sir, the republican party to-day calls upon the democratic party and especially upon the gentleman from Ohio to forego his timidity about being laughed at by the republican party; to forego his fear about political capital being made of this thing in the next campaign, and to stand up here, not as a republican, not as a democrat, not even as a Representative, but to stand up here as a man and do his duty, and let the result take care of itself. I assure my friend from Ohio that there never has been and never will be a time in the history of this country when a man discharging his duty fearlessly and honestly will be harmed by any party.

Mr. FINLEY. Did I say I was not going to vote for this claim or any other claim?

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think you did.

Mr. FINLEY. Then whom do you mean?

Mr. THOMPSON. I mean you and your colleague, [Mr. MCMAHON.] You said that if you voted for this and like bills the republican party would make capital of it.

Mr. FINLEY. I beg your pardon; I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. THOMPSON. If I am wrong, then doubtless the RECORD is as wildly wrong as I am.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not think you wish to misrepresent me.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not.

Mr. FINLEY. What I did say was that I would not vote for this claim for the reasons I assigned; and that I desired simply to put the republican party on its record.

Mr. THOMPSON. Very well; I accept that amendment. The gentleman says he is going to put the republican party on the record. Sir, he has had the republican party on the record for the last fifteen years. He has the benefit of that record to-day, and he shall have all he can make out of it now or hereafter. Now, I want to call his attention and that of the friends who stood around him to another point. They charge that the republican party has voted a large amount of money to the very men who were their friends, the very men who are now asking protection, the very men whom the law protects and whose claims the law allows. Why? The republican party seeks no advantage which rests on wrong to the citizen or dishonor to the country. It is a powerful party, but it is too noble to do or permit to be done an injury to any man, be he white or black, poor or rich.

Why, has it come to this, Mr. Chairman, that the democratic party is to arrogate to itself the right to sit in judgment upon the republican party and condemn it because it paid, as it was bound to do, whether the democratic party approved or not, such claims as were proved to be legal and valid before the committees of this House and subsequently before the House itself? One gentleman asserts that we have paid $100,000,000 of these claims. What are they? War claims. Is that a reason the republican party is to be censured by gentlemen? Who caused these war claims, who are responsible for this damage, who devastated this country, clothed it in sorrow, and dotted it with graves from one end to the other? Is the republican party to be censured to-day for paying the claims of these men? The next step will be that the republican party will be condemned by the same gentlemen for a liberality far beyond that—a liberality which, as I said a few weeks ago, has no parallel in the annals of any nation on earth—a liberality that pardoned, forgave, and atoned for the crime of a million of men in a single day. Is that liberality also to be charged against the republican party as an offense? Men who had forfeited liberty, property, and life by every law of every civilized nation on earth were pardoned, their lives were spared, their liberty and property protected. And this is to be treasured up against the republican party and given as a reason why it should be watched closely, why no vote should be given which may be taken advantage of by the republican party! Sir, the republican party has been generous, has been liberal and magnanimous; it is and will be so. Wherever right and law point its duty, there it will follow whether political capital is to be made for it or against it.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this is an honest claim, one which ought to be paid, because the claimant whose property was taken was loyal to his country. That is not disputed by any gentleman on this floor. The value of the property taken is not controverted. These two material questions, the only ones that are before the House, are settled by the report of the committee, and no gentleman on this floor disputes their finding. Why should not the claim be paid? Simply and solely because, if paid by a Congress in which the democratic party is in the ascendant, it may be charged to the liberality of the democratic party. I will be glad to charge an act of magnanimity, of justice, and of right to any party and for the benefit of any living man beneath the flag of his country. I know no party, no section, no State when a citizen demands his right from a Government that is bound to recognize and observe it.

I shall vote cheerfully to pay this claim because I believe it is right; and whenever another claim equally well substantiated is presented by any citizen of this Government, North or South, (and in this matter I know neither North nor South,) I will vote to pay it. I assert here once for all that I will vote to pay the honest claim of any loyal man, if it is in my judgment a claim that ought to be paid, whether it redounds to the advantage of the republican or the democratic party; and I doubt not that every member of the republican party on this floor is willing to do the same.

My friend from Virginia turned to and addressed my colleagues on this side; he should have addressed his colleagues on his own side Two gentlemen on that side—the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG]—have announced, as reasons for their votes, reasons which I am happy to say only they have announced, and which I say with all respect ought not to influence any man of the democratic side—reasons which the humblest representative on this side of the House would spurn as unworthy to influence his motives or action in the slightest degree.

I have no controversey with any gentleman because he votes as he pleases. This is his right. But I protest against the declaration which would repudiate the obligations of the Government and wrong the citizens because political capital might thereby be furnished.

Mr. Chairman, I have but little more to say. I desire that this case shall be considered precisely like a case in court—on its merits. If the claim is right, let us pay it; if it is wrong, let it be rejected; but in the name of reason and manhood let no unworthy consideration, as much as has been intimated if not expressed on the other side, be given as a reason why the obligations of the Government should not be observed and its debts recognized and paid. The rights which this old man had while living have to some extent become hallowed by the fact that he has ceased to be. He is not here in person; he is here now by his representatives. In their behalf and in behalf of my country, I ask, not that a claim of questionable policy should be recognized, but that the honor of the country and its obligations shall be met regardless of what the claim is for, by whom it is presented, or from what section of the country it comes. Let us discharge the duty and the debt like honest men regardless of political consequences. When both political parties thus meet and perform their duties, and when gentlemen here cease to regard political consequences so much, it will be better for them and the country. Then will dawn a day of peace and prosperity, and unborn generations will bless their sires who taught these lessons of fidelity to duty whether in the council chambers of the nation or on the field of battle.

Mr. BRIGHT was recognized by the Chairman.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to my colleague from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WHITE.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THOMPSON] has expired.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not rise for the purpose of protracting this unprofitable——

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I believe I have the floor and want to reply to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] who has charged responsibility on the Federal Government for the cruelty to prisoners of war and has demanded instances of cruelty and inhumanity to prisoners held by the confederacy.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have yielded to my colleague.

Mr. BRIGHT. I believe I hold the floor by recognition of the Chair.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I beg pardon; my colleague has yielded to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THOMPSON] had expired.

Mr. BRIGHT. So I understood.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. But I was to be recognized next and the list shows it.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think my time has not expired.

Mr. VANCE. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BRIGHT took the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I submit, Mr. Chairman, I am upon your list. Look at it; is it correct or not?

Mr. BRIGHT. I hold the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I was to be recognized after my colleague, who, as you told me, was a member of the Committee on War Claims and had the preference.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I will yield, of course; I am amenable to parliamentary law, but I am next on the list of the Chair to be recognized in this debate.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not rise for the purpose of discussing this question; I think it has been already exhaustively discussed; but I rise for the purpose of making a request which I think is entirely reasonable on both sides of this House to take a vote.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRIGHT. I cannot yield to any question.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I submit in justice to myself after the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] I should have an opportunity for five or ten minutes to reply to them.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will yield a minute, if that will be satisfactory to the gentleman. [Cries of "Go on!" from the republican side.]

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I have no desire to uncover the unpleasant recollections of the past. I have no desire to march before this Chamber the skeletons in the death-clutch of starvation from Libby, from Andersonville, Salisbury, Charleston, Florence, and elsewhere. [Cries of "Vote!" "Louder!" on the democratic side, and confusion.] I have no desire to present a picture, panorama-like, in this Chamber of those inhuman, hideous scenes of the past to stir up the angry passions of the rebellion. [Cries of "Order!" "Louder!" from the democratic side.] All right, gentlemen. I cannot be cried down. I have a right to be heard.

Mr. CONGER. I demand order.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Gentlemen, you are unwilling to hear the truth. All I ask is fair, patient hearing.

Mr. CONGER. I rise, Mr. Chairman, to demand order.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, (speaking to the democratic side.) You are my peers and I am your peer. You seek to deny me a hearing. I will maintain my right as a member of the American Congress to be heard in behalf of a great public question—to vindicate the truth of history and to defend my Government from an unwarrantable slander.

Mr. EDEN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Virginia, who as an individual I respect, has made the issue and has declared his confederate government while war was rampant treated Union prisoners, so far as concerned issuing rations to them, as they did confederate soldiers during the war in the field. With all deference to the gentleman from Virginia, I deny the statement and make the issue. I will proceed to maintain the issue on my part by citing instances of cruelty, inhumanity, indeed barbarism, for which I hold confederate authorities responsible to history. [Cries of "Order!" "Time's up!" from the democratic side.]

Mr. VANCE. Was the gentleman in the southern army?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Thank Heaven, I was not. I was in the Union Army from the first of the war. The casualties of war threw me into rebel hands as a prisoner of war for sixteen months, and I speak of nothing here except what I know and have seen. I will make no utterance here but what I can substantiate.

It is not for the purpose of lashing into a tempest political passions, but to vindicate history—to vindicate the Federal Government in the conduct of the war against rebellion—when it is charged in my hearing here that the course of our Government in the prosecution of the war was the cause of the ill-treatment which the Union prisoners received from the confederate authorities. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the confederate government in 1863 did not treat southern Union prisoners or supply them with rations as it did its own soldiers. I will now cite the evidence to maintain this position.

Mr. EDEN. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I say Union prisoners from the valley of Virginia, from East Tennessee, and from elsewhere were deliberately starved in rebel prisons, were persecuted because of their Union sentiments, and I will give proof of it. I will cite instances——

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I am going to give some instances

Mr. TURNER. Has not the time expired?

I utter nothing I do not know.

Mr. GLOVER. We have heard them before.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Why not hear them again? Why deny their truth? The gentleman from Virginia defied us to name them.

Mr. BRIGHT. I claim the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. TURNER. Is that side of the House bound by the rules of the House? When the gentleman from Pennsylvania is out of order and the Chair says so must he not take his seat?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I am only giving instances, and when men say the American Government is responsible for the action of the confederate government I say it is false. I say the action of the United States Government was justifiable and the conduct of the confederacy cruel and wicked. [Cries of "Order!" and great confusion on the floor.]

Mr. TURNER. I call for order, and insist upon the Chair maintaining the authority of the House. I wish to know whether that side of the House is bound by the rules.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I am bound by the rules.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Why discuss the war over again?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I will not stand here and hear our Government in its conduct of the war slandered. [Cries of "Order!" "Order!" on democratic side.]

Mr. TURNER. I call for order.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Allow me to proceed without interruption to maintain my assertion, to reply to what has fallen from the lips of the gentleman from Virginia. I will narrate instances of my own knowledge.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I want and have a right to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will take their seats; otherwise the Chairman will direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to enforce order.

Mr. STEELE. Yes, let him take them up and I will help him to do it.

[Confusion existed, and proceedings were suspended until order was restored.]

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to make a suggestion to the committee. It would be unfortunate that the rights of a private citizen of the United States should be submerged and lost forever beneath the fiery billows of debate that have been surging back and forth for the last few hours. I hope the request will be granted; that representatives on both sides will calmly, in view of the demands of justice, and free from the fires of passion, vote dispassionately upon the claim of the private citizen who has laid his claim before this House and asked a deliberate consideration and just verdict to be rendered upon it. I hope, therefore, that the committee will now come to a vote upon this bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. MILLS. Pending that, I move that the committee rise.

The question being taken on the motion that the committee rise, there were—ayes 49, noes 97.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion now pending is the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. EDEN. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will withdraw that motion I will move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House. That will bring the committee to a test vote upon the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that the committee cannot report the bill to the House while amendments are pending.

Mr. EDEN. I understand the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. OLIVER,] who is a member of the committee, desires to speak. I therefore do not insist on my motion that the committee rise.

Mr. BRAGG. As I have the floor and have made my motion I propose to insist upon it. I have not withdrawn my motion to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. OLIVER. That motion is debatable, I believe?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not debatable.

The question being taken on Mr. BRAGG's motion, the Chair announced that in the opinion of the Chair the noes had it.

Several members called for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 71.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot now entertain that motion as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. OLIVER] has been recognized.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope I may be pardoned by the House for attempting to call back their attention for a few moments to the facts in this case, which seem to have been entirely lost sight of in the fierce debate which we have had to-day. It has been the uninterrupted policy of this Government to pay certain claims of loyal citizens; and it has been equally the policy of this Government not to pay other claims. Uniformly the claims of loyal citizens for supplies taken and used by the United States Army have been paid. I think there is no instance to be found, either in the legislative action of this House or anywhere, that those claims have been denied. But the claims for damages arising from and incident to war have been refused almost as uniformly.

Now, what is the character of this claim? It is a claim of a citizen of Virginia, and a loyal citizen of Virginia, shown to be loyal by the most indisputable testimony, a citizen who gave the life of his son to the cause of the Union. That is the character of the claimant. The claim is for supplies taken and used by the Union Army in the State of Maryland.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this claim had been by a citizen of Maryland it would have been paid by the Quartermaster's Department. All the claims of citizens of loyal States for supplies have been paid by that Department; but they were forbidden by law to pay the claims of citizens of disloyal States. If it had been the claim of a citizen of Virginia for property taken in Virginia, it would have been paid by the claims commissioners. They have adjudicated those cases; they have had authority to adjudicate them. They are still acting under that authority, and to-day they are paying one by one the claims of just this class of loyal citizens for property taken in the disloyal States. But the payment of the claim was denied by the Quartermaster's Department because the claimant was a citizen of Virginia, and therefore that Department had no authority to pay it; they were forbidden by law to pay claims of citizens of the disloyal States. The payment of the claim was denied by the Court of Claims because the property was taken in the loyal State of Maryland; and under the provisions of the law constituting the claims commission they were only given jurisdiction to entertain claims for property taken in the disloyal States. It is an isolated case. There is perhaps not another like it in the country. The claimant is denied his rights not because his claim is not just, but merely because there is no tribunal to which he may appeal for its payment, and he therefore comes to Congress.

Now, sir, it has never been the policy of the republican party or of any party in this country to refuse the payment of claims of this kind. They have been recognized as just, as equitable, as binding upon the Government by republican Congresses and by democratic Congresses alike.

What are the reasons that are urged against its payment? Why, the honorable gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] tells us that he was in Virginia during the war and that he did not find any loyal citizens there. He says that he lived there a year and a half.

Now, sir, I am sorry that the bearing and conduct of that honorable gentleman, whom I had supposed, until he denied it to-day upon this floor, was there as an officer and an honorable and distinguished officer in the Federal Army—that his conduct and bearing when down there was such that no single one of those hundreds of Union men whom the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] tells us lived in that county, that he knew resided there, thought proper to make himself known to him and to make him the confidant of his loyalty.

There is another reason urged against the payment of this claim. We are told by two honorable gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON and Mr. FINLEY] that the republican party and republican politicians had been preaching about the danger of southern claims to their constituents.

Sir, it is not southern claims of this kind that we fear; it is those that come up by millions for damages for property injured or destroyed; for the use, occupation, injury, and destruction of churches, of colleges, of school edifices, and of private property. These are the claims that the republican party fears and these are the claims that they are warning the country against the payment of.

Sir, I sympathize with those gentlemen who live in districts where it is necessary to resort to such subterfuges, who live in close districts where they need every vote they can get to return them to Congress, but I submit to those gentlemen, and I submit to the country, that that fact does not warrant them in ignoring the rights of a citizen of the United States, and a loyal citizen and making him an exception. I submit that the argument upon which they rely is, to say the least, a very weak argument, but if the gentlemen are willing to go to their constituents upon it, I am content.

It is not for me to criticise the motives or the action of gentlemen of this House. Every one has a right to fix for himself his own standard of right and of action. But I submit to these gentlemen, and I submit to this House, whether it would not be far nobler and manlier and whether in the long run it would not be far better and wiser to dare to do right.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask now for a vote upon the bill.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. FINLEY. That motion is not in order pending the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion was put and voted down.

The question was taken on Mr. EDEN's motion; and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KNAPP reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report two bills to the House with a recommendation that they be passed.

MARY FEARON AND JESSIE CROSSIN.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole with a favorable recommendation was the bill (H. R. No. 2138) to pay Mary Fearon and Jessie Crossin, executrices of Samuel P. Fearon, deceased, for certain registered United States bonds redeemed by the Government on forged assignments and power of attorney.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRIGHT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RICHARD HEATER.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole favorably was the bill (H. R. No. 2139) making appropriations for the payment to Richard Heater, executor of John Heater, deceased, late of Loudoun County, Virginia, of the sum therein named for value of stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army.

Mr. EDEN. I move the previous question on the engrossment of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. EDEN. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. McMAHON. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The question was taken on Mr. McMAHON's motion; and on a division there were—ayes 49, noes 75.

Mr. McMAHON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and a joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 3987) to regulate the advertising of mail-lettings, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 23) providing for the distribution and sale of the new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

RICHARD HEATER.

The question was taken on Mr. McMAHON's motion; and there were—yeas 61, nays 110, not voting 120; as follows:

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLOAK-ROOM EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. CRAVENS. I offered a resolution this morning in regard to the cloak-room employés. It should have been a joint resolution, and I ask consent that it be made a joint resolution, and passed.

There was no objection, and accordingly the joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) to pay laborers known as the cloak-room men and to place them on the Doorkeeper's roll was read three several times, and passed.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the bill of the House No. 3974, returned from the Senate with amendments, making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes, be now taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and the bill and Senate amendments were accordingly taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPARKS. I ask consent that House bill No. 4549, with Senate amendments, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes, be taken from the Speaker's table, printed with the Senate amendments numbered in their order, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LAKE-FRONT GROUNDS, CHICAGO.

Mr. BICKNELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Private Land Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4046) to authorize the State of Illinois to sell what are known as the lake-front grounds in Chicago, Illinois, and to use the proceeds on the Illinois River improvement instead of on the Illinois and Michigan Canal, as is now required in the grant that was made of said lands by Congress to said State, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DUNNELL. Why should this go to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. BICKNELL. It involves important legal questions which that committee ought to examine. This property is said to belong to the State of Illinois; it is said to belong to the city of Chicago, and it is also said to belong to the General Government. The question ought to be examined by the Judiciary Committee.

There being no objection, the Committee on Private Land Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

On motion of Mr. BICKNELL, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Private Land Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Daniel Hamett and others to be reimbursed for damages sustained in consequence of being driven from their lands in Dakota by the Government; and the same was referred to the Committee of Claims, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE OF SAINT LOUIS,
Saint Louis, May 2, 1878.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the Exchange held this day, the following was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, By the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, that our Senators and Representatives in Congress be earnestly requested to urge the prompt passage of the bill for the repeal of the bankrupt law, and that the same take effect immediately, as a delay to a later date for its enforcement is calculated to keep business prostrate and invite a further demoralization in the trade of the country."

Yours respectfully, GEO. H. MORGAN, Secretary.

Hon. NATHAN COLE.

GEORGE M'DERMOTT.

Mr. STRAIT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 1860) for the relief of George McDermott; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HENRY WOECKNER.

Mr. STRAIT also, by unanimous consent, moved that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 2500) for the relief of Henry Woeckner; and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

CORRECTION OF JOURNAL.

Mr. MAISH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to correct the Journal. On the motion to lay upon the table the bill (H. R. I did not vote when my name was first called, but afterward, and before the roll-call was completed, I asked and obtained permission to vote and did then vote in the affirmative. I ask that the correction be made accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made as indicated.

VENEZUELAN AWARDS.

Mr. HAMILTON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back, as a substitute for House bills Nos. 1069 and 4569, a bill (H. R. No. 4799) in relation to the Venezuelan mixed commission; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed with the accompanying report and recommitted, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

ISSUE OF ARMS.

Mr. FENN. I move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table an act (H. R. No. 3679) to amend a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms, approved July 3, 1876, returned from the Senate with amendments, and to move concurrence in those amendments.

I was present in the House and voted in the affirmative, and ask that the Journal be corrected accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made accordingly.

MORNING HOUR.

Mr. GAUSE. I now demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at thirty minutes past eleven o'clock a. m., and the call of committees for reports still rests with the Committee on Public Lands.

SALE OF TIMBER LANDS.

Mr. WIGGINTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 926) for the sale of timber lands in the States of California and Oregon and in Washington Territory.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair: has not the Committee on Public Lands exhausted its privilege of reporting? It had an hour yesterday and it had one night besides assigned for its business.

The SPEAKER. That was by unanimous consent.

Mr. FRANKLIN. My understanding was that it was in lieu of one of its days.

The SPEAKER. The record does not show that. The record shows the committee had that privilege by unanimous consent. And if equity is to come in, the committee, as a matter of fact, did not have any night.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I certainly understood that that night was in lieu of one of the days allowed under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. But at any rate there were no reports acted upon that night. The gentleman from Missouri will recollect that there was a call of the House.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I do not know that that makes any difference. The same proceeding might occur to-day.

The SPEAKER. This is one of the two hours which under the rule the committee have for making reports.

The bill was read. It provides that surveyed public lands of the United States within the States of California and Oregon and in Washington Territory, not included within military, Indian, or other reservations of the United States, valuable chiefly for timber, but unfit for cultivation, and which have not been offered at public sale according to law, may be sold to citizens of the United States, or persons who have declared their intention to become such, in quantities not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to any one person or association of persons, at the minimum price of $2.50 per acre; and lands valuable chiefly for stone may be sold on the same terms as timber lands; provided that nothing therein contained shall defeat or impair any bona fide claim under any law of the United States, or authorize the sale of any mining claim, or the improvements of any bona fide settler, or lands containing gold, silver, cinnabar, copper, or coal, or lands selected by the said States under any law of the United States donating lands for internal improvements, education, or other purposes; and provided further, that none of the rights conferred by the act approved July 26, 1866, entitled "An act granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over the public lands, and for other purposes," shall be abrogated by the act; and all patents granted shall be subject to any vested and accrued water rights, or rights to ditches and reservoirs used in connection with such water rights as may have been acquired under and by the provisions of said act; and such rights shall be expressly reserved in any patent issued under the act.

It provides in its second section that any person desiring to avail himself of the provisions of the act shall file with the register of the proper district a written statement in duplicate, one of which is to be transmitted to the General Land Office, designating by legal subdivisions the particular tract of land he desires to purchase, setting forth that the same is unfit for cultivation, and valuable chiefly for its timber or stone; that it is uninhabited; contains no mining or other improvements, except for ditch or canal purposes, where any such do exist, save such as were made by or belong to the applicant, nor, as deponent verily believes, any valuable deposit of gold, silver, cinnabar, copper, or coal; that deponent has made no other application under the act; that he does not apply to purchase the same on speculation, but in good faith to appropriate it to his own exclusive use and benefit; and that he has not, directly or indirectly, made any agreement or contract in any way or manner with any person or persons whatsoever, by which the title which he might acquire from the Government of the United States should inure in whole or in part to the benefit of any person except himself; which statement must be verified by the oath of the applicant before the register or the receiver of the land office within the district where the land is situated; and if any person taking such oath shall swear falsely in the premises, he shall be subject to all the pains and penalties of perjury, and shall forfeit the money which he may have paid for said lands, and all right and title to the same; and any grant or conveyance which he may have made, except in the hands of bona fide purchasers, shall be null and void.

It provides in its third section that upon the filing of said statement, as provided in the second section of the act, the register of the land office shall post a notice of such application, embracing a description of the land by legal subdivisions, in his office, for a period of sixty days, and shall furnish the applicant a copy of the same for publication, at the expense of such applicant, in a newspaper published nearest the location of the premises, for a like period of time; and after the expiration of said sixty days, if no adverse claim shall have been filed, the person desiring to purchase shall furnish to the register of the land office satisfactory evidence, first, that said notice of the application prepared by the register as aforesaid was duly published in a newspaper as herein required; secondly, that the land is of the character contemplated in this act, unoccupied and without improvements, other than those excepted, either mining or agricultural, and that it apparently contains no valuable deposits of gold, silver, cinnabar, copper, or coal; and upon payment to the proper officer of the purchase-money of said land, together with the fees of the register and the receiver, as provided for in case of mining claims in the twelfth section of the act approved May 10, 1872, the applicant may be permitted to enter said tract, and, on the transmission to the General Land Office of the papers and testimony in the case, a patent shall issue thereon; provided, that any person having a valid claim to any portion of the land may object, in writing, to the issuance of a patent to lands so held by him, stating the nature of his claim thereto; and evidence shall be taken, and the merits of said objection shall be determined by the officers of the land office, subject to appeal, as in other land cases. Effect shall be given to the foregoing provisions of the act by regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

It provides in its fourth section that after the passage of the act it shall be unlawful to cut, or cause or procure to be cut, or wantonly destroy any timber growing on any lands of the United States in said States and Territories or remove, or cause to be removed, any timber from said public lands, with intent to export or dispose of the same; and no owner, master, or consignee of any vessel, or owner, director, or agent of any railroad shall knowingly transport the same, or any lumber manufactured therefrom; and any person violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be fined for every such offense a sum not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, provided that nothing therein contained shall prevent any miner or agriculturist from clearing his land in the ordinary working of his mining claim, or preparing his farm for tillage, or from taking the timber necessary to support his improvements, or the taking of timber for the use of the United States; and the penalties therein provided shall not take effect until ninety days after the passage of the act.

It provides in its fifth section that any person prosecuted in said States and Territory for violating section 2461 of the Revised Statutes of the United States who is not prosecuted for cutting timber for export from the United States may be relieved from further prosecution and liability therefor upon payment into the court wherein said action is pending of the sum of $2.50 per acre for all lands on which he shall have cut or caused to be cut timber, or removed or cause to be removed the same; provided that nothing contained in the section shall be construed as granting to the person hereby relieved the title to said lands for said payment, but he shall have the right to purchase the same upon the same terms and conditions as other persons, as provided before in the act; and further provided that all moneys collected under the act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States. And section 4751 of the Revised Statutes is thereby repealed so far as it relates to the States and Territory therein named.

The sixth section repeals all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of the act.

Mr. WIGGINTON. This bill was favorably reported by the Committee on the Public Lands of the Forty-fourth Congress. It passed the Senate in the Forty-fourth Congress. It has again passed the Senate and is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Public Lands. I call the previous question.

Mr. WREN. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. WIGGINTON. I yield for the amendment to be offered.

Mr. WREN. I move to amend by inserting the words "and Nevada" in the bill after the word "Oregon" wherever it occurs.

Mr. WIGGINTON. I accept the amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I ask that the amendment may be modified so as to include Colorado also.

Mr. WIGGINTON. Very well. Let the words be added "Nevada and Colorado."

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WIGGINTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The title ought now to be amended.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I move that the title of the bill be amended so as to include the States of Nevada and Colorado.

The motion was agreed to, and the title of the bill was amended accordingly.

SCHOOL LANDS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. GAUSE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 616) granting additional lands to the State of Arkansas for the use of schools.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 36 of each township in the State of Arkansas, and in fractional townships where there is no section 36 then the last entire section in such township, be, and the same is hereby, granted to said State for the use and support of schools, and for no other use or purpose whatever; said land to be disposed of in such manner as the General Assembly of said State has now provided, or may hereafter by law provide, for the support of schools.

SEC. 2. That in all cases where the land hereby granted, or any part thereof, has been heretofore disposed of by the United States, the State of Arkansas, through its commissioner of State lands, or other proper officer designated by the Governor, if there be no such commissioner, may select a like quantity of land in lieu of so much of said land as has been so disposed of by the United States from any other lands of the United States, not mineral, in said State, now remaining undisposed of: Provided, That not more than two of such sections shall be selected in any one township: And provided further, That this act shall not be construed to affect in any manner the Hot Springs reservation.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question.

Mr. THOMPSON. That bill ought to go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDEN. My question is this: do I correctly understand that the State of Arkansas has but a single section in townships for school purposes?

Mr. GAUSE. Yes, sir; only one.

Mr. EDEN. And this is intended to give an additional section for the remainder of the public lands?

Mr. GAUSE. The difficulty is this: all the States which have been admitted into the Union since 1850 have received two sections for school purposes. This only gives to the State of Arkansas one additional section.

Mr. EDEN. Is it the intention of this act to give to the State of Arkansas one additional section of land covering the whole territory of the State or one additional section of what remains of the public lands?

Mr. GAUSE. It is proposed to give one additional section of every township in the State.

Mr. EDEN. So that where townships have been entirely disposed of, the State will be entitled to select enough to make up what it would have had if this right had been reserved to it in the first instance?

Mr. GAUSE. Yes, sir; but so that no more than two sections are located in the same township.

Mr. EDEN. Does that apply as well to cases where lands have been granted for railroads and other improvements?

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the point of order has been made against the bill by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. THOMPSON.]

Mr. GAUSE. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I think the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole. We ought to know what the law is in regard to free schools in that State, and whether it gives equal privileges irrespective of race or color.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist on the point of order?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAUSE. Let me say, in answer to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] that the schools are perfectly free; and since the passage of the act granting the sixteenth section in the State of Arkansas we have now 39,600 colored children in the schools.

Mr. CONGER. Are they mixed schools or colored schools?

Mr. GAUSE. They have mixed or separate schools as each county may select them. Each county has the fund to dispose of at its pleasure.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist upon the point of order?

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the bill ought to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It is a grant of a large quantity of land.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania insists upon the point of order and the Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GAUSE. I withdraw the bill.

HOMESTEADS TO ACTUAL SETTLERS.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with amendments, a bill (H. R. No. 110) supplemental to an act entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," approved May 20, 1862, and moved that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Is that a report from the majority of the committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised on that subject.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I want to know whether the majority of the committee favored that bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have been waiting six months with that bill in my desk for an opportunity to report it, and I only ask that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It was unanimously agreed by the committee that it should be reported to the House for its action.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. It was agreed to report it to the House without recommendation.

Mr. WRIGHT. For the action of the House.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. Yes.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

LANDS IN THE TERRITORY OF UTAH.

Mr. GAUSE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 775) for the restoration to market of certain lands in the Territory of Utah.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the act of Congress approved May 5, 1864, and entitled "An act to vacate and sell the present Indian reservation in Utah Territory, and to settle Indians of said Territory in the Uinta Valley," as directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be appraised and offer for sale upon sealed bids the reservations therein referred to, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to restore the same to the public domain for disposition as other public lands.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to ask why these lands are not offered for public sale, as the law requires, and what is the object of withdrawing them from under the operation of the law?

Mr. GAUSE. I will have read the letters, which I send to the Clerk's desk, which will explain this matter. These lands were included in an Indian reservation and were withdrawn from the operation of the law.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1876.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 26th ultimo, inclosing a bill (S. No. 425) introduced by Senator Buckingham into the Senate at the last Congress, entitled "A bill for the restoration to market of certain lands in the Territory of Utah," and papers connected with the subject matter.

It appears that this bill was drawn up in the Office of Indian Affairs, and that before it was introduced into the Senate it received the approval of the Commissioner of that office and the Secretary of the Interior. Its provides for the restoration of the lands in question to the public domain for disposition as other public lands. This would bring the lands under the operation of the pre-emption and homestead laws for the benefit of actual settlers thereon, and under the operation of the town-site laws. It seems, therefore, to be broad enough for the purposes you have in view, and in the opinion of this office it ought to be passed.

I return the papers you inclosed, and send also copies of my general circular of June 17, 1875, showing the rights of actual settlers under the pre-emption and homestead laws, and circular of September 21 1868, relating to town sites on the public lands.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. K. LIPPINCOTT,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. GEO. Q. CANNON,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1878.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive a letter from Messrs. SMITH, GAUSE, and Pacheco, of your committee, dated the 23d instant, relative to H. R. No. 775, entitled "A bill for the restoration to market of certain lands in the Territory of Utah," the object of which "seems to be to take the several Indian reservations or lands occupied as such in the Territory of Utah from the operation of the act approved May 5, 1864, and to restore the same to the public domain for disposition as other public lands."

They ask for an expression of my "opinion as to the necessity, the propriety, and practicability of making the change desired," and also for a statement of "the number of acres contained in said lands, the number and names of the several reservations."

The lands referred to are embraced in four several tracts, which, it appears, were never formally reserved for Indian purposes by any treaty or executive order, but were established as reservations by the local Indian agent with the consent and approval of the Indian Office about 1855 or 1856, before the pre-emption, homestead, and other laws for the disposal of the public lands were extended to Utah Territory. They are known as the Spanish Fork reservation containing 11,253 acres; the Corn Creek reservation containing 62,664 acres; the Deep Creek reservation containing 30,000 acres, and the San Pete reservation containing 65,973 acres; the aggregate contents thereof being 169,899 acres.

The act of May 5, 1864, statutes, volume 13, page 63, provided for locating elsewhere the Indians who had used these lands, for surveying and appraising the lands, and for selling them, at not less than the appraised value, on sealed bids, as therein prescribed. The provisions of the act for locating the Indians elsewhere and for surveying the lands have been carried into effect. The lands embraced in the Spanish Fork reservation were appraised in 1866; those in the Corn Creek reservation in 1869. The other two reservations have not yet been appraised.

The proceedings mentioned were taken under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the lands in question not having been transferred to the jurisdiction of this office until 1872. At the time the lands in the Spanish Fork reservation were appraised in 1866, the public-land laws generally were not operative in Utah Territory, and it was thought they would command a higher price from the fact that there were no other lands in the Territory title to which could be acquired from the United States. The appraisement of the Corn Creek reservation was made not long after the passage of the act of July 13, 1868, providing for the disposal of the public lands in the Territory, and since then they have been open to disposal under the pre-emption and homestead laws. The valuation of the lands in the two reservations as then made averages about $1.35 per acre, a trifle over the ordinary minimum price of the public lands. It appears that a portion of the lands is occupied by the villages of Meadow Creek and Petersburgh, and other portions by settlers who claim that they went on the land without knowledge that it was in a state of reservation.

Since the appraisement of the Spanish Fork and Corn Creek reservations as before mentioned, no further proceedings have been taken for the sale of the lands. There is no appropriation within the control of this office applicable to paying the expense of completing the appraisement and selling these lands under the act of 1864. If it is concluded to hold them for disposal according to the provisions of that act an appropriation will be necessary to meet these expenses.

The said bill is substantially the same with one which received the approval of this office, as expressed in a letter addressed to the Hon. GEORGE Q. CANNON, of the House of Representatives, under date of the 8th February, 1876, a copy of which is herewith submitted.

I am of opinion that under existing circumstances it would not be profitable to the public Treasury to proceed with the disposal of these lands in the manner prescribed in the act of May 5, 1864, and that the change proposed in bill No. 775 is necessary, practicable, and proper, in view of all the interests concerned. I therefore recommend the passage of the same.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. WILLIAMSON, Commissioner.

Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

Mr. GAUSE. I demand the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. Is that bill subject to a point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. In what respect would it be subject to a point of order? It proposes merely a withdrawal of lands from public sale.

Mr. CONGER. It has another provision which provides for the disposition of these lands under the tree-culture law.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. I will say to the gentleman that a bill precisely similar to this passed last Congress and only failed to pass the Senate for want of time.

Mr. CONGER. One of those recommendations which have been read is from a man whose complications in land matters would not make his recommendation of any great weight now.

The SPEAKER. The clause the gentleman refers to takes these lands out of the category of lands for sale under a particular act and throws them in common with all the other lands in the United States, but it does not dispose of them.

Mr. GAUSE. The only difference it makes is this, that these lands at the present time are directed to be sold at private sale under sealed bids upon an appraisal of $1.35 per acre. This bill allows them to go into the general market the same as other public lands.

Mr. CONGER. It changes the law in this respect: public lands of this class are first offered for sale at public auction and then subject to private entry, and it would of course affect the revenue derived from them as it disposes of that amount of revenue. It seems that these lands were appraised at $1.35 an acre and now if they are entered at $1.25 an acre there is a loss of so much of the appraised value provided for by law. I do not however make that point, but it seems to me that the recommendation of this bill by one who has been connected with the improper use of land warrants does not commend it to the House.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. The bill was introduced in the Senate in the first instance by Senator Buckingham on the recommendation of the Indian Department.

Mr. CONGER. I would ask if there is not attached to this bill a provision in relation to tree culture.

The SPEAKER. There is no clause of that kind in the bill.

Mr. WIGGINTON. That is in another bill.

Mr. CONGER. Then I do not make the point of order on it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GAUSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRE-EMPTION LAWS.

Mr. WELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3373) for the relief of settlers on the public lands under the pre-emption laws.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

That any person who has made a settlement on the public lands under the pre-emption laws, and has, subsequent to such settlement, changed his filing in pursuance of law to that for a homestead entry upon the same tract of land, shall be entitled to have the time required to perfect his title under the homestead laws computed from the date of his original settlement heretofore made, or hereafter to be made, under the pre-emption laws, subject to all the provisions of the law relating to homesteads.

Mr. WELCH. As there is no report in this case I desire to say that the Forty-fourth Congress passed a bill of a similar nature which allows to a settler who had taken pre-emptions and had lived upon his lands for a certain time a settlement on homestead if he changed his pre-emption right into a homestead entry, but the Commissioner of the General Land Office has made such rulings that that law only applied to changes made after the passage of that law. This is a bill to enable settlers to do the same thing if they had made their entry prior to the passage of the law.

I move the previous question.
